Mr. HARRIS. I said that it could be spent to enforce the law at the present time, but I do not believe that amount could be spent within the next year without some extravagance, as it would take time to organize a much larger force. I think that if we would give them $25,000,000 this year, and perhaps $50,000,000 the next year, we could stamp out most of the trouble.

The information I get about the nonenforcement of the law is from the appointees of the Secretary of the Treasury from several States, who tell me that it is not enforced because they have not enough field agents. Mr. Mellon's appointees tell me that in my State, and they tell me that in other States and I believe that is the reason for nonenforcement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am glad to have one frank statement in regard to this matter, because I have heard it asserted on this floor many times that the enforcement is a success. The Senator has cleared the matter up.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the Senator information as to how many field men are actually employed by the Prohibition Department throughout the country?

Mr. HARRIS. I have that, and I will place it in the RECORD. There are 30 in the State of Georgia, 34 in Florida, and 7, I believe, in Arizona. I will place the whole list in the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the list show how many there are in Kentucky?

Mr. HARRIS. This does not show the number in Kentucky. It is given here by districts; and a district may cover more than one State, as in the case of Georgia and Florida, which are in the same district. We can not get complete information except by having them report just how many are employed in one State.

Mr. BARKLEY. My observation has been that on the average each one of these field agents has to cover several counties not only in investigation but in making arrests, and it would be ridiculous if a sheriff, in the attempt to enforce any other law, has to cover by himself a large number of counties. It seems that the same situation that would require a smaller territory to be covered by each individual agent ought to apply to this law, as it does to all others.

Mr. HARRIS. I should think so. I stated that there are now 30 agents for 161 counties in Georgia; and 30 agents are really needed in the five large cities in my State.

Mr. HAYDEN and Mr. BRUCE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHORTRIDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. I can give the Senator from Kentucky the information he seeks. It is found on page 188 of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1928. It shows that there are 339 permanent and 7 temporary employees on the rolls of the Bureau of Prohibition at Washington and 4,057 permanent and 85 temporary employees in the field service, making a total of 4,396 permanent and 92 temporary employees on the rolls as of June 30, 1928.

The personnel on June 30, 1927, consisted of 4,269 permanent and 17 temporary employees.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I may inquire, those figures, of course, include clerical assistants and office help in all the offices throughout the country. What I was seeking to arrive at was the actual number of men whose duty it is to go out throughout the country for the purpose of searching out violations of this law, making arrests, and securing evidence upon which convictions may be had.

Mr. HAYDEN. As the Senator from Georgia very well pointed out, the overhead expenses will not be increased by the adoption of this amendment; the bulk of the money would go into this enforcement work.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator, however, is not taking account of the fact that all these States have State enforcement statutes and police agencies of one sort or another that are cooperating with the Federal field agents for the purpose of repressing violations of the Volstead Act. Is not that a fact?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, it is hardly correct to say that all of the States have enforcement statutes.

Mr. BRUCE. All the Senator mentioned.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think the Senator's own State has.

Mr. BRUCE. No; it has not, I am glad to say.

Mr. WHEELER. The State of Montana has not.

Mr. BRUCE. The State of Montana has not, I am glad to say. The State of New York has not, I am glad to say.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. I know the Senator did not yield to me for that, but I ask the Senator whether the States he mentioned—I am not speaking of all the 48 States of the Union, but all the States he mentioned as having a deficient Federal prohibition field forces—have not State enforcement statutes and a corps of State police agents who are cooperating with the Federal prohibition force for the purpose of keeping down bootlegging?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, that is quite true; but for many years the people have become accustomed to the Federal Government taking charge of the enforcement of the prohibition law, and they expect the Federal Government to continue. May I ask the Senator from Maryland whether this law is enforced in his State?

Mr. BRUCE. The Federal prohibition law?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. With the utmost rigor. We have two honorable upright judges, who deem it to be their duty, as they should, to enforce this law without fear or favor; and we have there a most active, energetic prohibition agent, Colonel Herbert, who was imported from Massachusetts for the very purpose of enforcing the prohibition law as vigorously as possible, and he has made intensive raid after raid in the city of Baltimore since he has been there, only with the result that last year there were more deaths from alcoholism in that city than there were the year before.

Mr. HARRIS. How many enforcement field men are there in the Senator's State?

Mr. BRUCE. I could not tell the Senator how many there are; but I know that intensive raids have been carried on there, and that, in his desire to enforce the law, Colonel Herbert has brought any number of field agents from the outside, imported them from other States, fearing, of course, that our own people might to some extent be too deeply biased against prohibition to furnish just the proper sort of police officers for the purposes of enforcement.

Mr. HARRIS. My information is that a man can buy whisky in Washington without any difficulty; but if he does not want to buy whisky in the city of Washington, there is no trouble getting it in Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. Or anywhere else; because General Andrews said, the Senator will recollect, that bootlegging was absolutely coextensive with the entire territory of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield with pleasure to my good friend the able Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would like to put into the RECORD a telegram from the judge of the middle district of North Carolina, and also an interesting letter from the enforcement officer in my State, which bear out the Senator in what he stated as to the law enforcement.

Mr. HARRIS. Let them be read. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina how long that judge has been on the bench and by whom he was appointed?

Mr. OVERMAN. He was appointed by President Coolidge, and he has been on the bench about two years. In the letter the enforcement agent says he has in his district 26 counties and 10 agents, and that if he had an agent for every county the law would be enforced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

GREENSBORO, N. C., January 13, 1929.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

Trust you will use your influence to secure passage of the Harris prohibition appropriation. This amount should treble the present number of agents. In my opinion this is wise legislation and will meet the necessities in rural communities such as our district.

JOHN J. HAYES,
United States Judge.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now read the letter from the enforcement officer.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES PROHIBITION SERVICE,
Greensboro, N. C., January 15, 1929.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This is following up my telegram of even date urging you to support the Harris bill asking for $25,000,000 increase for the purpose of enforcing the national prohibition act. In order to have more effective enforcement we must have more prohibition agents, and this is impossible unless we have more money. We have only 10 agents for the middle district of North Carolina, which is composed of 26 counties. If we had an average of one agent to each county in this district we could give the people real effective enforcement. The people in North Carolina are very anxious that the appropriation for the enforcement of prohibition be increased.

Very truly yours,

J. L. OSTEEN,
Deputy Administrator.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I do not believe there is a Federal judge in the United States, unless it is in Maryland, who would differ from the statements made by the North Carolina judge. Nor do I believe there is a prohibition-enforcement officer in the United States who would differ from the statement made by the North Carolina enforcement officer.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask the Senator not to cast any reflection upon the most upright, conscientious, and faithful judges we have, who are doing everything in their power to enforce the Volstead Act. Some Senators present know—the Senator from Nebraska certainly knows—that I myself was perhaps the most active spirit in this body in procuring another Federal judge for the State of Maryland for the very purpose of relieving the frightful congestion that has been taking place in the dockets of the Federal courts because of the heaped-up prohibition cases. Our officials in Maryland, of high and low degree, are doing the very best they can to enforce this law, and as strongly as I am opposed to the law I would not like to see any aspersions of any kind cast on the conduct of any one of them so far as fidelity to their sworn duty is concerned.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I will make the statement a little broader and not except the State of Maryland. I do not believe there is a United States judge—not one in this country—who would not say that there are more men needed in the field to enforce this law. I will not even make an exception, although I meant no reflection on the State of Maryland. The Senator from Maryland had suggested what splendid judges they had and how energetic they had been in enforcing the law. That is the reason I made the exception.

Mr. President, by request of a Member of the Senate, I ask to have placed in the RECORD a letter from Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, containing extracts from letters of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the prohibition law in his State, showing that he has not in any way tried to help to remedy the law and its nonenforcement in that State.

I stated that the bootlegger is worse than the barroom, because there are fifty times as many of them. I ask that the clerk read the letter.

Mr. NORRIS. Before that is done, let me ask the Senator a question about the letter of Governor Pinchot.

Mr. HARRIS. I will be glad to have the Senator ask me a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I have read the letter; at least Mr. Pinchot has written a long letter in regard to the enforcement of prohibition in Pennsylvania, which I have read. Perhaps it is the same one. If it is, I would like to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact, as I remember it, that it is not so much a complaint that more enforcement officers are needed as it is a demand that the right kind of enforcement officers be appointed. It is a complaint against the officials, stating that they have not backed up the men who are already engaged in the business, and in some cases have appointed the wrong kind of men. Is not that true of Governor Pinchot's letter?

Mr. HARRIS. That may be true, but, beyond that, Governor Pinchot, who was Governor of Pennsylvania, Secretary Mellon's home State, asked the Secretary of the Treasury to help him when the legislature of his State was considering strengthening the enforcement of prohibition laws. He asked Secretary Mellon to aid him in the matter, and claims that Secretary Mellon declined to take any part in it, and quotes Secretary Mellon's letters declining to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no question involved, then, about having enough men to do the work, but what he was complaining about was that they did not do the work; that the men who were appointed were not the right kind of men; that men who had been arrested had been relieved from punishment; and even prosecution, by other officials, perhaps by Secretary Mellon himself, or at least coming from his own office, where proceedings were nolled, and where prosecutions were not carried on in good faith. All that goes to a very important point in this matter, which I would like to have the Senator and others discuss.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that Mrs. Willebrandt—we have heard of her—testified that in Pennsylvania they absolutely nullified a prosecution for conspiracy to sell liquor in violation of the prohibition law?

Mr. NORRIS. I think that particular case was referred to in the letter; at least it was in the letter I read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the letter be read.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be glad to have the letter read.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if it be true that the Secretary of the Treasury has appointed the wrong sort of men to enforce this law and has refused to lend his assistance to the States in the enforcement of it, should not that have some bearing on the weight which the Senate will give his letter in regard to the appropriation being sought?

Mr. NORRIS. I could not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that is the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the enforcement of this law, is it not pertinent——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. There are so many interruptions all around that I can not hear what the Senator is saying. He is asking me a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please observe the rule of the Senate. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRIS. I have yielded to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will yield to the Senator from Kentucky, so that he may ask me the question he is trying to propound, and which I have not been able to hear.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the able Senator from Kentucky, who is author of some of the prohibition laws.

Mr. BARKLEY. If it is true that the Secretary of Treasury has appointed the wrong sort of men to enforce the prohibition law and has refused to aid the State governments in their efforts to enforce it, ought not that situation to be considered in determining how much weight his present opposition to the appropriation ought to be given by the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; I think so. My own idea is that if it be true that they are not appointing the right kind of men and will not give them the right kind of backing, if they are making a farce of prosecutions, as referred to by the Senator from Arkansas and the testimony of Mrs. Willebrandt, to my way of looking at it that would be an argument against giving to the Secretary of the Treasury additional money. If he has not properly used the funds already given to him, the money he has already had, why give him more?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I merely desire to observe that if we may think the Secretary is that sort of official, if he has appointed either corrupt or inefficient agents, why should we let him expend $25,000,000 more from the Public Treasury in that very sort of thing?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the very question I was raising.

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps I may say without any impropriety that very likely my vote in the committee decided the question of recommending the appropriation. It was ordered by a vote of six to five; but if anyone can convince me that the Secretary of the Treasury is consciously—or unconsciously, for that matter—appointing corrupt and ineffective agents to enforce the law, I am not going to vote to give him another dollar.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me further——

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think on this point we ought to have the testimony of Mrs. Willebrandt. The testimony is on record. I do not have it here, but it has been referred to in the debate. I think it is referred to in the letter of Governor Pinchot. I may be mistaken about that. I think the letter also will refer us to an instance where prominent men were not properly prosecuted—at least the charge is made. I do not know anything about the facts. I would like to have the letter read.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask that the letter be read at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before the letter is read?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is one proposition which it seems to me Senators have overlooked. There is to be a change in administration on the 4th of March. Of course, it is doubtful that the present Secretary of the Treasury, who some say has been derelict in his duty, will be reappointed. This $25,000,000 is to be added to the $13,000,000 that is to be used in the enforcement of prohibition until July 1, 1930, giving nearly a year and a half for the new Secretary of the Treasury to use the money. If the evidence shows that the present Secretary of the Treasury has been derelict, centainly the President elect would not appoint such a man as his Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. It so happens that in the judgment of the Senate we put all of these agents of the Government under civil service. The Civil Service Commission started by examining them and for some reason passing them by until finally many of the States had no one who had passed the examination. Of course, the Senator from Georgia can answer for his own State, but I know that in the Western States, in any number of them, not a man was left who had not been told that he did not pass the first examination.

Mr. HARRIS. The appointees from my State are more intelligent and they nearly all stood the examination.

Mr. WARREN. I am not willing to admit anything of that kind.

Mr. HARRIS. But who appointed them?

Mr. WARREN. It has become perfectly evident that somewhere, somehow, either they are all bad agents or this examination has not turned them out fast enough in order to use the money that is there now for paying the agents and for conducting the business as well as, or better, perhaps, than in an earlier time. For instance, the State which I in part represent had a man who everybody presumed was able, efficient, and honest. An assistant took his place and he was passed by on the first examination. An assistant also had a good record, but he too was passed by on the first examination. He took a second examination and was passed by again, and since then has been ordered to an adjoining State. The same thing happened in Colorado.

Without intending any attack upon the civil-service system I may say that that has been one of the reasons why we are so short in agents to properly spend the money we are appropriating. Aside from all the points we have been discussing there is the business side of it, and that is the only side I represent here. It is a question whether we are going to appropriate and give unwilling agents an amount of money to expend when we ourselves have undertaken to put those agents under civil-service examination, which procedure, it would seem, results in the selection of only about one out of a dozen applicants.

The Senator from Georgia knows, and I think the Senate knows, that I have always stood by every proposition to extend help and appropriate money for the enforcement of this law—with the one exception of $270,000,000 recently, which I thought then, and am forced now to think, was an improvident proposal.

Mr. HARRIS. May I interrupt the Senator at that point? Of course, those who voted for the Bruce amendment had no idea that the $270,000,000 item would be agreed to in conference, but we did think and hope that a reasonable sum would be agreed on in conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator, who has no doubt read what Mrs. Willebrandt said about it, what the Prohibition Commissioner said about it before any of the committees?

Mr. HARRIS. He said before the committee that it would take ten times as much money as we are asking for.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again to me?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have just been informed that the letter of Governor Pinchot, which will soon be read, does not refer to Mrs. Willebrandt's testimony, but the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] has just told me that he has sent for her testimony. I have read the testimony myself. The placing of the appointment of enforcement officers under the civil service law does not relieve the situation, so far as the point made by Mrs. Willebrandt in her testimony is concerned. In that case the prosecuting officer was to blame. A conspiracy was permitted to go by default because of a lack of the right kind of prosecution, as I think it was testified. I would like to have that testimony of Mrs. Willebrandt read.

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask that it be read when the Senator from Arkansas gets it.

Of course, if the Civil Service Commission would hold more examinations they could get more men for the work. They might get a few Democrats under the civil-service examination, but they could at least get more men. The men in my State appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury for this work have told me that they need more men and could get more men if they could get more money.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In my judgment we will never have a competent force if we keep upon the statute book the law putting them under the civil-service provisions. I think we made a very serious mistake in doing it. We can hold the examinations and fill the States with that class of men, but we will never have enforcement.

Mr. NORRIS. On the other hand, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that we enacted that law because of dissatisfaction that was perfectly apparent under the other plan, which was not under civil service. If we made a mistake it was because we jumped out of the frying pan into the fire.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I will say in response to what the Senator from Nebraska has just remarked that when these appointments were made under the old system, out of a force of about 3,000 field agents some 875 were dismissed from the prohibition service either for violations of the Volstead Act or rascality in some form or other. So I think it is hardly fair for the Senator from Idaho, certainly this quickly, to pass the censure that he does on the new system of appointments originated under the new law, when the results under the old system of appointments are duly taken into account.

The facts that I am stating are derived from the testimony of Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews before the Senate subcommittee on prohibition in 1926. It was those revelations that led to the Cramton bill and the determination of public sentiment that the prohibition field agents should be selected under a competitive system of examination. The Senator is aware, of course, that when the competitive examinations took place 75 per cent of the field prohibition agents who were appointed under the old system, appointed mainly at the suggestion, of course, of churches, the Anti-Saloon League, and agencies of that sort, failed to pass the examination.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but that is no reflection upon the men.

Mr. BRUCE. I think it is.

Mr. BORAH. I think they were incompetent in all probability, but if they had been competent they would have just as likely failed to pass the examination.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator, of course, is an inveterate friend of the old spoils system of patronage——

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no!

Mr. BRUCE. And is opposed to the merit system of appointment.

Mr. BORAH. In some lines of governmental activities I am thoroughly in favor of the civil-service system, but I do not believe it is applicable to this situation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I can appreciate the difficulty of getting men through the civil service, and I understand that situation, but I have had dozens of applications from my State for positions as prohibition enforcement officers. I have not tried to influence the officers in the matter of these appointments, but I have had a great number of applications for positions in this work, and have referred them to the Civil Service Commission for information relative to examinations for these appointments.

Mr. REED of Missouri and Mr. FESS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRIS. I will yield first to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Nebraska said it seemed that we had jumped out of the frying pan into the fire. I am wondering if he wants us to jump back into the frying pan again or if he has in mind some other receptacle?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I am not behind any proposition. I will say that I do not know yet how I am going to vote on this particular amendment.

I would like to see a fair, honest attempt made to enforce the prohibition law. So far as I am concerned I am not willing to repeal it now until I am convinced that a fair, honest attempt at enforcement has been made and failed. Then I shall be willing to talk about it. If it can not be enforced, I do not want it. But in the way the matter has been handled, it seems to me, the old method of appointment was unsatisfactory. I know it was said in this particular line there would be a great chance for dishonest men to be appointed, because there is money in it—"there are millions in it."

I was amazed at a letter that was published a couple of years ago by a then Senator from Oklahoma complaining that in his State enforcement officers had been appointed without consulting him, and calling attention to the fact that he was a candidate for office and that he wanted himself to name them, to get his friends on the enforcement force so they could help him be reelected. That was a pretty blunt statement of it, but it brought out a condition that more or less existed under cover in a great many places in the United States. It was a deplorable condition, it seemed to me, if we really want an honest enforcement of the prohibition law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will speak in my own time later on this subject, but I want to call the attention of the Senate at this particular time to the fact that, in my opinion, we are going at this question in just the opposite way that we should. We do not need an appropriation of $25,000,000 for the purpose for which it is sought to be appropriated. At this time there are pending in the courts over 9,000 cases which are undisposed of. What we ought to do is to provide more courts so that they can dispose of the cases pending before them and not let them drag on for years and years. If we had a sufficient number of courts to enforce the law and handle the cases which are now pending, I would be perfectly willing to vote an appropriation of $25,000,000 or $50,000,000, or more if necessary; but what is the use of appropriating $25,000,000 to bring more cases into the courts which can not be handled?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, would the Senator from Utah vote for this appropriation if it were left to the President to allocate it between the Department of Justice and the other departments?

Mr. SMOOT. Allocate it for what purpose?

Mr. HARRIS. For the enforcement of prohibition. The Senator is complaining that the Department of Justice has not money enough to take care of the cases now pending in the courts and this would furnish additional money.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the department has not; there is not any doubt about that, because it is reported to me from the department that there are now over 9,000 cases, which have been pending, in some instances, for four or five years. There are not sufficient courts to handle them, and this $25,000,000 will only pile up more cases for the present courts to consider, which they are not able to do. If we want to get at a solution of this problem, the proper thing to do is to give the Department of Justice additional help in the shape of more courts, if you please, and have the cases considered and decided by the courts as they are filed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia pardon me an interruption?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the testimony of the former district attorney of New York, Mr. Buckner, who made a very strenuous effort to enforce the law. Before the committee of which I was a member he said about two years ago that in order to enforce the law in the State of New York they would need 85 additional Federal courts. I think he also stated that they would need 1,500 enforcement officers in that State. I merely wanted the Senator to understand the number of additional courts which would have to be created.

Mr. SMOOT. I have read the testimony, but I can not for the life of me see now why we should want to appropriate $25,000,000 and pile up cases which the courts have no way of disposing of. That is where we ought to begin; I am perfectly willing to begin to use the $25,000,000 for that purpose if necessary; but, in my judgment, it would be an absolute waste of money and time and energy on the part of all connected with the problem to appropriate $25,000,000 only to pile up the cases which can not be heard for, perhaps, the next 10 years.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the first Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, this alibi about the courts not having time to consider the cases does not appeal to me. Anybody who does not want to enforce the law can always say that there is something wrong with the machinery of enforcement.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to have the law enforced.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator believes it will take that many courts to enforce the law, he will never see the law enforced.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say it would take that many.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator was making the statement that additional courts were needed. I think, however, the Senator knows that is an alibi; he knows when any official comes before Congress and says that if he had 500 more enforcement officers or 85 more courts he could enforce the law, the truth of the matter is that he has not tried to enforce the law, but he say, "I want you to give me an acquittal because I did not have the necessary instrumentalities from the Government; there were not the necessary number of Federal courts." Every Senator here who has ever practiced law knows that that sort of a statement is absolutely beyond any common sense; he knows it is not true; it is ridiculous. Whether we are going to enforce the law or not enforce the law, let us be perfectly candid about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say there are sufficient courts to enforce the law?

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely so.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, then, is the only man I have ever heard say so.

Mr. CARAWAY. That makes no difference. The Senator has talked to nobody who wanted to enforce the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator from Arkansas has.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have; and I know the law can be enforced; but I know it can not be enforced as long as those charged with the duty of enforcement continually furnish alibis and say, "If we do not enforce the law, you will have to excuse us, because we have not sufficient agents with which to enforce it."

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. I have yielded to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BRUCE. I was going to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will be glad to have the Senator from Maryland do so, if the Senator from Georgia will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Utah and of other Senators to the fact that while there may be congestion, and probably is in the State of New York, that does not apply to the remainder of the country. In the State of Alabama we have three judges, none of whom work even approximately, perhaps, half the time. One of those judges goes all over the country, including the State of New York, to hold court. We do not need additional judges in Alabama, but we do need additional prohibition enforcement officers.

I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that it does not make any difference where we start, but let us start, and let us begin at the place where it is needed. If the present Secretary of the Treasury will not enforce the law, if he be reappointed, then the Senate and the House of Representatives have the right to take enforcement out of his hands. There is no reason to attempt to conceal our action or our desires behind the Secretary of the Treasury, whoever he may be.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. May I make one statement apropos of something that was said by the Senator from Arkansas? I presume the attention of the Senator from Arkansas has been called to the fact that only a month or so ago Mr. Doran, the Commissioner of Prohibition, when it was suggested that an additional force of prohibition field agents might be given to him, said that he did not want any more; he said, "We are making more arrests now than the courts can take care of." That was the statement of Mr. Doran, the Prohibition Commissioner.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is not so in my State. I will reinforce what the Senator from Alabama has said. The new judge in North Carolina has cleared his docket, and he has enforced the law in his district. The new judge has a real idea about doing his duty.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, if we had more officers there would be fewer violations of the law as the people would pay more attention to the law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me to ask the Senator from Alabama a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Merely for my own information, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if his State has a State prohibitory law?

Mr. BLACK. It has.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And that law makes it the duty of all the police and the constabulary of the State to enforce the law?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I suppose that all together there are several thousand such officers?

Mr. BLACK. I can not say as to the exact number.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Well, there are several large cities and a considerable police force within those cities?

Mr. BLACK. That is true.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And there are sheriffs, marshals, and their deputies throughout the State?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Those officers all take an oath to enforce this law the same as other officers?

Mr. BLACK. Just as we take an oath in the Senate to provide sufficiently appropriations to enforce the law?

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; we do not take an oath of that kind.

Mr. BLACK. Well, to enforce the Constitution of the United States, which demands sufficient appropriations to enforce the law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Are those officers, speaking generaliy, in the State of Alabama performing their duty or are they shirking or neglecting it?

Mr. BLACK. My judgment is that most of them are performing their duty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So we then find the situation that there are already several thousand—at least several hundred—faithful men trying to enforce the prohibition law in the State of Alabama?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yet there are some stills down there?

Mr. BLACK. Oh, yes; there are some stills, and there are some people who steal, and there are some people who commit other crimes, just as there are in Washington.

Mr. REED of Missouri. There are always some people who steal.

Mr. BLACK. Yes, sir; and some who drink and violate the prohibition law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think that the prohibitory law has been successfully enforced in the State of Alabama in the same way that we say a criminal statute has been enforced?

Mr. BLACK. My judgment is that the prohibition law in Alabama has been far more successfully enforced than have many other laws that are on the statute books. That judgment comes from a practical experience in the enforcement of the law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If that is the case, if Alabama is in that happy situation, there is hardly any need for additional help from the Federal Government in that State?

Mr. BLACK. That might be the conclusion the Senator would reach.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Would not that seem to be logical?

Mr. BLACK. No, sir. We desire to enforce the law in Alabama and we have tried to do it. It is my judgment that from 75 to 80 per cent of the people would vote for the continuation of the law and its enforcement. The idea that because we desire a more rigid enforcement we are thereby doing something that is wrong does not at all follow.

We desire a more rigid enforcement of all law where it is violated; we desire a more rigid enforcement of the law against burglary, and there are many burglaries committed in the State; but we take the position that when the integrity and honor of the United States Government are challenged, when Senators in this body say that the enforcement of the law is a farce, and that that condition is bringing about disrespect for other laws, there is a common meeting ground for every man, whether he believes that the law is right or wrong. We take the position that whatever funds are needed to enforce it, it is the duty of every Senator, whether he is for the law or against the law, to vote to appropriate those funds.

We do not claim that the law with reference to liquor is perfectly enforced in Alabama; we do not claim that the law is perfectly enforced with reference to any other crime on the statute books; but we do claim that every good, honest, patriotic citizen of this country should be in favor of an enforcement of every law, especially where it is written in the Constitution of the United States. Therefore we do not conceal our action, nor do we attempt, as the Senator from Arkansas said, to find an alibi for failure, under one method or another method.

We are ready to create additional courts where needed. We in Alabama do not need them. We are ready to have additional enforcement officers where needed, and we believe that practically every State of the Union needs them. We believe in taking out of the hands of a man who is not for the enforcement of the law, and who does not attempt to enforce it, the right to enforce the law, if such be the case; but we do not concede, as the Senator seems to think, that because we have enforced a law so satisfactorily that the overwhelming majority of the people are for it, we must stop and never attempt to advance a step further in the enforcement of the statute. That is the difference, it seems to me, in the position of myself and the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, that is a rather long answer to a categorical question. The situation I wanted to develop was this: There are, in the State of Alabama, a multitude of officers—I do not know how many but the number must reach several thousand—charged with the duty of enforcing the prohibitory law. We are told two things; one is that those officers are for the most part faithful, and, secondly, that they have been as successful in enforcing this law as in enforcing other criminal statutes. If that be the case, it would seem that the addition of a few more Federal prohibition officers would not greatly improve the situation. I do not want to argue it; I merely wish to get the facts; that is all.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if there were an extraordinary increase in the number of robberies of national banks would there be any Senator stand on the floor and say, "There is no use to provide an appropriation to secure additional marshals to arrest the burglars because there are already too many criminal cases pending in the courts"?

Mr. REED of Missouri. We have had that situation.

Mr. CARAWAY. And there never has been a Senator or anyone else who has ever risen to protest against any appropriation to enforce any law but the prohibition law. I have been a Member of the Senate for eight years and I have never heard a Senator denounce any other law and say it is a bad law and we can not enforce it or object to the means of enforcing it except in the case of prohibition. That is the only law as to which anybody has stood here since I have been a Member of the Senate and said, "There is not any use in appropriating money; the authorities will not enforce it, and it can not be enforced, and it ought not to be enforced."

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator know of any request of the Senate or Congress going beyond the requests of the various departments?

Mr. CARAWAY. I know this: The Senator says they are not enforcing this law, does he not?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I say that, as far as I am concerned, I agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] that the whole matter of enforcement has been a farce.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the Senator says the law has not been enforced.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a minute to correct the statement of the Senator from Missouri? What I said was that the reason why the enforcement of the prohibition law was a farce was because the department did not have enough money to employ additional field men—enforcement officers.

Mr. CARAWAY. And I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia again to this matter: He has been on the Appropriations Committee a long, long time. Has there ever been any objection to giving all the money necessary to enforce any law except this one?

Mr. HARRIS. I never heard of it in the 10 years that I have been a member of that committee. Nearly all the other departments have come before the Appropriations Committee, of which I have been a member 10 years, and asked for more money for their department.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question in that connection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. I should like to ask the Senator whether any Federal official has ever come before that committee and said that any particular criminal law could not be enforced unless the Government provided the enormous sum of $300,000,000 for its enforcement and covered the face of the country with courts? I say that this law is being enforced just as well as its irrational nature and the corruption that it works as it goes along will permit.

Mr. HARRIS. And the enemies of the law, like the Senator from Maryland, would like to have it fail.

Mr. EDGE and Mr. CARAWAY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland says this law is being enforced as well as it can be. The Senator from Maryland offered an amendment here on the floor of the Senate to increase this enforcement fund to $270,000,000, and voted for it, and voted to override the action of the conferees in receding from that amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly. I am not making any apologies about that.

Mr. HARRIS. I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the salaries provided for this particular class of public servants range, I believe, from $1,500 to $1,800. It has already been established that a large proportion of these men can not resist the temptations offered. Through what process of reasoning does the Senator believe that an increased appropriation, allowing the appointment of an increased number of inspectors, would raise the standard so that enforcement would be improved?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wonder if the Senator from New Jersey thinks that a man who can not make more than $1,500 a year is against enforcing the law; that only the high-salaried people are in favor of its enforcement?

Mr. EDGE. The Senator from New Jersey did not make any such inference.

Mr. CARAWAY. What is the inference, if that is not the inference—that because the department does not pay bigger salaries the men it gets are of no account and will not enforce the law?

Mr. EDGE. The Senator from New Jersey is stating a situation. Hundreds of men are employed. Certainly the Secretary of the Treasury does not pick out these men. They are employed, as I understand the present system, under the civil service law, which operates in every State in the Union. Whether the civil service law is wise or unwise, I repeat, the fact remains that if we increase the number of men employed to enforce the law we must increase them from citizens who are just as honest whether they make thirteen or fifteen hundred dollars a year or $10,000 a year; but, dealing with the situation we have had in the past, I repeat the question: Does the Senator anticipate that increasing the force from 1,000 to 10,000 is going to get a type of men more honest than those we have had before?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have not in any way reflected on the Secretary of the Treasury or the men under him. I think that the men under him, the men in charge of prohibition-enforcement work, are doing the very best they can. I know that is true of the men employed in this work in my State. I realize the difficulty in getting men suited for this work under the civil service law; but I believe we ought to give it a trial, and I would rather have it continue in force a while longer. I know that in my State there are plenty of good men applying for these places who could stand the civil-service examination, and if we had sufficient appropriation they would help enforce it so as to make the law effective in my State.

We know the old plan of having these men secure these positions by political influence was a failure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know to what extent these various agents, who are more or less incompetent, judging from the statements that have been made here, have been appointed upon the recommendation and the insistence of Members of both branches of Congress who belong to the party in power?

Mr. HARRIS. I am not familiar with that, Mr. President. I have not myself tried to influence any appointments. I have heard some of the Senators who have had men named for these places criticize the Civil Service Commission as a body to select these men; and, as I said, I can see the difficulty in finding them under the civil service. There is no doubt about that, but it is far better than the old spoils system in force before the law placing them under the civil service.

As I said, Mr. President, I have not criticized the Secretary of the Treasury. He said that he might expend this money extravagantly if we appropriated it for him. I say that I do not believe he would. He is too modest when he says that. I have not in this debate in any way referred to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury had been in the whisky business at one time; I have tried to avoid a partisan discussion of this question. Prohibition is a moral question and should not be made a party question.

Mr. President, my first interest in politics was in a prohibition campaign in my home county. I have been interested in advancing the cause of prohibition in my town, county, State, and Nation. Because of my interest in prohibition when a state-wide meeting was held in Atlanta to celebrate the passage of the state-wide law, the leaders of the cause asked me to preside at the meeting. I voted for the eighteenth amendment and I shall vote for every appropriation to get more men to enforce this law. Every Senator here knows that the lack of money and the lack of men is the greatest reason why this law is not enforced. It is useless for you to deny that.

Without reflecting on the vote of any Senator, I believe that if I voted against an amendment to give more money for the enforcement of prohibition I would be helping to make wrecks of thousands of men and women, boys and girls all over this land every day until a sufficient sum was appropriated to enforce the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. In reference to the inspection service or agency service about which the Senator has just spoken, the Senator will recall that several times within the last few years quite a large number of post-office inspectors have been created, and they have been certified by the Civil Service Commission. The object and purpose of those inspectors is to run down violations of the post-office laws and regulations, just as the purpose in this case is to run down violations of the liquor laws. Has the Senator ever heard any criticism of the character of the men who have been certified by the Civil Service Commission for the Post Office Department? Has it not been quite a success?

Mr. HARRIS. It has; and no objection has been made to doubling the force of inspectors, as I recall.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it has been more than doubled in the last eight years.

Mr. HARRIS. I mean in the past few years.

Mr. McKELLAR. So far as I now recall, since I have been a member of the Appropriations Committee, not a single objection has ever been interposed to increasing the service in order to carry out or better to enforce any law except this one.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I had not expected to hold the floor more than a few minutes; but I have asked that Governor Pinchot's letter be read. Before it is read, however, I desire to ask that a statement made by my former friend and colleague in the Senate, the late Senator Thomas E. Watson, in regard to the barroom, be read. As I have said, the barroom was not as bad as the bootlegger, because there are 50 bootleggers where there was one barroom; I ask to have the clerk read this Song of the Barroom. I think it is one of the best statements showing the great harm done by whisky that I have ever read.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia whether that is the song he had inserted in the RECORD about two or three years ago? It left such a vivid impression on my mind that I have never forgotten it.

Mr. HARRIS. I am sure the Senator would enjoy hearing it again.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator is bringing it in as a sort of refrain, I suppose, at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE SONG OF THE BARROOM

Alive, let us live. Where is Yesterday? Lost forever. Where's Tomorrow? It may never come. Today is here. Within its fleeting hours, runs the only certainty that you'll ever know. Come! eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow you die!

The chains of Self-restraint are galling—throw them off! The burden of Duty is grievous—fling it down! The cross of Responsibility is crushing—let another bear it!

Live for yourself: live for the Now: live for the lust of living.

Drink! and forget dull Care. Drink! and ease the heartache. Drink! and drown the passion for the unattainable.

See how men are drawn to me! My lights blaze a brilliant welcome: I am never too hot, not too cold. Mirrored Vanity smirks in my gilded reflectors; and no one is ill at ease, in my Free-for-all Club. No shrewish wife can tongue-lash you, here; no peevish child annoy you with its cries. Leave to them the ugliness of your haggard home, and come unto me for comfort. Theirs, the cold and the gloom and the lonely vigil—yours, the warmth and glow and social joy.

Clink your glasses, men! Drink, again, "Here's hoping." 'Tis well to toast her here, where begins the trail to the grave of Hope. Be jolly; let the place ring with laughter: relate the newest story—the story that matches the nude pictures on the wall.

What's that? A dispute, angry oaths, a violent quarrel, the crash of overturned chairs, the gleam of steel, the flash of guns, the stream of life-blood, the groans of dying men?

Oh, well, it might have happened anywhere. The hearts of mothers and fathers, I wrench with pain: the souls of wives, I darken in woe. I smite the mansion, and there are wounds that gold cannot salve: the hut I invade and poverty sinks into deeper pits.

I sow and I till, and I reap where I sow, and my harvest—is what?

Men so brutalized that all of humanity is lost, save the physical shape—men reeking with moral filth, stony of heart, bestial in vice—men who hear the name of God with a wrathful stare, or a burst of scornful mirth; men who listen to the death-rattle of any victim of their greed or their lusts, without a sign of pity.

And the women, too! How can I fitly sing of the Woman of my harvest-time? Did you ever hear her laugh? It must be the favorite music of the damned. Did you ever hear her ribald talk. The very sewers might shrink at bearing it away. Have you ever heard her libidinous songs? Did you ever watch her eyes—those defiant, mocking, hopeless, shameless eyes?

What warriors have I not vanquished? What statesmen have I not laid low? How many a Burns and Poe have I not dragged down from ethereal heights? How many a Sidney Carton have I not made to weep for a wasted life? How many times have I caused the ermine to be drawn through the mud?

Strong am I—irresistibly strong.

Samson-like, I strain at the foundations of character; and they come toppling down, in irremediable ruin. I am the cancer, beautiful to behold, and eating my remorseless way into the vitals of the world. I am the pestilence, stalking my victims to the cottage door and to the palace gate. No respecter of persons. I gloat over richly-garbed victims no more than over the man of the blouse.

The Church, I empty it; the Jail, I fill it; the Gallows, I feed it. From me and my blazing lights, run straight the dark roads to the slums, the prisons, to the bread-lines, to the madhouse, to the Potter's Field.

I undo the work of the School. I cut the ground from under Law and Order. I'm the seed-bed of Poverty, Vice and Crime. I'm the Leper who buys toleration, and who has not to cry "Unclean!" I'm the Licensed ally-of-Sin. I buy from the State, the right to lay dynamite under its foundation. For a price, they give me the power to nullify the work of law-makers, magistrates and rulers. For a handful of gold, I am granted letters of marque, to sail every human sea and prey upon its life-boats.

Huge battleships they build, casing them triply with hardened steel; and huge guns they mount on these floating ramparts, until a file of Dreadnaughts line the coast—for what? To be ready for perils that may never come. But I give them a pitiful purse; and, in return, they issue to me the lawful rights to unmask my batteries on every square; and my guns play upon humanity, every day and every night, of every year. And were my Destroyers spread out upon the Sea, they would cover the face thereof.

Around that grief-bowed woman, I threw the weeds of widowhood—but I paid for the chance to do it; and they who took my money knew that I would do it.

To the lips of that desolate child, I brought the wail of the orphan—but I bought the right to do it; and they who sold me the right, knew what would come of it.

Yes! I inflamed the murderer: I maddened the suicide: I made a brute of the husband: I made a diabolical hag out of the once beautiful girl: I made a criminal out of the once promising boy: I replaced sobriety and comfort, by drunkenness and pauperism—but don't blame Me: blame those from whom I purchased the legal right to do it.

No Roman Emperor ever dragged at his chariot wheels, on the day of his Triumph, such multitudes of captives as grace my train. Tamerlane's marches of devastation were as naught beside my steady advance over the conquered millions. The Caesars and the Attilas come and go—comets whose advents mean death and destruction, for a season: but I go on forever, and take my ghastly toll from all that come to mill.

In civilization's ocean, I am the builder of the coral reef on which the ship goes down: of its citadel, I'm the traitor who lets the enemy in; of its progress, I'm the fetter and the clog: of its heaven, I'm the hell. (From Prose Miscellanies, by Thos. E. Watson, 4th ed.)

Mr. BRUCE. May I ask the Senator who wrote that article?

Mr. HARRIS. The late Senator Thomas E. Watson.

Mr. BRUCE. Was he a teetotaler?

Mr. HARRIS. So far as I know personally, he was. He was one of the ablest and most influential men who lived in my State in the past half century, and had a devoted personal following greater than that of any other man in our State. From the day he entered the Senate until his death our relations were most cordial and I prized highly his friendship.

I ask that Governor Pinchot's letter be read, and that Mr. Doran's statement, relative to the number of men employed under his bureau, be placed in the RECORD after that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the letter be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the letter, as follows:

JULY 9, 1927.

Mrs. HENRY W. PEABODY,
Beverly, Mass.

DEAR MRS. PEABODY: Your welcome letter of June 16 would have been answered much more promptly except that, as I telegraphed you, certain other work already undertaken unfortunately had to have precedence. You ask that I give you a definite statement of the delinquency and failure of Secretary Mellon in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. I am delighted at the opportunity your letter has given me, and I take great pleasure in making this reply.

First of all, Secretary Mellon is utterly unfit to have charge of the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. Personally he is wet. When appointed as Secretary of the Treasury, Mellon was, if not the largest one of the largest, distillers of whisky in America through his ownership in the Overholt Distillery. Both because of his personal views and his business interests he was, therefore, just the wrong man to enforce the law.

It has been reported in the press, I assume with substantial accuracy, that when his interest in the Overholt Distillery was sold, after he had been in charge of law enforcement for a number of years, it brought $15,000,000.

Being out of sympathy with law enforcement himself Mr. Mellon, until forced by the accumulating pressure of public sentiment to do otherwise, has put disbelievers in the law in charge of enforcing it.

Mr. Blair, who until the last year or two had charge of law enforcement under Secretary Mellon, is wet. General Andrews, who succeeded him, is wet. Ogden L. Mills, who appears to have authority over ex-Lieutenant Governor Lowman and Mr. Doran, is also wet.

Mr. Doran is, I understand, responsible for the formula for the "specially denatured alcohol," which supplied millions of gallons of bootleg liquor, because of the ease with which the poisoning ingredients were removed.

The first man Mellon put in charge of law enforcement in his own State of Pennsylvania was a State senator, McConnell, a notorious wet and a man of known bad character beside. Within three months McConnell turned loose 700,000 gallons of whiskey on fraudulent permits. After being caught, he was treated with extreme indulgence, and when finally he had to be indicted was never punished. The United States district attorney came into court at the critical time and announced that the evidence upon which he depended for conviction had been stolen.

Nothing is better known in executive work than that the spirit of the head man powerfully controls the purposes and actions of his subordinates. Mellon's lack of interest in law enforcement has infected the whole service under him. There is no other factor to which the present abominable condition of law enforcement in the United States is so largely due as to the equally abominable refusal of Mellon to enforce the law for which he is responsible.

When the eighteenth amendment was first passed, criminals generally assumed, as their past experience gave them every right to do, that the United States would respect and enforce its own Constitution and laws. Consequently, the figures of crime, poverty, and drink steadily declined from the date of the adoption of the amendment until Secretary Mellon came into office. The present enormous development of bootlegging as a criminal and financial system has taken place entirely under Mellon's administration. It could not have taken place if he had done his duty.

Mellon's own city of Pittsburgh is the wettest city in Pennsylvania. Mellon is the undisputed political dictator of that city. He could make it dry if he chose to make it dry. He does not choose. His political, financial, and personal associates, over whom he holds complete domination if any man anywhere in this country does to-day, are openly against the eighteenth amendment.

Mellon's own State of Pennsylvania, of which he is beyond all comparison politically the most influential citizen, was probably, when I took office as governor in January, 1923, the wettest in the Union. Although the eighteenth amendment had been in effect since January, 1919, although Pennsylvania had ratified it, yet no law had been enacted to drive the open saloons out of the State. It is fair to say that the situation was appalling.

There was no State enforcement, and Federal enforcement under Mellon had completely broken down. A Federal prohibition director and other officers had been indicted. Whiskey was being illegally removed openly and by wholesale from warehouses in the Pittsburgh district. Some of the illegal removals were from the properties under Mellon's control.

Alcohol by the millions of gallons was being diverted into bootleg channels in the Philadelphia district. Breweries all over the State were running night and day turning out high-powered beer, and all this in Pennsylvania, with Mellon, a Pennsylvanian, in charge of national prohibition. Nothing of the sort could have taken place if Mellon had seriously intended to enforce the law.

At Pittsburgh the United States district attorney, who was, of course, under Mr. Mellon's political control, had quashed indictments against big bootleggers and politicians, one of them against the superintendent of Mr. Mellon's Overholt distillery, for releasing on fraudulent permits over 45,000 gallons of whisky.

In the middle district the United States district attorney, also under Mr. Mellon's political control, had shown no interest in stopping law violations and had allowed breweries openly to pour out high-powered beer.

In the eastern district the United States district attorney, also under Mr. Mellon's political control, and still in office to-day, had secured not one conviction of big bootleggers or members of alcohol rings, in spite of denunciations of actual conditions by Federal grand jury statements that could not have been stronger. This is the same district attorney who is responsible for the failure to punish McConnell. The administration of his office, so far as law enforcement is concerned, is still an open scandal.

I suppose it is fair to say that during my four years as governor as vigorous a fight was made to enforce the eighteenth amendment as has ever been made in any State. It consisted of two parts—one to abolish the legalized saloon and, by legislation, give the State government the powers it needed to enforce the law; the other was the actual work of enforcement.

First as to legislation: The most vigorous fights in two regular and one extra sessions of the legislature had to do with the effort to secure enforcement laws. In not one of them did Mellon give any help of any sort. In all of them the Pittsburgh machine, which was completely under his control, was more virulently wet than any other machine in the State.

The portion of the letter not read is as follows:

In the session of 1925 it was current gossip at Harrisburg that Secretary Mellon was actually hostile to our most important enforcement measure (called the united dry bill). On March 17, 1925, I telegraphed Mellon as follows:

"You are being quoted to members of the Pennsylvania Legislature as having made the statement by long-distance telephone that the pending enforcement bill, known as the united dry bill, must positively be defeated. I can not believe this is true. Bill comes up for final vote to-morrow morning. Please wire me your position at once in order to give time to correct this report."

His answer said:

"Replying to your telegram with reference to enforcement bill pending in Pennsylvania Legislature. I have not been advised as to its provisions and consequently have taken no position in regard to its passage."

That is, the chief law enforcement officer of the United States not only was so little interested in law enforcement in his own State that he did not know what legislation was pending, but when the matter was brought to his attention he declined even to take a position upon it.

You will recall that when President Washington wanted to smash the whisky rebellion in Pennsylvania, a great Pennsylvanian and a great financier, Albert Gallatin, volunteered to lead the troops. Furthermore, a great Secretary of the Treasury, Alexander Hamilton, asked Washington to accept his resignation as Secretary and appoint him to active command of the expedition to quell this revolt against a Federal law. Mellon would not even say that he was in favor of legislation necessary to enforce a Federal law in his own State.

I have been a Federal official for many years myself. Consequently I know what power the Federal administration has. I know also that the Secretary of the Treasury has all the necessary legal and administrative authority to enforce the law if he will use the power he has. From personal observation and experience in this effort to enforce the law I knew positively that the power Mellon had was not being used in his own State for law enforcement.

Accordingly I wrote him on October 28, 1923, in part:

"Pennsylvania is making a harder fight for law enforcement than any other State. * * * But while the State government of Pennsylvania is using and will continue to use to the utmost every power it has to combat the present outbreak of lawlessness, it is severely handicapped by the fact that the Federal Government is not. * * * The people of your State and mine are being affronted by open defiance of the law. This reign of disorder, which is having most serious consequences, is mainly due to the huge quantities of alcoholic liquids and illegal drinks turned loose from plants operating under Federal permits. These permits can not be granted, revoked, or dealt with in any way by State authorities. You, as Secretary of the Treasury, have the power to cut this flood of liquor off at the source by revoking these permits and by refusing to issue others except upon conditions sufficient, with honest enforcement, to make violations substantially impossible. I, as Governor of Pennsylvania, have no such authority."

I then made several specific requests. One was that in all Federal permits issued in Pennsylvania he would require the permittees to allow the members of the Pennsylvania State police to have access at any time, day or night, to their plants.

Mr. Mellon promised in writing to grant this request. All that we got after months of waiting was permission for the State police to enter plants under Federal permit "during ordinary business hours." In other words, the violators were to be guaranteed freedom from interference during the greater part of the 24 hours, and the State police were to enter only at the time when their doing so would interfere least with law breaking. More than a year later, after much more pounding, I succeeded in getting that promise kept.

I asked, also, that he would suspend and cancel, after hearing, the permit of any alcohol making or using plants or breweries detected in violation of the eighteenth amendment when I submitted to him, with my indorsement, sworn statement of such detection by officials of the State government, and thereafter keep such plants closed. I gave the names of many breweries which had been caught violating the law, and yet within a year had been given new Federal permits.

I also asked that since denatured alcohol, afterwards redistilled, was the main source of illegal whisky, whether he would not change the regulations to give more effective control. I pointed out the methods by which alcohol was being allowed to get into bootleg channels, and suggested constructive improvements. My statements in this matter were confirmed several years later by General Andrews before one of the congressional committees.

I pointed out, also, that the regulations of the Treasury Department provided for following pure alcohol—not denatured—from the source where it was manufactured through every step of release, transportation, and purchase for final use.

Mellon replied to my letter on October 29, and said:

"The regulations of this department are ample for the control of alcohol from the time of its production to the time of its ultimate consumption, whether used as pure alcohol or denatured for the various purposes for which denatured alcohol is used. * * *

"By far the greatest number of violations of the law in respect to denatured alcohol are those committed in connection with special denatured alcohol, and as to this aspect of the case the regulations are ample."

As to my request for the suspension of permits upon violations of law found by Pennsylvania State officials, Mellon fell back upon the old excuse. He said:

"You, of course, know that there are often minor irregularities which do not constitute legal grounds sufficient for seizure and forfeiture and appropriate action."

This evasive letter then closes with these sounding phrases:

"I am very anxious that the eighteenth amendment and the national prohibition act should be enforced throughout the United States, first, of course, because they are the law of the land, and because it is my obligation as Secretary of the Treasury to execute them as best I can. It ought to be clear to you that I could not be less desirous that they should be enforced in the State of Pennsylvania."

On October 30, 1923, I answered Mellon that "what is needed is not a defense of past and present evils, but the determination to abate them followed by effective action"; and added: "It is a matter of sincere regret to me that your answer to my letter is merely an effort to justify the present Federal system of enforcement, which all America knows to be defective, inefficient, and a breeder of corruption."

I said, "I ask you again to refuse to reissue permits for the operation of plants where the law has been broken." Perhaps it would be as well if you would allow me to quote somewhat at length from my letter:

"Your letter asserts that the law required your department to reissue permits after a year to applicants who are admittedly lawbreakers. There is no such provision of the law. The law does forbid the reissuance of a permit to such offenders until a year has passed, but does not require you to renew it afterwards. If you have any doubt of your power to refuse a permit to a lawbreaker after a year, I suggest that you do so refuse and let your refusal be appealed to the courts. The applicant can appeal, but when you relicense a lawbreaker the public has no recourse." * * *

"You have been good enough to grant my request for the right of the State police to inspect for violations at any time, plants operating under Federal permits. I thank you heartily, and I suggest that, under the right to modify permits set forth in subsection B of section 15 of Treasury Decision 3398, approved by you, it would greatly assist enforcement if this right were given to the State police for all permits immediately.

"All but one of the five breweries which I named as still operating, and which have been caught by the State police and reported to your department, were so reported prior to August 15, and that one on September 6. Your answer is that they have been cited 'or the administrative machinery is in action for that purpose.' If the permits of these plants had all been promptly suspended, as my letter asks, one of them, the Bottig Brewing Co., of Pittsville, could not have been caught violating the law again by the State police, as it was last Saturday. * * *

"I regret that your letter should show entire satisfaction with the present regulations regarding alcohol and brewery permits and contain no reference to the suggested insertion of conditions in the permit which would make lawbreaking, as I said, 'practically impossible with honest enforcement.' This is the line along which the best hope of effective enforcement will be found. I repeat my offer to help in framing such conditions."

Again, on October 26, 1925, I wrote Secretary Mellon, repeating my request that he grant no Federal permits to breweries that were caught violating the law. I called his attention to the fact that in the last two months, by making use of interpretations of law recently obtained, we had entered 64 nonpermit breweries and destroyed 600,000 gallons of illegal beer, and that we had succeeded in completely stopping the production of strong beer in all the breweries of the State save those under Federal permit, of which there were 48—a number clearly beyond any possible need for producing legal near beer.

On January 16, 1926, I called upon Mellon in Washington to lay before him the unendurable violations of law by Federal permittees in Pennsylvania. During that interview I asked him for his help with the Pittsburgh delegation in the Pennsylvania Legislature toward securing their support of dry legislation. The great majority of that delegation was controlled by his nephew, W. L. Mellon, as his personal representative. I called his attention to the fact that the Mellon members of that delegation had opposed dry legislation in the last two sessions and were expected to oppose it in the extra session then sitting.

When Mellon was questioned by reporters concerning this conversation, he replied with heat:

"Until informed by Governor Pinchot I had no knowledge of his program of dry legislation in the Pennsylvania Legislature. So far as the reference to W. L. Mellon, of Pittsburgh, my nephew, as controlling the Allegheny County delegation is concerned, it is an indefensible insinuation. W. L. Mellon is a private citizen engaged in business in Pittsburgh. He is attending to his business there and I am attending to my public business here. Just because he is the nephew of the Secretary of the Treasury is no reason for exploiting him in this connection. This is something which has nothing to do with the enforcement of the prohibition law, which was the purpose of the appointed conference."

On January 17, the day this was published, I wrote to the Secretary in part:

"In accordance with my statement, I am sending you herewith copies of the dry bills that have been introduced at the special session of the legislature. These bills are sponsored and supported by all the dry forces in the State. They strike at the sources of bootleg whisky and illicit beer.

"As head of the enforcement agency of the National Government and as a Pennsylvanian in high official position, their successful passage through the legislature will naturally have a peculiar interest for you.

"I observe in this morning's newspapers that feeling which remained unexpressed while I was with you has led you to characterize as an 'indefensible insinuation' my reference to the Mellon control over certain members of the Pennsylvania Legislature from Allegheny County. How a plain fact, known to everyone who knows the fundamentals of Pennsylvania politics, can be 'an insinuation' is beyond my understanding. The men to whom I refer and their local leaders not only acknowledge that they openly assert and even glory in the fact of Mellon control. These men voted wet in the last two legislatures and are expected to vote wet in the present extra session."

Everybody knows to-day that Secretary Mellon's statement concerning his own and his nephew's relation to politics in Pittsburgh was deliberately false. W. L. Mellon has since, in testimony before a Senate committee, admitted his Pittsburgh leadership, and that he was in close touch with his uncle at this particular time. The only reason that W. L. Mellon is to-day State chairman of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania is because he is the nephew of Andrew W. Mellon.

Moreover, Joseph G. Armstrong, commissioner of Allegheny County, county Republican leader, and former mayor of Pittsburgh, who proudly calls himself "Barroom Joe," had issued a call for a caucus about a week before this incident took place. This call, which was published in the papers, begins:

"As you know, the Republican organization of Allegheny County has been cemented into one organization, all factions connected with the name being eliminated, with Mr. Mellon as our chief adviser and leader."

It is worth remembering that this Mellon-led Allegheny County delegation came straight to Harrisburg from that caucus and voted unitedly against the dry bill.

There is very much more that might be said concerning the issuance of permits to alcohol "cover houses" and other well-known violators, and even to persons actually under indictment, concerning the restoration of permits by Washington to influential violators whose permits had been suspended by local officials, etc., but I hope the foregoing may answer your purpose.

Sincerely yours, GIFFORD PINCHOT.

The letter of Mr. Doran is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF PROHIBITION,
Washington, January 16, 1929.

Hon. WM. J. HARRIS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HARRIS: Pursuant to your telephonic request, there is attached herewith a mimeographed statement showing the amounts of money collected as a result of the enforcement of the national prohibition act. This information is given by years.

There is also attached a statement showing the number of field officers in each administrative district as of December 31, 1928. Figures covering field officers are not compiled by States, and the only way of securing same would be to ascertain each officer's post of duty. In order to avoid delay in furnishing the desired data it is hoped the information furnished by administrative districts will answer your purpose.

Very truly yours, J. M. DORAN, Commissioner.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am very sorry that I should be led to object, but I do not think it is proper to have introduced into the RECORD grievances of private parties. I hope we may not have any more of it, because the matter of making appropriations is purely a matter of business, and should involve the exercise of judgment, rather than all this feeling, and the raking over of such matters.

Mr. BRUCE. I am very sorry, but I propose to have something to say about Governor Pinchot before this debate is over.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg that the Senator will not ask to have this letter stricken out or in any way abridged on account of my feelings, because the only feelings I have are of amusement.

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask that it be stricken, unless the Senator prefers not. I will ask that the part of it not read go in the RECORD, and I want to ask to have printed in the RECORD the article I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without reading?

Mr. HARRIS. This is just a short statement showing a man was arrested in the Treasury Department the other day with whisky in his possession. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. EDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri, if he desires to speak. I think I was recognized.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. I want to say some things about this letter.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Georgia wanted the article read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia ask that this article be read or placed in the RECORD?

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that it be read.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. What has happened to the other letter that was being read?

Mr. HARRIS. I asked that the other part of the letter of Governor Pinchot be printed in the RECORD, except the reference to the able and conscientious Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and his former colleague, Senator Pepper, and not to take the time of the Senate to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Boston Herald, Thursday, October 18, 1928]

NEGRO ARRESTED IN UNITED STATES TREASURY CARRYING LIQUOR IN HAND BAG

(Special dispatch to the Herald)

WASHINGTON, October 17.—Arrested in the Treasury Department building—the center of prohibition enforcement—while carrying a black hand bag laden with 4 half pints of alleged whisky Matthew Grant Thomas, 38 years old, negro messenger of the department, was arraigned in police court to-day, accused of possessing liquor.

Although suspected of operating a "moving bar" Thomas told Assistant District Attorney R. F. Camalier that he had the liquor for his own use. The messenger denied that he dispensed drink to other employees of the department, Camalier said. Thomas pleaded not guilty before Judge John P. McMahon, demanded a jury trial, and was released on $500 bail.

The messenger was arrested yesterday. Carrying the hand bag, he attempted to enter one of the currency rooms of the department, which is in violation of the rules, and was taken into custody by a guard. When the hand bag was opened and discovery of the half pints made, the messenger was haled before Marvin Wesley, chief of the loans and currency division. Prohibition Agents Charles Williams and D. W. Nagle were summoned and placed Thomas under arrest and took him to the first precinct station, where a search resulted in discovery of another bottle, partially full, and a small whisky glass in his pocket.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] was kind enough to hand me the article just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] whether he will not for the moment lay aside the unfinished business?

Mr. HALE. The Senator wishes to proceed with the deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. HALE. I shall not make any objection to the request of the Senator. I realize that supply bills have to be passed if the Government is to function. I do not want to delay them in any way unnecessarily. At the same time the unfinished business, the cruiser bill, is a bill of paramount importance to the national defense of the country. I believe that a great majority of Senators are in favor of the passage of that bill, and I believe we are entitled to action upon it. I propose, so far as it lies in my power, to see that we get action before the Senate adjourns on the 4th of March. I think we can remain in session for longer hours than we have kept up to the present time, and I shall ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to-night, when the Senate concludes its business for the day, to move a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and I shall further ask that the Senate remain in session until a late hour to-morrow afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TYDINGS. I object. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations how much time he thinks will be consumed in the further consideration of his bill?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I do not think there will be many speeches on this side of the Chamber, and I do not think it will take very long to dispose of this matter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Maryland that I am in the hands of other Senators, particularly so far as concerns the item now before us and in which the Senator from Georgia is especially interested. I would not feel like cutting him off at this time, or any other Senator, for that matter, although I think the time is nearly at hand for us to vote.

There is another matter wherein another Senator seeks to suspend the rules to introduce something which can not be introduced unless there is a vote of two-thirds in favor of suspending the rules, so that may be a very short transaction or may be a very long one; no one can foretell.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland insist upon his objection?

Mr. TYDINGS. I object, and I ask for the regular order.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. EDGE. Am I correct in the statement that I was recognized by the Chair and then, at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], yielded to him? I have heard of no other Senator being recognized in the interim.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, there is no necessity for a ruling on that matter. I thought I had the floor, but if the Senator from New Jersey thought he had it and wants it, I will yield it to him.

Mr. EDGE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri, but I simply made the inquiry in order to proceed in order.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If I may say what I want to say, it will take only about three minutes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me a minute, I will try not to interrupt him, but I would like to say that the unfinished business before the Senate is the cruiser bill; that I came here to-day, after preparing a speech on that bill, ready to go ahead with it and discuss it. I do not see why that bill is not just as important legislation as any other pending before this body. I hereby serve notice that if this debate proceeds longer than half or three-quarters of an hour I shall demand the regular order, so I shall not be denied an opportunity to speak on the unfinished business this afternoon.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to deny anybody the opportunity to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland now insist upon his objection?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall not insist upon it if at 3 o'clock I may be permitted to proceed with discussion of the cruiser bill. I do not see why we should be asked to prepare information for the Senate and then, when the measure to which it relates comes regularly before the Senate, be asked to give way one day after another for something else. I am ready to concede a reasonable amount of time, but not the entire afternoon, to the discussion of the amendment which has been the subject of the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] and which I think is not by any means as important as the cruiser bill.

Mr. WARREN. I presume it is out of my power to make any agreement as to what shall be done at 3 o'clock.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland could very easily get the floor and make his speech anyway.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows that. I told him that this morning.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, so far as my colleague is concerned, I am prepared to yield the floor to him under any and all circumstances, I might almost say, but I do propose, after he concludes his speech, to say something with respect to the pending amendment to the appropriation bill, I care not what unfinished business or other business may be pending. It is perfectly obvious that almost more interest is felt in this amendment than in anything that has been brought to the attention of the Senate during this session. Therefore while I shall be very glad not to claim the floor before my colleague has purged his bosom of the load that weighs upon his heart, I expect just as soon as he is through to claim the floor. There are some observations I would like to add to the debate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wish to stand in the pathway of any Senator at all. I understand the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is ready to make his speech. Of course, it is not necessary to lay aside the appropriation bill, according to the custom of the Senate. Whenever I have had charge of an appropriation bill I have discovered that it is considered quite the thing for any Senator who wishes to make a speech on any possible subject on earth, or under the sea, or in the air, to take the time to do so without referring, even incidentally, to any subject matter before the Senate, while I quietly sit by looking on, like the cat that had swallowed the canary. This in no case refers to the junior Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland insist upon his objection?

Mr. TYDINGS. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland withdraws his objection. The unfinished business is temporarily laid aside and the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I assure the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that I will not consume more than 10 minutes. I do feel, however, in view of the fact that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] for almost an hour and a half has discussed his views of the necessity for this appropriation, that it is entirely in order to have a few words from some of us who feel so moved as to oppose the amendment.

I have many times, in the Senate and out of the Senate, expressed my view and conviction that the Volstead Act was an unfortunate and, I might say, unjustified interpretation of the eighteenth amendment; that it actually prohibited privileges the Constitution itself permitted. I think the wisdom of that conviction has been demonstrated over and over again. Nevertheless, I have no intention at this time to make a prohibition or antiprohibition speech. I desire to address myself alone to the pending amendment.

Notwithstanding the conviction to which I have already referred I have never failed to vote for any suggested appropriation—and when I say "suggested appropriation" I mean suggested by the department having charge and responsibility of the administration of the law. I would gladly have voted for the appropriation of $25,000,000 and had anticipated voting for it if the department had prepared and transmitted to Congress a workable method through which the funds could be wisely expended to actually help in the enforcement of the law. I repeat, I believe the Volstead Act was unwise and unwarranted under the terms of the eighteenth amendment, but never have I and never will I as a Member of this body oppose proper appropriation in the interest of the enforcement of the law.

It is plainly indicated by the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury that the department is not prepared to spend the $25,000,000 nor a very considerable portion of it. They very wisely, in my judgment, suggest that if appropriations are increased, a considerable portion should go to the Department of Justice where, after all is said and done, all violations of the prohibition act must be tried out. There is no doubt as to lack of enforcement and no doubt in the world as to general violation, nor could any one man in charge greatly alter the situation. With an increased number of inspectors, if they did their duty, there would be hundreds and thousands of additional cases brought to the one tribunal that can settle such cases, the Federal courts, and, through State jurisdiction and State apprehension and State indictment, to the State courts.

So it appeals to me as an effort to force an appropriation on the department whose head clearly indicates that the bureau in charge is not prepared to make a practical or helpful use of it at this time.

We are all aware, I think, through recent publicity that a very comprehensive survey of the entire question is in prospect in the near future, a survey which, so far as I can understand it, will go to the very bedrock of disobedience of law—violations of the prohibition law, yes; and of other crimes, because we must admit that in recent years there has been a general violation and disregard of all law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator state whether or not the Prohibition Department has the money now to make the survey? As I recall, it is not included in the appropriation of $13,500,000, and I am wondering where they are going to get the money to make the comprehensive survey of which the Senator is speaking.

Mr. EDGE. Of course, I am only speaking in prospect. It is well known, as the Senator from Tennessee very correctly indicates, that there is no appropriation available at the present time for a survey such as I would assume would be necessary to get at the facts and causes leading up to the present situation. But I can not conceive of any Congress, in special session or otherwise, that would refuse an appropriation for a purpose of this nature should it be undertaken.

I merely mention that in passing, because I think no matter what may be a Senator's personal conviction as to the wisdom of this law, all of us want the facts, and we can not remedy the present situation until we shall have the facts. Accordingly, my hope is that in the very near future there will be such a comprehensive survey and that it will be finally transmitted to Congress, with wise recommendations which will assist us at least partially in remedying this intolerable condition. An additional appropriation for unbudgeted or unestimated purposes certainly can not help the situation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but there are two or three things which I think ought now to be said.

First, we have listened to the long and very drastic letter of former Governor Pinchot. According to his doctrine, nearly everybody who holds public office is dishonest. The district attorneys are either dishonest or incompetent, and other officers whom he has named are to be placed in the same category. So one would almost imagine that he was in the situation of the Scotchman, who said to his friend, "Everybody is dishonest but you and me, and I sometimes suspect you." [Laughter.] Mr. Pinchot illustrates that very ancient story very thoroughly.

However, there is one thing that ought not to be forgotten. He was the Governor of Pennsylvania; he had his own State constabulary; the State of Pennsylvania has a prohibitory law; and the question arises why this amiable and enthusiastic gentleman did not enforce the law of his own State through his own agencies. There can be two answers: One the impossibility of enforcement and the other the unwillingness of the governor to enforce the law. If it were the latter, then that which the State of Pennsylvania could not do with reference to its local situation very likely the Government of the United States could not do.

I am not prepared to believe that all of the district attorneys of the United States are dishonest; I am not prepared to believe that the district attorneys of the State of Pennsylvania are dishonest. One thing is perfectly manifest from this letter, and that is that enormous quantities of liquor were being made and vended in the State of Pennsylvania.

One other thing it is important here to say, and that is that the admission is now made upon the floor of the Senate, in the teeth of all the denials that have heretofore been made, that the enforcement of the prohibition law up to this date has been a farce; and in that farce we have expended, as nearly as I am able to estimate roughly while I am on my feet, probably $200,000,000. At the present time we are expending $59,000,000, directly and indirectly, in the enforcement of this law. The direct appropriation is, I think, about $13,000,000 or $14,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. It is $13,500,000.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Wyoming states that it is $13,500,000; but the other expenses, which involve the employment of the revenue forces, the Coast Guard, and other instrumentalities of Government, according to the estimate which the distinguished chairman of the committee gave me the other day—and I think I am quoting him correctly—make the aggregate approximately $59,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the Senator passes entirely from the suggestion he has just made, I call his attention to the fact that the eighteenth amendment gives concurrent jurisdiction to the several States and the United States. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he believes that the indictment that has been made against the enforcement officials here this morning can justly be lodged against the State and local officers east, west, north, and south, who have practically the same power to enforce the law as have the Federal officers?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for his suggestion. I was about to say that I had a very interesting colloquy with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] this morning. He admits that there is a prohibitory law, of stringent character, in his own State, and that it is the duty of all the State officers—the constabulary and the police force—to enforce that law; and while he could not state the number of such officers in his State it is safe to say that in a large Commonwealth such as Alabama the number runs into the thousands. There are all the local constables; there are the local justices of the peace; there are the ordinary trial courts; there are the sheriffs and their deputies; and if in Alabama there are officers who are known by the name of marshals, there are the marshals. Back of those officers is the militia of the State. It is absurd to say that if a force of that kind, composed of honest men, can not enforce the law, the addition of a few Federal prohibition agents will bring about enforcement.

However, the Senator from Alabama said that the prohibition law is as well enforced in Alabama as are the other criminal statutes. If that be true, then Alabama does not need Federal aid in the enforcement of this law any more than it needs Federal aid in the enforcement of every other law. As I believe that State to be a law-abiding State, I would say it needs no aid; but if it be not a law-abiding State, if the other laws are enforced so badly that this law needs aid from the Government, it would seem to follow that the State would be classed as a lawless State, and I certainly would not make that impeachment against Alabama, for I believe it is just as law-abiding a States as there is in the Union. So I do not understand that logic.

However, the important thing I wanted to call the Senate's attention to was this: The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] stated that the law has been a farce in its enforcement since Mr. Mellon took charge. Then some letters were read to the effect that Mr. Mellon had been in the liquor business himself, and the inference was drawn that he had no heart for this work. Mr. Mellon has been in charge for a number of years and during all that time the proponents of prohibition have told us that it is a success—not that it is an entire success, but it has been a very good piece of work. What about the conditions before Mr. Mellon took charge? As to that we did not get a very direct answer. I want to answer the question.

Before Mr. Mellon took control the Anti-Saloon League was in charge and directly or indirectly was naming nearly all of the prohibition agents. So it appears that we have had three attempts, one by the department when it yielded to the admonitions of the Anti-Saloon League, another when Mr. Mellon made the appointments himself, and the third when the appointments have been made under the civil service. Now, we are told that conditions are so bad that we must have the money proposed here to be appropriated, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] asked the question where the money was coming from to make a survey. Mr. President, what is the necessity of a survey. We have hundreds of prohibition officers; they are in every part of the United States; they have been there at every moment since the prohibition law went into effect. They have reported to their superiors every day or every week what they have been doing, and all that information is now here and constitutes the most complete survey possible by any human agency, assuming the honesty and integrity of the members of this great force.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will recall that I was not arguing in favor of a survey, but that argument was being made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] as a reason why the amount for prohibition enforcement reported by the committee should not be appropriated. He went on to explain the kind of a survey that was going to be made and said that it would be a complete survey which would cover especially the Canadian border and would secure all manner of information, as a result of which the money now proposed to be appropriated could be expended hereafter if appropriated. It was then that I asked him where we would get the money to provide for the survey.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understood that was the Senator's position and he has stated it accurately. I am addressing myself more to the general idea of a survey than to the particular remark made by the Senator from Tennessee. What we need, I would say to the Senator from New Jersey, who I am sorry is not here, is to have the information that is already in the possession of the Prohibition Bureau turned inside out so that we can look at the record.

If we can not find the desired information there we will not get it from any commission or any investigation that may be made in the future, because we have had the investigation made from day to day and from hour to hour. I should like to see the information thus collected made public.

We obtained a little bit of it from General Andrews when he testified, not in an investigation but at a hearing on some bills, for there never was an investigation in the proper sense. Several bills were pending before a committee, and a subcommittee was appointed to hold hearings. When that subcommittee met there were four ardent "drys" on it—they were politically dry, anyway, and perhaps personally dry; I do not know—and one other Senator and myself who were characterized as "wets." We asked for subpœnas to call in officers of cities and of States who could give us the facts, but the four drys on the committee refused the subpœnas. We were able to secure just one subpœna, and that was for General Andrews. That was their attitude. But it did come out that man after man in the prohibition service had been dismissed for grafting and some men had been dismissed for perjury. It was a perfectly horrible picture in so far as we were permitted to glimpse it. So if we want a survey about all we need is to have the reports that have already been filed.

Now, with reference to the question as to who used to appoint the prohibition agents and as to the character of enforcement before Mr. Mellon took charge, I want to read a few lines from a work written by Justin Steuart, former publicity secretary to Wayne B. Wheeler, and I should like to have my friends who are here give attention to this statement.

The chapter is entitled "The Locomotive in Trousers";

> Wayne B. Wheeler controlled six Congresses, dictated to two Presidents of the United States, directed legislation in most of the States of the Union, picked the candidates for the more important elective State and Federal offices, held the balance of power in both Republican and Democratic Parties, distributed more patronage than any dozen other men, supervised a Federal bureau from outside without official authority—> and was recognized by friend and foe alike as the most masterful and powerful single individual in the United States. He achieved this position by sheer force of personality. The story of his rise to power, his use of that power, and his sudden death, just when the foundations seemed crumbling under him, is without parallel.

That is the Prohibition Bureau, of course—

> Where Wheeler sat was always the head of the table. He had an instinct for preeminence. A tireless opportunist, he dramatized himself as the champion of prohibition until the general public pictured him as a mighty St. George fighting single-handed against a swarm of dragons.

There are other comments, but I omit them for the sake of brevity.

> He loved the limelight. Attacks pleased him nearly as much as praise. He collected the personal newspaper notices, which became voluminous in the last five years of his life. He circulated widely, typed, mimeographed, or printed copies of these collections, with such titles as "Knocks and Boosts." * * * He urged the need of loyalty upon others, but frequently disregarded the orders of superior officers and ignored resolutions passed by the boards of the Anti-Saloon League, which were responsible for its political or legislative policy. He did not cut the cables like Dewey but waited until boards or committees had adjourned and their members returned to widely separated parts of the Nation, and then forgot them.

There are some more omissions.

> He loved power. If power could not be won, he loved the semblance of power. He never attacked the administration. Such attack might be construed as evidence that he lacked influence with the administration. His favorite text was: "The powers that be are ordained of God." This did not prevent his own insubordination. Because of the influence over the policy of the Prohibition Department that would be his under the Haynes régime, he supported Roy A. Haynes for Commissioner of Prohibition under the reorganization bill in the face of the objections of many of the sanest men in the league. By a political maneuver he prevented the election of the ablest man in the league to its national superintendency while he persuaded or dragooned delegates to support his own candidate.

More omissions.

> He was the exponent of force. From his first days as superintendent of a district in Ohio, when he assailed the courts for leniency, to the end of his life he preferred threats to persuasion. He made difficult the development of the league's policy of education on prohibition. He desired the most severe penalties, the most aggressive policies, even to calling out the Army and Navy, the most relentless prosecution. A favorite phrase was: "We'll make them believe in punishment after death." This, with "red-blooded" and "intestinal fortitude," crept into many a speech, regardless of its theme.
> But he was a great man. He would have made his mark upon the Nation regardless of the field in which he exercised his peculiar talents. His indomitable will, his persistency, his tireless labors, his passionate sincerity that bordered unscrupulousness, his consecration, and his audacity would have reared a monument for him had he never been drafted for prohibition by that lovable dreamer, Howard Hyde Russell.

Mr. President, if prohibition enforcement fell down and was a farce before Mr. Mellon took charge, this book tells us who the responsible party was.

Mr. JONES submitted the following as a proposed substitute for the prohibition paragraph:

> For expenses, not to exceed $250,000, for dissemination of information and appeal for law observance and law enforcement, including the necessary printing in connection therewith, and for expenses in connection with travel of officers and employees in attending meetings of sheriffs and chiefs of police and other meetings in the interest of law enforcement, to remain available until June 30, 1930.

CONSTRUCTION OF CRUISERS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for a few minutes—

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is making a very important speech, and there are not many Senators in the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield for that purpose?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dill	McKellar	Sheppard
Barkley	Edge	McMaster	Shipstead
Bingham	Edwards	McNary	Shortridge
Black	Fess	Mayfield	Simmons
Blaine	Fletcher	Metcalf	Smith
Blease	Frazier	Neely	Steck
Borah	George	Norris	Stelwer
Bratton	Glass	Nye	Stephens
Brookhart	Glenn	Oddie	Swanson
Broussard	Hale	Overman	Thomas, Idaho
Bruce	Harris	Phipps	Trammell
Burton	Hastings	Pine	Tydings
Capper	Hawes	Reed, Mo.	Vandenberg
Caraway	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Wagner
Copeland	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Warren
Curtis	Kendrick	Sackett	Waterman
Deneen	Keyes	Schall	Wheeler

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is now pending before the Senate for consideration and action an act which authorizes the President of the United States to undertake the construction of 15 light cruisers, 5 to be built in each of the fiscal years 1929, 1930, and 1931, and 1 aircraft carrier to be constructed prior to June 30, 1930. It is obvious that an intelligent answer to the question before us demands that we survey the state of the world at this time; the relative naval strength of all nations; the relative military strength of all nations; the possessions of other nations, and the possessions of the United States beyond its continental area; the stability, character, and trend of the governments of the world and their relations to the United States; the condition and protection of our foreign trade; our economic and geographical situation with respect to other nations; the amount of money owing by foreign governments to the Government or the people of the United States, and similar factors which must or should enter into a correct position on the cruiser bill.

The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, in his speech of January 3 upon the cruiser bill, had placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a chart showing the naval bases, stations, and so forth, of the three leading naval powers of the world—the United States, the British Empire, and Japan; also a table showing the relative tonnage of the navies of the three countries mentioned. I shall not re-cover the ground already so ably traversed by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, except to refer briefly to the relative cruiser strength of the United States, the British Empire, and Japan. The United States has now either constructed or in the process of construction 18 first-line cruisers totaling 155,000 tons. England has either built or in the process of building 62 first-line cruisers of 380,540 tons. Japan has either built or building 32 first-line cruisers totaling 203,965 tons, while France has 15 first-line cruisers either built or building totaling 132,883 tons; and Italy has 18 first-line cruisers either built or building totaling 107,370 tons.

Thus it will be seen that in the number of cruisers either built or building the British Empire, Japan, and Italy excel the United States. In numbers of first-line cruisers the British Empire has more than three times the number possessed by our country. Japan has nearly twice the number we have. France has approximately the same number as we, and Italy has two more than has the United States of this class of fighting ship. In tonnage the British Empire exceeds that of the United States by more than 2 to 1 for first-line cruisers, while Japan, in tonnage for first-line cruisers, exceeds the United States in this respect by 50 per cent. The navies of France and Italy, in first-line cruisers, are almost equal in tonnage to that of the United States.

As at present constituted, the British Empire and Japan both excel the United States in first-line cruisers. Shall we be content to rank behind the British Empire and Japan in tonnage and behind the British Empire, Japan, and Italy in the numbers of first-line cruisers? Dealing with only this aspect of the situation, those who will vote for the cruiser bill will desire that the United States shall not take second rank to the navies of the British Empire, Japan, and Italy either in the number of ships or in the number of tons those countries now have in first-line cruisers.

Those who vote against the cruiser bill must say in effect that they are content to have the United States outranked by the British Empire, Japan, and Italy either in the number of first-line cruisers these countries have or in the tonnage represented by said cruisers. Are Senators or the American people satisfied to have our Navy comparably defective to the navies of either the British Empire, Japan, or Italy in first-line cruisers? If the American people realized this fact, I believe they would desire the construction of the cruisers outlined in the pending bill.

If these cruisers of ours are actually constructed, taking into account those cruisers built, in the process of building, or appropriated for, by the British Empire, Japan, France, and Italy, and assuming that the other countries do not authorize any further increase in their first-line cruiser strength, the position of the United States in this regard will be as follows: We will then rank nearly with the British Empire and outrank Japan, France, and Italy, and we will not exceed the spirit of the 5–5–3 naval disarmament agreement effected here in Washington, limiting the navies of the British Empire, Japan, and the United States. Therefore, from the standpoint of comparative preparedness in first-line cruiser strength, if we would maintain the ratio of 5–5–3 naval disarmament pact, these cruisers should be built. If we do not build them, we surrender the position of the United States from its deservedly equal strength with that of any other nation to a position of about 40 per cent of the tonnage of the British Empire and approximately 75 per cent to that of the tonnage of Japan. There is no escape from these figures, and for my part I would consider it as danger to our security to permit this decrease in first-line cruiser strength of the American Navy.

ARMIES OF THE WORLD

Let us turn to the military strength—that is, the land strength—of the countries of the world, in order that our rank there way be noted as well. How do we rank with the nations of the world in standing armies? The Navy and the Army are interdependent upon each other; and looking at the whole picture of national defense, we must look at the navies and the armies of all nations in the world.

France has a standing army of 727,413 men—that is, five times the size of our own standing army. Russia has a standing army of 658,000 men, also about five times the size of our own standing army. Italy has a standing army of 380,448 men, nearly three times the size of the standing army of the United States; while Spain, with 272,787 men; Rumania, with 266,500 men; Poland, with 242,373 men, each have standing armies nearly twice the size of that of the United States. Also Japan, with 210,000 men in her standing army, is only a little short of having a standing army twice the size of ours. These observations are worthy of careful thought; for it is notable that in our country of 118,628,000 people we have a standing army of only 137,698 men, or less than 1 active soldier for every 800 men, women, and children in America; while in France there is 1 soldier in the standing army to approximately every 55 men, women, and children in that country.

In Rumania there is 1 soldier in the standing army to each 66 men, women, and children. In Spain there is 1 soldier in the standing army to each 80 men, women, and children. In Yugoslavia there is 1 soldier in the standing army to each 80 men, women, and children. In Czechoslovakia there is 1 to each 95 men, women, and children. In Belgium there is 1 to each 110 men, women, and children. In Japan there is 1 to each 400 men, women, and children. In Russia there is 1 to each 215 men, women, and children. While, to repeat again, in the United States there is only 1 active soldier to each 800 men, women, and children.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator has mentioned our small standing Army. Does he consider the National Guard as part of the first line of defense?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will just let me proceed, I will take up the reserve forces of all the countries, as well as this country. I would rather not go into that while I am dealing with the standing Army.

Mr. BROOKHART. I was asking whether the Senator considered the National Guard as a part of the first line of defense?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; the standing Army is the first line of defense, and the National Guard is a reserve force supplementing and augmenting it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Then I want to call attention to the fact that during the World War there were 17 National Guard divisions, and all of them went over in the first line of defense. There were 20 regular divisions, and only 8 of them ever went across at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. But to be fair the Senator should also observe that the National Guard did not go on the firing line first in any considerable number. I was with the National Guard myself, and was on the other side engaged in the war, and I hope the Senator will let me develop my argument on that point.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Rainbow Division was over there in the fighting as quickly as any other.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Put in another way, the standing Army of the United States is excelled in sheer numbers by the standing armies of each of the following countries: France, Russia, Italy, Spain, British Empire, Rumania, Poland, Japan, Czechoslovakia, and Yugoslavia.

The British Empire, with a combined population of 391,627,887 people, has a combined standing army of 403,915 soldiers; that is one for every thousand men, women, and children in its dominion.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a table showing the population of all the nations in the world, the size of the standing armies of those nations, the percentage of those standing armies to the total population, the size of the trained, organized, and equipped reserve of each nation, its unorganized reserve, the different percentages, and the military man power of each one of the governments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Country	Population	Active army		Reserves			Active army plus reserves actually enrolled, in per cent of population	Military man power
		Number	Per cent	Actually enrolled		Unorganized		Number	Per cent

Mr. TYDINGS. The reserve strength of these nations is also as astounding as is the number of soldiers in the active or standing army. Let me quote just a few of the figures to give the Senate an idea of the trained, organized, and equipped reserves which some of the nations of Europe maintain.

To begin with, France has an actually enrolled reserve, trained, equipped, and ready, of 4,610,000 soldiers, compared with the United States reserve force, of National Guard and reserve officers, of 296,000 men.

Russia, which has just joined with the United States in signing the peace pact to outlaw all war, and which is going to settle all international disputes, no matter how they arise, by amicable means, besides her standing army of 658,000 men, has a trained, equipped, and organized reserve of 5,425,000 soldiers, besides an unorganized reserve in similar proportions.

I will not quote further from the table I have before me, but Senators who care to look at it can see printed in the RECORD the figures for each country.

I just want to leave this thought before passing from this phase of the situation. In France, either in the standing army or in the organized, trained, and equipped reserve, 1 out of every 8 men, women, and children is in one or the other of those two bodies.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think the United States has as many as 4,000,000 reserves, trained soldiers who served in the World War, right now. Every one of them could be called into the service, the same as any other reserve.

Mr. TYDINGS. I take issue with the Senator from Iowa on that point. During the war I was a machine-gun officer, and, if I may be permitted to refer to myself personally, was graduated with distinction from the best machine-gun school we had on the other side. I know enough about machine guns to make this observation, that before that training, I could no more prepare a barrage, or take apart a gun in the dark and put it together again, or work out a flanking or an overhead barrage with machine guns, than I could operate an airship, because it takes long training to make an efficient soldier.

But to move him so he can be of the greatest usefulness does take time. Even though the 4,000,000 men, of whom the Senator speaks, might in time of war prove more valuable than some one who had no training, many of those 4,000,000 men would have to start all over again, particularly if they went into the Artillery (which is all mathematics), or machinery gunnery (which is largely mathematics), trench mortars, bayonet training, preservation of equipment, sources of supplies, how to get orders, and all the other ramifications of Army training. I think we are trained, yet war paraphernalia improves and progresses so rapidly that even in the 10 years since the war we would find that we have new gases with which to deal, we would find that there are new weapons to shoot and new rules for the shooting of them, new aircraft, tanks on a gigantic scale have been invented, and many other things that would not make the 4,000,000 ex-service men "on the minute" efficient soldiers as the Senator thinks.

But let me proceed, because after all that is beside the point.

It can at once be seen that every great power on the face of the earth, and a great many of the smaller powers, far excel in size the standing Army of the United States. Besides, many of the nations mentioned, having standing armies greater than our own, have no possessions and a very much smaller territory to protect. We have possessions in the Atlantic and the Pacific, and are recognized in a commercial and economic way as the world's leading power, while only one nation has a greater national population than have we.

With only 137,698 soldiers in the standing Army, an Army by comparison in numbers very small indeed, can we afford to let our first line of defense, the Navy, take second rank and still have that measure of national security, of self-defense, which the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs says is every nation's inalienable right?

LOANS OF FOREIGN NATIONS FLOATED IN THE UNITED STATES

Now let us turn to still another aspect of the case, the financial relations of the nations of the world with the Government and people of the United States. France owes us $4,025,000,000 of war debt; the British Empire, $4,505,000,000 war debt; Italy, $2,032,000,000 war debt; Belgium, $413,000,000 war debt; Russia, $280,000,000 of war debt; Poland, $198,000,000 of war debt; Czechoslovakia, $179,000,000 of war debt; while Armenia, Austria, Estonia, Finland, Greece, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Nicaragua, Rumania, and Yugoslavia also owe us considerable in war debts. Eighteen European countries owe us a combined war debt of nearly $12,000,000,000. In addition to the above, the nations of 45 countries owe to the people of the United States for loans made to said governments $8,212,000,000.

Again, in addition to the war debts and the loans made to governments of foreign countries, in 36 of these countries loans aggregating over $3,000,000,000 have been made to corporate concerns. The total amount of money in war debts, loans to foreign governments, outside of war debts, and loans to corporate enterprises in foreign countries which are owed either to the United States Government or to the people of America total $26,000,000,000. We are to-day financing to a large extent the business of the whole world. Our interests, through these loans, reach into the seven seas and into every corner of every nation on the globe. Thus America has either a direct or an indirect interest in the stability of every government on earth, and to some extent in the commercial enterprises in practically every country on the earth.

Let us examine this debt owing to the people of America in more detail.

Every man, woman, and child in Canada owes America $285. Every man, woman, and child in Great Britain owes America $133. Every man, woman, and child in Cuba owes America $130; in France, $126; in Belgium, $97; in Chile, $90; Norway, $70; in Argentina, $63; and in Italy, $61, while the following countries have a debt to the people of the United States of $25 per person: Bolivia, Dominican Republic, Luxemburg, Panama, Switzerland, Uruguay; and others owe us still lesser amounts.

It is conceded that many of the foreign countries to whom loans have been made can not pay in full these loans; yet, in addition to the loans which admittedly can not be paid, we have made loans to all of these countries outside of the war debts. The query naturally arises, If they can not pay the war debts, is not there some probability that we will not have refunded in full the debts made outside of war loans?

USES MADE OF FUNDS BORROWED FROM THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES

Before leaving the subject of war debts, let me call to the attention of the Senate the amount of defense expenditures for the year 1927 on the part of these countries which owe us considerable sums of money and which countries are annually borrowing still more. Here are the figures, by country, for the defense expenditure of 1927:

Total for—
Great Britain	$567,000,000
British Empire	995,000,000
Russia	347,000,000
China	297,000,000
France	269,000,000
Italy	218,000,000
Japan	208,000,000

In addition to those I have named, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a statement of the defense expenditures of the countries owing the United States money in the form of loans made to them by our people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to his colleague?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. May I ask the Senator whether he has any figures there for Germany?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I have. The Senator means defense expenditures?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes. Of course I know they are comparatively small, but I am curious to know the amount.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator mean for 1927?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Germany expended $127,000,000 in 1927 for defense expenditures.

Now, here is a significant fact. Those who are against the cruiser bill lend ear to this remark: In the year 1927 the nations shown in my table expended approximately $4,000,000,000 for so-called national defense. How amusing and paradoxical the whole thing is when we witness the governments of the entire world joining in a peace pact to outlaw war, with the standing armies of the sizes I have stated, and the defense expenditures in these countries totaling in a single year $4,000,000,000! Of course, it may be argued, we do not need a Navy now that the peace treaty has been signed! The countries maintaining these expensive defense expenditures are peaceful nations. Russia, with its 150,000,000 population and standing army of 658,000; France, with its standing army of 727,000 men in a population of 40,000,000; Italy, with its standing army of 380,000 men in a population of 42,000,000; Spain, with its standing army of 272,000 men in a population of 21,000,000; Japan, with its standing army of 210,000 men in a population of 86,000,000; Great Britain, with a British Army in Great Britain of 214,000 men in a population of 45,000,000; Czechoslovakia, with a standing army of 140,000 men in a population of 13,000,000; Turkey, with a standing army of 125,000 in a population of 14,000,000; and others I might name, all maintain these military establishments, so that there would be no misunderstanding about war being outlawed as an instrument of national policy, and so that they might insist, as the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee has pointed out, that all disputes, no matter what their nature or how they may arise, shall be settled by pacific means. What a lovely peace-time picture to behold! Nations with standing armies on a peace-time scale never before witnessed by the eye of man, and with annual expenditures for defense running into figures of billions of dollars, have all agreed that all future disputes shall be settled by amicable means!

It is said that we must make a start to remedy this condition. That is sound argument. But if the United States really wants to make a start to end these conditions of unrest and fear, we have it within our means to achieve far more success, I believe, than that which will result from the adoption of the Kellogg peace pact. Why are we spending these huge sums in our own country for national defense? Is it not because we feel that the world, being virtually an armed camp, that we can not sit supinely by and rely upon the good, the pure, and the beautiful entirely as a correct way to settle international differences? If that be true, and we really want to force fear from the breasts of mankind, let us help to get rid of these damnable and tremendous military establishments by saying to the world that the United States, being the creditor nation of the globe, declares, as a matter of national policy, that we are opposed to all loans to any nation which, in time of peace, maintains a standing army in excess of peace requirements. If we do that, you will see, I predict, a real change in the psychology of mankind. You will see a scaling down of the large armaments now encamped on the face of the earth. You will see a lessening of the amounts expended all over the globe for national defense. You will, to some extent, minimize the feeling of fear and insecurity now existent among the peoples of many lands. You will take from the backs of many good people the tremendous burden of taxation, and you will make doubly secure the security of our own land and the repayment of the $26,000,000,000 which the world now owes to the people of the United States. Wars are fought for money and with money. Without money no nation can wage war in this day and time, and if this action is taken it will not be necessary for us to appropriate the millions of dollars to maintain our own Naval and Military Establishments beyond peace-time requirements. But until it is done—that is, until the nations of the world decrease their huge military establishments—we can not afford to have our name occupy the third or fourth position in cruiser or any other essential strength.

Mr. President, I send to the desk two resolutions, which I ask the clerk to read, in the hope that they may be adopted in essence at this session of Congress. I ask that when he has read them the resolutions may lie on the table, to be taken up at some other date. I shall then proceed with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the first resolution (S. Res. 299), as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the American people, expressed through their representatives in the Senate of the United States, that the United States of America is opposed to all loans of every character to any nation which in time of peace maintains an army in excess of reasonable peace-time requirements. That a maximum peace-time army is hereby defined to be as follows:

One active soldier out of every 100 inhabitants for the first 2,000,000 of population;

One active soldier out of every 125 inhabitants for the next 2,500,000 of population;

One active soldier out of every 150 inhabitants for the next 3,000,000 population;

One active soldier out of every 175 inhabitants for the next 4,000,000 of population;

One active soldier out of every 200 inhabitants for the next 5,000,000 of population;

One active soldier out of every 250 inhabitants for the next 10,000,000 of population;

One active soldier out of every 300 inhabitants for the next 10,000,000 of population; and

One active soldier out of every 400 inhabitants for all population remaining, with a reserve force not exceeding in any one year the equivalent of the active standing army.

Provided, however, That in the event any nation now maintains a standing army in excess of that defined herein this resolution shall not apply if after four years from the passage thereof the standing army of said nation does not exceed the number of soldiers outlined above: And provided further, That such nation having an army in excess of that defined above shall reduce said army one-quarter of the entire excess now existing each year until said army comes within the definition stated. And be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the Secretary of State of the United States shall not, directly or indirectly, impliedly or tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever place the imprimatur of the Government of the United States upon any such loan contravening the conditions expressed herein.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask that the other resolution be not read but be printed in the RECORD. It deals with navies while the one just read deals with armies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 300) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the American people, expressed through their representatives in the Senate of the United States, that the United States of America is opposed to all loans of every character to any nation which, in time of peace, maintains a navy in any respect superior to that maintained by the United States of America; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the Secretary of State of the United States shall not, directly or indirectly, impliedly or tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever place the imprimatur of the Government of the United States upon any such loan contravening the conditions expressed herein.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in order to be fair, I think it is important that I offer a brief word of explanation of this proposed resolution. America owes its greatness to-day to the fact that in its formative period it was able to borrow from the richer nations of the Old World; in fact, our railroads and great industrial enterprises were largely built up from the loans which we secured abroad; so that America, having become great, having reached a superb state of industrial development, now having turned its face, and from being a debtor having become a creditor Nation, would occupy a very small and mean position if it refused to accord to the Old World the same treatment which it asked when it was not so fortunately situated as now.

However, I want to impress upon the minds of Senators the fact that while we were borrowing that money from the Old World we were asking that it be placed in productive enterprise—in railroads, mines, and industrial undertakings—in something to create wealth, something that would make it easier for us to repay the loans.

On the other hand, the governments of Europe to-day are floating loans in our country and the money derived from those loans is not going into productive industry, but it is going into battleships and armies, the size of which I outlined only a few moments ago. If those nations want to maintain huge standing armies and navies, that is their business; it is not our business to tell them the size of their standing armies and navies; but it is our business to say to them, "You can not maintain these standing armies and navies with our money, because it makes us take money which we would use for internal improvements and spend it on our own Army and Navy in order to bring them up to a parity with yours."

So the proposition outlined in the resolution is that it is declared to be the sense of the American people that we are opposed to loans to all foreign governments which in time of peace maintain more than peace-time standing armies; and the allowance made in the resolution is very liberal. France to-day would be entitled to a standing army of 220,000 men, if she would scale down immediately, because that would be the maximum number for a country of 45,000,000. The United States would use but 40 per cent of the number authorized by the resolution. The peace pact, signed by practically every nation on the globe, states that war is to be outlawed, that disputes of every kind, of every nature, no matter how they may arise, shall be settled by pacific means. If we mean what we say, we ought to put some teeth into our alleged policy and adopt the resolution in some form or other to maintain the spirit of the peace pact.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Just let me go on a moment, for I shall probably anticipate 90 per cent of what the Senator would ask me if he will just let me proceed.

Understand, Senators, people in this country could still lend their money to foreign governments notwithstanding this resolution—the resolution is only an admonition—if they wanted to do so, but if they did lend it to foreign governments they would lend it at their own risk.

Does the resolution, which has just been read, conform with the spirit of the hour? A few days ago the Senate adopted the Kellogg peace pact. That pact, bearing the signatures of the representatives of all the civilized nations of the world, stated that all nations signatory thereto had outlawed war; that they condemned war as an instrument of national policy; and that they would settle all disputes—whatever they involved; whatever their origin, no matter how arising or under what conditions—by pacific means. If the spirit rather than the letter of that resolution is to prevail—a condition devoutly to be desired—it would be an anomaly for Russia to keep 658,000 soldiers in its active army; for France to continue its army of 727,000; or for Italy to continue its large force of 380,000 men. And so I might mention other nations and the size of their standing armies. Certainly, if the dove of peace, after being driven out of creation during the World War and being buffeted by the boisterous winds following that great holocaust, is at last to settle its pure white kindly wings upon the earth, and the principles which it represents are to be emulated by all nations, then these nations should at once show the bona fides of their expressed intentions by performing acts to substantiate their words.

Certainly no nation can object to the resolution. If these huge armies and navies are being maintained with our money, we are thereby forced to incur a huge expenditure at home. If conditions were different in Europe, our expenditures would not need to be so great. Every speech for the cruiser bill uttered on this floor has been based upon the comparative size of the Japanese and English navies; and yet in 1927 we made a loan to Japan of $100,000,000, more than the total defense expenditures of that nation for that year. Without such loans the other nations of the earth could not support the standing armies and navies on the scale they are now maintaining them.

If we want the feeling of good will to settle on Poland or Austria or Germany or France, we have got to take the bayonets away from their breasts, and the guns pointed at their hearts, because so long as huge military camps are all over those nations, the people will live in a state of fear and international amity can not be maintained.

What nation can object to the expressed feeling of the American people that they oppose loans to foreign governments which violate the spirit and the letter of the treaty which they have just signed? If they do object, then we should label the treaty a series of New Year's resolutions agreed to by all the nations of the world, to be broken some time in the latter part of January. Are we not primarily contemplating the passage of the cruiser bill because other nations have surpassed us in cruiser strength? Are we not justified in saying to these nations that we will not continue a situation which causes us to spend more money in the uselessness of unneeded war preparation? How many of these governments, with which we are competing in naval strength, could support navies and armies on a scale superior to those maintained by the United States, if it were not for the loans which we have made to them, with which they have bolstered up their tottering war-time engines? If such loans were denied to nations which maintain armies, thereby frightening their neighbors, and in some measure causing our own people concern, and which build navies in excess of that maintained by our own country, forcing us thereby to divert money needed for internal improvements to the uselessness of competitive war preparation, it would put a stop to this practice and give to our people the improvements which the cause of competitive armaments and armies deny to them.

Let me make an analysis of our existing debt situation. I will not read it, but will ask permission to have it inserted in the RECORD for the benefit of Senators who may care to look at it more closely. I will, however, answer a question or two that may come up in the minds of some Senators as to the purposes to which prearmistice loans were devoted. I refer to the following:

Munitions, 28.3 per cent.
Foodstuffs, cotton, and other supplies, 62.7 per cent.
Transportation and shipping, 2.4 per cent.
Spent in neutral countries, 1 per cent.

In other words, nearly a third of all of our prearmistice loans went to munitions.

What happened to our postarmistice loans? The figures are as follows:

Munitions, 12.6 per cent.
Foodstuffs, cotton, and other supplies, much of which went to the maintenance of regular armies, 72.2 per cent.
Transportation and shipping, 4.1 per cent.
Incidentals, 10 per cent.

So that since the war, 12 per cent directly and a proportion of 70 per cent more went for munitions, armaments, and armies in countries borrowing the money from us.

Now, let me call attention to the situation in two countries. Take for example, the United Kingdom. The figures are as follows:

Total debt	$41,354,169,000
Total external debt	5,367,750,000
Public loans in the United States	159,728,000
Due to the United States Government	4,505,000,000
Total internal debt	35,986,419,000

Now let us consider the case of Italy. The figures as to Italy are as follows:

Total debt	$9,425,322,000
Total external debt	4,965,895,000
Public loans in United States	96,895,000
Due to United States Government	2,032,000,000
Total internal debt	4,459,427,000

I have had inserted in the RECORD the defense expenses of various countries of the world for 1927, and the amount of money each of them borrowed from the United States in that year. I will merely, in passing, call attention at this point to the first nation on the list to show how that table works out:

Argentina spent $44,771,000 for national defense in 1927, and borrowed from the United States $99,561,000;

Austria spent $11,220,000 for national defense, and borrowed $33,887,000 from the United States.

So it is with practically every other country. If any Senator should like now to ask about the figures concerning any particular nation I will be glad to answer, but I have had the entire table printed in the RECORD. I now ask that the statement to which I referred a few moments ago may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

FOREIGN DEBTS

My contribution to the discussion of international debts is to be confined strictly to a statement of facts. I am to answer as accurately as is possible the following questions:

"1. What proportion of the foreign debts owed to the United States Government were contracted before the armistice and what proportion subsequent to the armistice?

"2. What uses were made of the funds borrowed before the armistice?

"3. For what purposes were the funds borrowed after the armistice?

"4. To what extent have the war debts been canceled by the terms of the settlements that have been negotiated?"

I shall take up each of these questions in turn.

"1. What proportion of the foreign debts owed to the United States Government were contracted before the armistice and what proportion subsequent to the armistice?"

The following table shows the total foreign loan of the United States Government from April 6, 1917, to November 1, 1920. No interest item is included, the figures representing merely the principal of the obligations incurred by foreign governments.

Foreign loans of the United States Government, April 6, 1917, to November 1, 1920

Prearmistice:
War loans		$7,474.0
Postarmistice:
Postwar loans	$2,091.8
Bonds received in settlement for surplus war supplies	574.9
Loans for relief purposes	84.1
Loans by U. S. Grain Corporation	56.8
Total		10,281.6

Thus, of the total loans, approximately 73 per cent were made before the armistice and about 27 per cent following the armistice. Of the postarmistice loans about 75 per cent were of the same general character as those made during the war period. About 20 per cent resulted from the sale of our surplus war supplies, with the remainder resulting from relief work and from the furnishing of grain by the United States Grain Corporation.

"2. What uses were made of the funds borrowed before the armistice?"

It is impossible to answer this question with absolute precision. But the figures furnished by the Treasury Department enable one to make, by broad classes, a substantially accurate statement of the ways in which the European governments expended the funds that were borrowed.

Purposes to which prearmistice loans were devoted

	Amount (in millions)	Percentage
Munitions	$2,351.4	28.3
Foodstuffs, cotton, other supplies	5,203.5	62.7
Transportation and shipping	197.7	2.4
Paying off maturing commercial loans	471.8	5.7
Spent in neutral countries	5.9	.1
Silver	68.6	.8
Total	8,298.9	100.0

This total of loans—$8,299,000,000—represents our gross lendings. To arrive at the net indebtedness given in the table preceding, it is necessary to subtract about $825,000,000, which represents the sums paid by us to foreign governments for supplies and services furnished us in connection with our military operations. It will be observed that practically all of the war-time loans were expended in the United States. Whether the prices paid for American munitions, foodstuffs, supplies, etc., were fair and reasonable is a question into which I do not enter.

It should be made clear, however, that all of these borrowings during the war period may properly be regarded as loans procured for war purposes. It has sometimes been argued that, inasmuch as European countries normally have to import large quantities of foodstuffs and other supplies, it is only the extra amounts required in war time that are properly chargeable as war expenses. The conclusions to be drawn from this line of reasoning is that the foodstuffs and materials consumed by the civilian population were not war supplies—that, at the most, one should count as war supplies only that portion of the total that went to the sustenance and equipment of the armies in the field. Such an argument, however, overlooks one vitally important consideration—namely, that in normal times these countries were able to pay by means of their own exports and services for all of their imports, but the war simultaneously increased import requirements and reduced their earnings from exports and services. Thus the entire foreign trade deficiency—which necessitated the loans—must be attributed to the war.

"3. For what purposes were the funds borrowed after the armistice?"

The postarmistice loans were utilized as follows:

Purposes to which postarmistice loans were devoted

	Amount (in millions)	Percentage
Munitions	$347.7	12.6
Foodstuffs, cotton, other supplies	1,990.4	72.2
Transportation and shipping	111.8	4.1
Paying off maturing commercial loans	176.4	6.4
Spent in neutral countries	12.9	.5
Silver	117.7	4.2
Total	2,756.9	100.0

This figure represents the gross loans, and to arrive at the net indebtedness incurred by the foreign countries it is necessary to subtract six hundred and sixty-five millions paid by the United States Government to European governments for goods and services furnished to us after the armistice.

In addition to these regular postarmistice loans, obligations were also incurred as the result of the sale of surplus war supplies, the activities of the United States Grain Corporation, and the extension of relief. The obligations thus incurred were as follows:

Surplus war supplies	574.9
Relief purposes	84.1
U. S. Grain Corporation	56.8
Total	715.8

"4. To what extent have the war debts been canceled by the terms of the settlements that have been negotiated?"

Before estimating the extent to which these debts have been canceled it is necessary to indicate the basis upon which cancellation estimates are made. At the time the original loans were granted the interest rate was nominally 5 per cent, and during the period when no payments on interest account were made the Treasury carried the accrued interest on its books at this rate. When the settlements came to be negotiated, however, interest rates had declined below the war level, and it was agreed that it was only fair to change the 5 per cent rate to 4.25 per cent, which was the rate at which the United States Government floated its later Liberty loans. In funding the debts, therefore, interest at 4.25 per cent up to the date of settlement was added to the original principal. In estimating the extent of the cancellations that have occurred, the American Treasury does not count this reduction, recognizing that the 5 per cent which the loans originally bore was but a nominal figure and subject to later modification.

The cancellations are figured on the basis of the funded debt; that is, the original debt plus accrued interest at 4.25 per cent up to the date of settlement. The settlements call for a schedule of annual payments extending over a period of 62 years. The approved method of estimating the extent of the cancellation is to figure the present value of the sums to be collected. The present value may be defined as that sum of money which in 62 years at the rate of 4.25 per cent interest would yield a total equal to the principal and interest payments called for by the schedules of payments that have been worked out. On this basis the extent of the cancellations is shown by the following table:

Present values of funded debts at 4.25 per cent

[In dollars, 000 omitted]

Country	Debt prior to funding	Approximate percentage of cancellation
Finland	9,190	19.3
Hungary	1,984	19.6
Poland	182,324	19.5
Estonia	14,143	19.5
Latvia	5,893	19.3
Lithuania	6,216	20.1
Czechoslovakia	123,854	25.7
Rumania	46,945	25.1
Belgium	483,426	53.5
France	4,230,777	52.8
Yugoslavia	66,164	69.7
Italy	2,159,150	75.4
Total	7,321,066	58.0
Great Britain	4,715,310	19.7
Grand total	12,036,376	43.0

For the continental debtors combined, the cancellation works out at about 58 per cent, as against 19.7 for Great Britain.

Some people have felt that a fair basis of debt settlement would be to cancel all loans made before the armistice—requiring payment merely on the debts incurred after the armistice. It may perhaps be of interest therefore to indicate in the case of the more important debtors how settlements negotiated on such a basis would compare with the actual settlements.

Great Britain's prearmistice debt constituted 92.6 per cent of her total debt. By the terms of the settlement her debt was only 19.7 per cent canceled.

The prearmistice debt of France equaled 60.7 per cent of her total. In the agreement which has been negotiated, but not ratified, the French debt was reduced by 52.8 per cent.

The prearmistice debt of Belgium constituted 48.9 per cent of the total. The cancellation in the Belgian agreement works out at 53.5 per cent.

The prearmistice loans to Italy made up 67.5 per cent of the total. The settlement provides for a cancellation of 75.4 per cent of the total.

Thus if new agreements were to be made on this basis the British schedule of payments would have to be enormously reduced; the French payments would have to be decreased slightly; the Belgian payments would have to be increased somewhat; and the Italian schedule would have to be greatly increased.

Taking into consideration all of the settlements and using combined totals, we find that the prearmistice loans comprise 73 per cent of the aggregate indebtedness. The aggregate cancellation, however, works out at only 43 per cent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Here is a little summary which I hope particularly those interested in this discussion will drink in, because it is the meat of the whole loan and preparedness situation:

The total war expenditures of the world in 1927 were almost $4,000,000,000. The United States advanced sufficient to pay two-thirds of that amount, or $2,619,000,000, in that year. This includes all foreign flotations in this country. So that of all the money spent in the entire world for national defense in 1927, $4,000,000,000, two-thirds of it was borrowed right here in our own country by the governments of the world.

Here is another striking fact:

The United States—meaning the people of the United States—loaned 20 foreign nations more than enough to meet their national-defense expenditures during 1927. That happens almost every year, Mr. President. These loans have been going on in this procession ever since the World War.

Here is another striking fact:

Europe's war budget for 1927 was a little over $2,000,000,000. That is just about the total of foreign securities floated in the United States in that year, thereby releasing sufficient in the world's financial markets to finance the defense expenditures of all of Europe. So what they spent for armaments in Europe in 1927 was the exact equivalent of the money borrowed by all those countries in the United States in that year.

Excluding France, Russia—now under the State Department ban—and England, the war budget for the rest of Europe amounted to almost $1,000,000,000—$935,000,000, to be exact. We advanced these countries amounts totaling 62 per cent of that figure, $580,000,000. Loans were made to five European countries in amounts more than sufficient to finance their entire defense budgets.

The United States loaned in Japan $100,000,000 more than enough to meet her 1927 national-defense expenditures. Every man in this Chamber concedes that the navy of Japan to-day is superior to that of the United States in its cruiser strength; yet during one year Japan borrowed from this country $100,000,000 more than was necessary to finance her whole military establishment.

Are you going to keep lending these nations money to keep up their armies and their navies all over the world?

Let us take an illustration. Let us go out on the western frontier, in the old border days, when every man carried a gun, there were no courts, and he shot on sight. Suppose all the inhabitants joined together and said, "Let us sign a paper that we will not shoot one another any more, but we will settle our disputes by arbitration in a friendly manner"; and suppose, after they all left, they all carried their guns again. Do you think the dove of peace would be apt to stay very long in that assembly? With the first shooting the whole thing would be abandoned. Yet, if you had it in your power to say, "You can not carry these guns, because unless I furnish you the money with which to do it you have not sufficient money to maintain them on that scale," you would in a sense bring about disarmament, and you certainly would create a psychology of peace and a desire for peace which the presence of these huge war-time armies never will permit to settle upon the face of the earth as long as they exist.

Put 644,000 trained and equipped soldiers on the Canadian border or in Mexico and see how much you think of your national security in the United States. The United States is fifteen times as large as France, and fifteen times as large as Germany; yet to the north of Germany there are 644,000 Russian trained soldiers, and the finest military airplane corps in all the world. To the east is Poland, with two hundred and eighty-some thousand soldiers. Then there is a French Army on the south of Germany with 727,000 trained soldiers and 4,500,000 reserves; and yet we talk about the Kellogg peace pact to outlaw war where 1 out of every 55 men, women, and children is in the standing army, and we say that there is a great psychology for peace with those conditions prevailing!

I say that if the United States were Germany, and Germany were the United States, and we were transported into that country, our great idea about straightening out the difficulties of the world would certainly be other than it is here, 3,000 miles from the scene of those huge armies.

Why have they these military establishments? Because we have not the courage to deny them the funds with which to maintain them. We may affect a few men who perhaps engage in the business of financing these countries, and I do not blame them for that, because it is perfectly honorable and legitimate; but I say that the time has come when the United States, being the creditor nation of the world, should insist that the money borrowed from its people shall go into useful and productive enterprises, just as a banker would insist that any money borrowed from his bank should go into a useful and productive enterprise, and that the security should be the best.

The combined defense expenditures for 1927 of seven South American countries—Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Peru, and Venezuela—were $132,000,000 for that year. Loans floated by those governments in this country were $200,000,000 for the same year.

Three Central American countries and two of the West Indies—Costa Rica, Guatemala, Salvador, Cuba, and the Dominican Republic—needed $16,000,000 for defense purposes last year. Our loans to these countries were over four times that amount.

I do not mean to say that these little nations are flagrant violators; but I think I have shown by a statement of fact that can not be refuted that without these loans from the people of the United States there would not to-day be 720,000 active, trained French soldiers in the standing army, nor 380,000 trained soldiers in Italy, nor 300,000 trained soldiers in Rumania, nor 280,000 trained soldiers in Poland, because those of you who do me the honor to read the table will see that year after year we lend to these countries practically the same amount that they expend for their entire national defense.

When they build these huge armies and huge navies on a war-time plane they cause us to feel unsafe, to improve our airplane corps, to enlarge and expand our Navy, to take money which we would otherwise use to reduce taxation or to make internal improvements.

I will not read, but shall ask permission to insert in the RECORD, the amount of all the war debts owing by all the countries of the world, the amount that we scaled down these debts before settlement, the amount of settlement agreed upon, the amount paid in cash, the amount guaranteed by 62-year bonds, the cash value of these bonds to-day—which will be an astounding figure—and the concessions made by the United States to each country in the settlement of these debts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[1] Since the war, various European governments have borrowed money through American bankers at interest rates running from 7 to 8 per cent, therefore, 5 per cent is a conservative rate.

[2] Although France made the cash payment specified in the settlement, she has not yet ratified the agreement made by her representatives.

Mr. TYDINGS. President Coolidge, on Armistice Day, I think anticipated some of the things I have mentioned here this afternoon, because here is what he had to say. This was on Armistice Day, 1928:

Immediately following the war we went to the rescue of friend and foe alike in Europe on the grounds of humanity. Later our experts joined with their experts in making a temporary adjustment of German reparations and securing the evacuation of the Ruhr. Our people lent $110,000,000 to Germany to put that plan into immediate effect. Since 1924 Germany has paid on reparations about $1,300,000,000, and our people have lent to national, state, municipal governments, and to corporations in Germany a little over $1,100,000,000. It could not be claimed that this money is the entire source from which reparations have been directly paid, but it must have been a large factor in rendering Germany able to pay. We also lent large sums to the governments and corporations in other countries to aid in their financial rehabilitation.

Here is the meat of the President's address in this paragraph:

I have several times stated that such ought to be our policy. But there is little reason for sending capital abroad while rates for money in London and Paris are at 4 or 5 per cent, while ours are much higher. England is placing very considerable loans abroad; France has had large credits abroad, some of which have been called home. Both are making very large outlays for military purposes. Europe, on the whole, has arrived at a state of financial stability and prosperity where it can not be said we are called on to help or act much beyond a strict business basis. The needs of our own people require that any further advances by us must have most careful consideration.

Such men as Mr. Owen Young, President-elect Herbert Hoover, Mr. Coolidge himself, and Secretary Kellogg have from time to time said, in magazine articles and in speeches made about the country, that the time will inevitably come when the people of the United States, in making loans abroad, will have to insist that their money go into productive enterprises, and that to invest their money in large war-time establishments is not good, sound business or banking.

In this connection it is well to note that Russia, with a population of 146,000,000, has not been recognized by some of the countries of the earth, among them our own, and this because it is claimed the Government of Russia is a virtual dictatorship. Does not this condition also prevail in another form in Italy? And may it not also apply, in a milder way, in some of the other countries which owe us tremendous sums?

It should be borne in mind that Russia has refused, it is stated, to pay us its war debt because it was contracted, it is said, by a so-called minority of the Russian people; that this borrowing did not represent Russia. Whether this be true or not, I should like to read from the December, 1928, issue of Current History, from an article entitled "Danger of American Loans to Europe," written by Francesco Nitti, former Minister of the Treasury and former Premier of Italy, in which he makes the following observation:

> Gradually as Europe reduces her sources of disorder * * * she will recover self-confidence, and the present state of things must sooner or later come to an end.
> But the present situation should make America prudent and guarded in according loans to Europe. These loans are a danger and an error when they are made in countries which present political instability or a disordered régime. A loan to a great German, French, or Belgian industry is almost without danger. But a loan to Russia, Poland, or Italy is not without danger as long as the present dictatorships endure. It may be assumed that the dollars lent will not, for the most part, be destined to the uses of production, but to luxury and military expenditure, and to the upkeep of a ridiculous monetary system. * * *
> There is also a political danger. If an obligation is to be valid, it must be freely contracted. When Parliament, the right of association and meeting, and the freedom of the press have all been suppressed, it is impossible for the obligation to be of a stable nature. The irregular régimes of a dictatorship are not binding upon their successors.

In spite of the Kellogg peace pact it must be admitted that the government of Russia, with its 146,000,000 people, is not looked upon with favor by some of the powerful nations of the world; that Hungary and Italy have, in some form or other, a dictatorship; that in China, with its 400,000,000 of people and a standing army of 1,500,000 men, a great civil and military conflict has just taken place; that parts of northern Africa have shown themselves restive under French rule; that France has had difficulties in Arabia, while the British Empire has had serious difficulties with which to deal in Egypt and India; that Germany is bound by a treaty to pay a tremendous burden in the form of war reparations, the amount of which has not as yet been fixed; that the budgets of some of these foreign countries do not balance; that there is trouble in that part of Italy which was ceded to it by Austria; that Austria, having lost a large part of its territory and having no seaport, is bound to import and export the necessities of life and all its commerce through countries which surround it with a tariff wall; that the people of Hungary are similarly placed as are those of Austria; that war between Italy and Greece was narrowly averted; and that other serious conflicts in the Balkans seem from time to time about to break out; even in South America a few days ago, there was some difficulty between two countries in which hostilities were barely avoided; that our own marines are in Nicaragua; that Haiti is under the domination of our armed forces to some extent; that the Panama Canal must always be the only bond between our Atlantic and our Pacific fleets; that we own Hawaii and the Philippines, long distances from continental United States; and that to-day, besides being the creditor nation of the world, we are embarking upon an area of foreign trade never before attempted.

There is no dispute that, despite all these conditions, England and Japan excel the United States in cruiser strength. They both excel us in the size of their standing armies. If this were not so I would vote against any increase in the cruiser strength of our Navy. But, as it is so, I feel that America, with its small Army, with all its diverse problems, and the condition of the world being as it is, should keep its Navy on a parity with that of any other single nation in the world.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate longer; but I ask permission to insert some other tables that I have in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, following the granting of that permission, I would like to say that as long as any other nation in the world anywhere near our equal has the power—and a vast majority of the nations of Europe which do not begin to approach us in population insist on maintaining armies from twice to five times the size of that maintained in the United States; as long as England, Japan, France, and Italy excel us in cruiser strength; as long as the nations of the world owe us the combined sum of $26,000,000,000; as long as we have thousands of miles of seacoast, and ships carrying our commerce to every part of the world; as long as we have possessions in the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean, the Philippines, Hawaii, and Guam; with the hatreds existing all over this world, hundreds of years old, and virtually armed camps all over Europe; with debts piled on debts which many nations would gladly fight to throw off—as long as these conditions exist, the United States can not afford to take a position in the matter of her first line of defense, the Navy, with such a small standing Army as we possess, which is inferior to that of any other nation on the globe.

Our interests to-day are greater than those of England. While our territory may not be so widely scattered, our population is greatly in excess of that of Great Britain, and 40 per cent of that of the entire British Empire. I have no desire to cause any hostility between England and our own country. I feel that if the navies of these two great nations are kept on a parity, it will be conducive to good feeling. But there will be constant agitation if the navy of one or the other becomes predominant in any one line of equipment.

For these reasons I shall support the cruiser bill, because we have a small Army, and with a small Army we must have a good strong first line of defense behind which we can recruit such forces as we may need should danger become imminent.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that the deficiency appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The clerk will report the substitute offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee on page 16, after line 15, insert the following:

BUREAU OF PROHIBITION

For expenses not to exceed $250,000 for dissemination of information and appeal for law observance and law enforcement, including the necessary printing in connection therewith, and for expenses in connection with travel of officers and employees in attending meetings of sheriffs and chiefs of police and other meetings in the interest of law enforcement, to remain available until June 30, 1930.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dill	Kendrick	Sheppard
Barkley	Edge	Keyes	Simmons
Bingham	Fess	McKellar	Smith
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Smoot
Blaine	Frazier	Mayfield	Steck
Bratton	George	Metcalf	Steiwer
Brookhart	Glass	Neely	Swanson
Broussard	Glenn	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Bruce	Hale	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Burton	Harris	Oddie	Tydings
Capper	Hastings	Overman	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hawes	Ransdell	Wagner
Copeland	Hayden	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Heflin	Robinson, Ind.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Johnson	Sackett	Warren
Deneen	Jones	Schall	Waterman

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TYSON] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the rest of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to amend the substitute which I have heretofore offered. I will ask that the substitute be read with the language added to it which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, after line 15, in lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee, insert:

BUREAU OF PROHIBITION

For expenses not to exceed $250,000 for dissemination of information and appeal for law observance and law enforcement, including the necessary printing in connection therewith, and for expenses in connection with travel of officers and employees in attending meetings of sheriffs and chiefs of police and other meetings in the interest of law enforcement; for increasing the enforcement force, $1,000,000; in all, $1,250,000, to remain available until June 30, 1930.

Mr. JONES. This is offered as a substitute for the amendment that is in the bill now relating to prohibition, in lieu of the $25,000,000 provision.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say on the part of the committee, so far as I can do so, that the amendment will be accepted; and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let us have it read. Some of us have just entered the Chamber and would like to know what the proposition is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will again read the proposed substitute.

The Chief Clerk again read the proposed substitute as modified.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, are we to understand that the substitute is accepted by the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; by the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee did not accept it. I am a member of the committee and never heard of it before.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I misunderstood the Senator from Massachusetts. What did the Senator ask?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I asked if the substitute had been accepted by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. So far as he is able to do so, but he can not control the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The chairman, so far as he can do so, but not the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, when the Senate remembers that I have suggested an additional appropriation of as much as $270,000,000 for the enforcement of prohibition, it can well imagine the pain, not to say acute distress, with which I receive the suggestion, first, that only the additional sum of $25,000,000 should be appropriated for this purpose, and then the suggestion that only the additional sum of $1,250,000 should be appropriated for it. If anything ever declined in a paltry diminuendo scale, it certainly did so when even the proposition to appropriate such a small additional sum as $25,000,000 for the enforcement of prohibition dwindled to such a petty sum as $1,250,000.

One interesting fact has been developed by the debate in relation to pending amendment, and that is the fact that two of the most enthusiastic prohibitionists in the Senate are entirely at odds with each other as to the practical outcome of the "noble" prohibition experiment. Yesterday the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] pictured the present outlook of prohibition enforcement in such roseate and glowing language that I almost felt as if there was a possibility of my becoming a convert to the good cause myself. And yet here to-day we have the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] admitting that there are now 50 bootleggers in the United States for every one of the old saloons. Indeed, the Senator from Georgia did not hesitate to acknowledge—and I think I use his very language—that prohibition enforcement at the present time is a mere farce.

It does seem to me that the instruments in the prohibition band ought to be taught in some way or other to keep better time with each other. That hopeless discrepancy of view between the two Senators demonstrates how hard it is even for the prohibitionists to form any reliable conclusions about prohibition. Even the sum of $25,000,000, as a proper additional sum for the enforcement of prohibition, appears mean and despicable when contrasted with the amounts that prohibition officials, who have been or are in the best position to express an opinion, have declared to be necessary.

Only a few days ago I called attention in the Senate to what Mr. Doran, the Prohibition Commissioner, had said upon this subject, and I desire to avail myself of this occasion to declare that he has always left upon me the impression of being an able, courteous, and just-minded official. When a hearing was held a short time ago by the House Appropriations Committee with respect to pending Treasury and Post Office Department appropriations he was reported as saying:

It is a matter of policy whether Congress wants to embark in the police business in regard to prohibition. If it does, it will take $300,000,000 and a system of United States courts covering the land.

Now, that is not the testimony of some mere prohibition or antiprohibition zealot. Nor is it the testimony of some poorly informed individual in relation to something that has lain entirely outside of the province of his own personal experience. It is the testimony of the man of all others in the United States who ought to be able to form an intelligent judgment as to just how much money will have to be appropriated by Congress if prohibition is to be enforced.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has the Senator all the language used by Doctor Doran?

Mr. BRUCE. I have just read it word for word.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. BRUCE. While I think that there is no need for placing it in the RECORD again, yet I gladly read it:

It is a matter of policy whether Congress wants to embark in the police business with regard to prohibition. If it does it will take $300,000,000 and a system of United States courts covering the land.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I take it he was referring to one system of enforcing prohibition.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; but he was referring to the only system—that is to say, the police system—by which it can be enforced.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand it to be his position that if it devoted its efforts mainly to the arrest of illicit alcohol at the source the Federal Government could accomplish more than if it were to try to detect and punish every little offender.

Mr. BRUCE. No; his idea is the idea that has prevailed in the Prohibition Department ever since prohibition went into effect, or certainly since Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews became Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; that is to say, the idea that the effort of the Federal Government should be to suppress the larger sources of supply of liquor; in other words, to arrest and punish the big offenders; and that the State should police prohibition violations more closely than they have heretofore done.

But the Senator from Texas begs the question. The States have not been willing to make up the difference between the annual Federal appropriations for the enforcement of prohibition and the total sum necessary for its thorough enforcement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was attempting to give my conception of Doctor Doran's view of this subject. I understand it to be his idea that better results could be accomplished if the Federal Government concentrated its efforts on suppressing the supply of industrial alcohol at the source.

Mr. BRUCE. That is right in part. That was one of the ideas of General Andrews.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then he went on to say that if we undertook in addition to that to use the resources of the Federal Government in prosecuting and convicting every offender, small or large, it would take $300,000,000.

Mr. BRUCE. He did not say that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understood that to be his position.

Mr. BRUCE. Doctor Doran ought to make himself a little clearer next time, and it will probably be well for him to call to his aid the Senator from Texas who always expresses himself, as I gladly bear testimony, with an unusual degree of clarity. I believe that Doctor Doran was conservative when he expressed those ideas.

A few days ago, speaking without premeditation, as I am too apt to do, I referred to the testimony of Mr. Buckner, recently United States district attorney for one of the districts of the State of New York, before the Senate subcommittee which dealt with the subject of prohibition in the year 1926. In doing so, I did not correctly recall what he had said. My memory at the time was that what he had said applied only to the southern district of New York, whereas I find on refreshing my recollection that it applied mainly to the entire State of New York. I now gladly make the proper correction. What he said was this:

> If, however, you do not abolish jury trials, but you stick to the Federal constitutional right of jury trial as it is to-day, and if you take the estimate that I have figured out from courts of special sessions in New York City—no better place to go to for information as to the relative length of trials which are 5 to 1—then it is obvious that instead of 17 courts in my district I should have 85.

To that extent Mr. Buckner was speaking of his own district and not of the entire State of New York.

Continuing he further said:

> Instead of 30 courts for the entire State there should be 150 new Federal judges for the entire State of New York under the present system.

Think of that!

> There should be 150 new Federal judges for the entire State of New York under the present system. And although there would be various shifts and changes you would not quite need five times as many prohibition agents—perhaps two times would do—there are other things in which you would need more, and it is not far wrong to simply take the arbitrary 5 to 1 and say that the annual cost of enforcing prohibition, taking both the Department of Justice and the Prohibition Unit, the whole of machinery that I have outlined to you would be $75,000,000 a year.

That is to say, for the State of New York alone, according to Mr. Buckner, a very able and faithful representative of the Federal Government during his term of office, the sum of $75,000,000 annually would be necessary for the enforcement of prohibition in the State of New York.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, how does the Senator from Maryland reconcile that statement with the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that $13,000,000 is as much as is needed in the whole country?

Mr. BRUCE. I am coming to that in a moment.

Those figures given us by Mr. Buckner are all the more significant when it is recalled that there are far fewer arrests for drunkenness in the city of New York in proportion to population than in many of the Southern States which are preposterously termed "dry." New York is a great civilized city. Like all civilized communities, it knows how to practice self-restraint. The existence of prohibition in a community, as I have often said, is not a token of a high order of civilization; it is a token of a low order of civilization; that is to say, it is indicative of a community in which moral impulses on the whole are so feeble and the power of individual restraint on the whole is so poorly developed, that men can not drink except to excess and without bringing down the penalties of prohibition upon their heads.

I brought out the fact here a year or so ago that while there is only one arrest for drunkenness for a certain number of people in the city of New York—I forget the exact number at this moment—there are 274 for the same number of people in three of the largest cities of one of the Southern States, which, after all, is but a typical Southern State, so far as drinking is concerned. No wonder that in certain communities like those prohibition should obtain among moral and respectable people a foothold which it is powerless to obtain in communities where men have more self-restraint.

I have no wish, of course, to bear hardly on any particular Southern State, if for no other reason because, as I have more than once had occasion to observe, a few years ago the fact was brought out by one of the reports of the Department of Justice that 70 per cent of all the distilleries seized by Federal prohibition agents in the United States were seized in the 11 old Confederate Southern States.

So if $75,000,000 is necessary for the enforcement of prohibition in one single State of the Union—the State of New York—and that a State where there are, in proportion to population, relatively few arrests for drunkenness, pray what total appropriation is requisite for all the 48 States of the Union? In my opinion, Mr. Doran was but expressing himself with extreme moderation when he said that to enforce prohibition through the instrumentality of the proper police agencies throughout the country an expenditure of $300,000,000 would be necessary, to say nothing of the courts, which, he also said, would under those circumstances have to cover the face of the land. The only reason why our friends the prohibitionists do not ask for the $300,000,000 is because they dare not ask for it.

They know that then, if not sooner, the people of the United States would revolt; that then, if not sooner, the people of the United States would realize that if this vile and detestable system of tyranny is ever to be enforced it can only be enforced by calling in the aid of such a colossal and elaborate system of oppression as the world, logically familiar as it has been with oppression, has scarcely ever known. That is the reason why the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] makes his comparatively modest application for $25,000,000; that is the reason why the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is not willing to ask for even $25,000,000, but asks for his picayune appropriation of $1,250,000.

Mr. President, under ordinary conditions, I would vote for an additional appropriation of $25,000,000 for prohibition enforcement. I have never voted against any appropriation for its enforcement since I have been here, nor have I ever withheld my aid from any effort to increase the number of Federal judges to such an extent as to take care judicially of prohibition enforcement. So long as a criminal law is on the statute book it should be enforced, and those who violate it must take the risks, whatever they may be, of violating it, and that no matter how unnatural and indefensible the statute to be enforced may be. I have secured appointments in the prohibition service for individuals, and the last word that I have said to each of them is, "Please do not disgrace me or yourself by failing to do your official duty with the utmost measure of fidelity." No other feelings could any man entertain who really comprehends the basis on which our system of constitutional government rests.

I shall not vote for the proposed appropriation of $25,000,000, and for these reasons: When the Secretary of the Treasury, the highest fiscal officer of the Government, and Mr. Doran, the Prohibition Commissioner, and Mr. McBride, the general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, if he is correctly reported in the press this morning, all say that at this time it would be inexpedient to place any more money in the hands of the Prohibition Unit for the purposes of enforcement——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that particular point?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Did I understand the Senator correctly—I thought I did—to say that he was partially influenced in his vote by what the general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League said?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes. Ah, the Senator recollects the old Latin maxim I am sure, "fas est ab hoste doceri"—it is legitimate to learn a lesson even from an enemy.

Mr. McBride certainly ought to know what is best for his own cause. It is fair to assume that he has it at heart as deeply as anybody in the United States, and if he does not know what is best for his cause, certainly Mr. Doran, the Prohibition Commissioner, ought to know.

Of course, it is not my special office to enter into any defense of the Secretary of the Treasury. I am referring to him as I would to any other incumbent of that great office. His splendid reputation as a great Secretary of the Treasury and a great captain of industry and his generally established reputation as an admirable and lovable man in all the personal and social relations of life call for no defense from me; and, least of all, would I attempt to defend him when he is attacked by such a sanctimonious pharisee as ex-Gov. Gifford Pinchot, who is so lost to all sense of decency as to come here and, in that malignant letter which has just been read, pour out the personal and political rancor of his heart not only upon the Secretary of the Treasury but upon our former highly esteemed associate, Senator Pepper, and our equally highly esteemed present associate, Senator REED.

Everyone who knows this man knows that he is nothing but a chartered libertine, so far as acrid detraction is concerned. In parting with him I will only express the hope that he will take to heart the perils of such virulent calumny as that which once led Dr. Samuel Johnson to say that a man who calls all the world a scoundrel convicts at least one.

As I have said, the Secretary of the Treasury tells us that the additional sum of $25,000,000 for prohibition enforcement can not be used to good purpose at the present time; and when he says that he is simply following in the footsteps of Mr. Doran, who some of you will recollect a short time ago, when it was suggested that he might be given more prohibition agents, said, "I have all the prohibition agents I want. Those that I have now are arresting more offenders than the courts can take care of." And even the Anti-Saloon League, I repeat, speaking through Mr. McBride, its general counsel, though responding, of course, only to an impulse of selfish prudence, says, or is reported as saying this morning, that this additional appropriation of $25,000,000 is not desirable at the present time.

No; before you need any such sum of money as my good friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] suggests, either a vast number of additional Federal judges for handling prohibition cases should be appointed or the Federal commissioners throughout the land should be clothed with the power to hear and to render final decision in prohibition cases, subject to the right of the citizen, of course, to crave a jury trial if he chooses to crave it. When Congress begins by appropriating additional sums of money at the present time for the enforcement of prohibition it is beginning at the wrong end. Multiply courts and other judicial agencies first; and then additional appropriations of money for enforcement could be far more effectively employed.

As illustrating how ineffectual even such a sum as $300,000,000 might be to enforce prohibition in this country, I desire to call attention just for a moment to an article which appeared in the Detroit Free Press of the 13th instant; and, mind you, the Detroit Free Press is a paper which, by some train of reasoning absolutely inconceivable to me, reached the conclusion that that poor woman sentenced to life imprisonment in the State of Michigan for violation of the Volstead Act was justly sentenced, and not entitled to the clemency of man, or even to that prompt compassion which, to her honor be it said, ever dwells in the heart of woman.

The article to which I refer is headed:

TEMPTATIONS GREATER THAN AVERAGE MAN CAN WITHSTAND—EXPLANATION GIVEN FOR BREAKDOWN IN MORALE OF FEDERAL PROHIBITION UNIT IN DETROIT

Fifty millions of dollars' worth of contraband wines, whiskies, and beer was smuggled into the United States during 1928 within 25 miles of the Detroit City Hall. The grand total of rum-running operations rose last year to a figure higher than ever before, and serves once again to emphasize the fact that the counties of St. Clair, Macomb, Wayne, and Monroe for the past five years have been the scene of the largest and most profitable law-violation conspiracy existing anywhere in the world.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From what authority is the Senator reading?

Mr. BRUCE. The Detroit Free Press, a paper, as I said a moment ago, that defends even life imprisonment, and would, I suppose, be prepared even to go to the length of defending capital punishment for violations of the Volstead Act.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is a special article, is it not?

Mr. BRUCE. It is an article by James Haswell; but I do not suppose the Detroit Free Press allows anything to be published in its columns that it does not think is deserving, for one reason or another, of a place in them.

The article goes on:

Between $45,000,000 and $50,000,000 worth of liquor was smuggled in the year before!

About $40,000,000 came in during 1926!

And last year $50,000,000! Think of it!

Yes; I say, think of it! And, of course, that is entirely in harmony with what Mrs. Mabel Willebrandt said a few days ago in her report as an assistant in the Department of Justice. She stated that in the last three years the smuggling of liquor into this country from Canada had increased no less than 75 per cent. And Mr. Whalen, the new head of the New York City police force, has just informed us that there are 20,000 speakeasies in that city.

There is much more, of course, that I could say on this subject, because my heart is full—perhaps too full—of it. I will content myself, however, with simply saying that I favor the substitute offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and disapprove the committee amendment for the special reasons that I have mentioned.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, as an amendment to the substitute of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], I move to strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by him down to the words "for increasing the enforcement force"; to strike out, after the word "force," the figures "$1,000,000" and insert "$24,000,000"; to strike out "in all, $1,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "to be made immediately available, and," so that if amended the substitute would read:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee on page 16, after line 16, insert the following:

"For increasing the enforcement force, $24,000,000, to be made immediately available, and to remain available until June 30, 1930."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, when the question of larger sums for prohibition enforcement was before the Senate a few weeks ago, I took the position that while prohibition had been and continued to be a blessing, I was entirely willing to vote for additional appropriations to make it a greater blessing.

I endeavored to show that prohibition was being well enforced, and gave the figures in relation to enforcement, the number of arrests that had been made during the last fiscal year, the number of automobiles seized, the number of convictions, and other facts, comparing those figures with the figures of the previous fiscal year, and showing distinct progress. I did not deny, however, that prohibition could be better enforced with additional funds. Adhering to the position taken then, I shall support the Harris proposal.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I have before me the substitute the Senator from Washington has offered. May I inquire what items are to be covered under this $250,000 for dissemination of information and appeal?

Mr. JONES. That is covered in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, suggesting—and he got the suggestion, probably, from the Prohibition Commissioner—that there should be an educational campaign carried on, that that would be of great assistance in enforcement. What the exact nature of it is to be I am not prepared to say.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I hope this particular matter may go over until to-morrow. If there is anybody in this country who has not become educated in the last 25 years in the discussion of this question, he is simply hopeless, he can not become educated, and I am not willing to expend any large sum of money to educate people in the matter of prohibition.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator are along the very lines I had intended to cover.

Mr. GLASS. I am sorry to have anticipated the Senator.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I would like to know why money should be taken from the Treasury of the United States to be used by a force that is interested in giving biased facts to the country.

If it was intended that this money was to be used by some neutral agency to obtain information which might be for the good of the people of the United States, I would no doubt subscribe to it, but I shall certainly oppose giving money to a set of people who, we know, are now using poisons, and are now violating the law by disseminating information along the lines which the Senator wishes now to legalize.

It is also provided that these officers shall be sent out to attend conventions all over the country. What does the Senator expect these people to learn from other enforcement officers?

Mr. JONES. Some of the discussions with police officers, with sheriffs, and men of that kind, I think would do a great deal of good. It might not exactly educate them, or give them information they have not had, but I know that in my own State we have had meetings of sheriffs and meetings of police officers, and they have led to more hearty and earnest cooperation on the part of those officials with the enforcement officers.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Does the Senator expect to limit these expenditures to the prohibition law?

Mr. JONES. That is all this applies to, of course.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Why does not the Senator offer an amendment providing some $250,000 to suppress murderers and the fellows who commit the crimes of rape and arson, and other crimes, in this country?

Mr. JONES. When we have provision by law——

Mr. BROUSSARD. There is the Volstead law. Until just this moment I was ready to vote for the $25,000,000; I told the Senator from Georgia I would vote for that. I have always voted for all the funds the department wanted for the purpose of enforcing prohibition. But I have this complaint to make, funds are now being used to entrap people, and some of those funds are being used to purchase liquor.

Only last month I read a statement in the press to the effect that in the trial of a man for a felony, his defense in court was that his duties as an undercover man required him to buy some liquor and drink it so as to find out if it was liquor, which had deranged him, and he pleaded insanity in court.

Last week I heard of a woman who uses in her own way the grace and the virtues that were intended to be used in a proper way. She induced men to bring her into a room, where she was given poisoned liquor, and she became blind overnight.

These are the crimes prohibitionists are committing under these statutes. I am willing to vote $500,000,000 to enforce this law, but I am not willing to have the old Russian methods adopted for the purpose of doing it.

Mr. JONES. The Senator certainly does not assume that any of this money would be used for such purposes?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Why are these people to go on jaunts? These fellows will go to some city with United States money in their pockets, and get somebody to sell a drink so that they can arrest him.

Mr. JONES. The Senator can not conclude anything of that kind from this particular amendment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. They would be permitted to go to other cities and receive their traveling expenses. The department is now giving the agents money to induce people to sell liquor when they have no intention of selling liquor.

I had told the Senator from Georgia I was going to vote for the $25,000,000. I shall certainly not vote for any item like this. I shall vote against the substitute as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Georgia unless this $250,000 is eliminated from the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, there may be some confusion in the minds of some with respect to the purposes designed by the substitute amendment of the Senator from Washington. I am not clear whether that appropriation—I think it is $250,000—is to be used to disseminate information regarding the use or misuse of liquor, the proper use of it or the improper use of it, or is to be used to disseminate political propaganda to keep the Volstead law on the statute books and the eighteenth amendment in our Constitution.

I am perfectly willing to vote for an appropriation that will encourage temperance and for an appropriation that will lead to the dissemination of unbiased information and the truth with respect to that which is evil in itself in the use of liquor, and that which is harmless in itself in the use of liquor, to the end that we may develop what was well on its way before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment—real, genuine, temperance. But if the appropriation is designed for the purpose of disseminating information that will have for its effect political propaganda, either for or against the Volstead Act or the eighteenth amendment, if the money is to be expended out of the Public Treasury to bolster up some law or to defeat some law, then I am opposed to it or to the appropriation of public funds for any political purpose.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What other purpose could there be? Does the Senator expect the Prohibition Department to issue unbiased reports, or does he expect it to oppose prohibition? I would not expect it to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will somebody who has the amendment read the particular language? I apologize for making the request; but a couple of us were called out when the substitute was presented, and I do not know the wording of the amendment that is being discussed.

Mr. GLASS. For that reason, Mr. President, I suggest that the proposed substitute be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow, so that we can see what it provides and try to understand what it means.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest that if that is the wish, and it is so ordered, I will yield the floor. If the debate is to continue, I prefer to occupy some time in discussing not only the amendment of the Senator from Washington but the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia as well. Unless the suggestion is made and unanimously agreed to that the matter go over until to-morrow, I prefer to continue the discussion now.

Mr. JONES and Mr. BRUCE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to state that in my judgment it would be wise to let the matter go over until to-morrow. I hardly think there is any chance of our voting to-night. I do want to say, however, in answer to the Senator's suggestion, that I do not think the money is intended to bolster up the eighteenth amendment or to discuss it. I assume that is in the permanent law. I think the educational features should be along the lines suggested by the Senator, and I think that is the way it will be expended.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, in this connection permit me to suggest in all seriousness that a proposal to appropriate public funds for the purpose of disseminating knowledge concerning the Volstead Act and its violations is a gratuitous assumption and that a legislative body characterizes the people of this country as ignorant of their own law. For one I can not take that position. I do not believe, no matter how holy a legislative body may be or how holy the membership may be, that the great rank and file of the people of the country are not just as loyal and true to the Constitution and laws of our country as are those who make those laws or administer them. To impute to them a suggestion that we, in a superior attitude, must go out and instruct them as to their duties in the observance of their law is not my conception of a democracy. That might well prevail under the tyranny of a dictator, but it is not my conception of the relationship of the people to the Government in a democracy such as we have.

Therefore, Mr. President, if the purpose of the amendment is to disseminate propaganda, and that is what it will be, to lecture the people of America, to enable some public official, perchance some one who, on the witness stand under oath, has given a certificate of character to Mr. Daugherty, or some one of that type or character, to go out and lecture the American people on their duties and obligations to the Government, then, sir, we are assuming that our people are incompetent to govern themselves. It is not the Congress that is going to say whether or not the law is going to be enforced. It is the people of the United States who are going to say whether or not the law is going to be enforced. Law has no other sanction than that which abides in the conscience of the people who make up the Government.

So, as I said, I do not want to discuss the amendment to-day or what I believe to be the fundamental issue involved if the matter is going over until another day. I do not oppose the substitute or the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia upon the grounds upon which others have opposed it. I shall oppose it upon what I believe to be fundamental grounds. I do not care to enter upon a discussion of that kind at this time. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, before that request is put will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. I simply desire to say that I rather like the educational feature of the proposition of the Senator from Washington. It reminds me of a very curt and very unjust thing said by John Randolph of Roanoke. Some one came to ask whether he would subscribe a sum of money for the education of young Methodists for the ministry. He was a most bigoted member of the Episcopal Church. He said, "Of course I will do so, because if they become educated they will cease to be Methodists." My hope is that if the people of the United States can only be thoroughly educated under the influence of the propaganda suggested by the Senator from Washington they will cease to be prohibitionists.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw my request for unanimous consent, and I yield now to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is evident, I am sorry to say, that we shall not be able to finish consideration of the appropriation bill to-night. It will be remembered that I called it up the first thing Monday morning and have taken advantage of every opportunity since to keep it before the Senate. It is my purpose to submit a motion for a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock. I should like to make it 11 o'clock, but I am informed that that would not be possible.

I want to state in this connection that we stand here in the way of the cruiser bill. The Senator in charge of that bill has been very true to it and has been very patient, and has allowed the Senate to consider the treaty unmolested. The Committee on Appropriations has done the same thing. It comes down to the fact that there are nine more of these large appropriation bills which have to be acted on, or we shall be in disgrace.

I am as anxious to see the Senator from Maine make progress with his cruiser bill as I am to see any other business of the Senate pushed forward, but I can not annoy him all the time and certainly he ought not to and will not, I am sure, annoy me so long as I am in charge of an appropriation bill. But I must have the cooperation of the members of my committee so that when they get notice of a meeting I may have their presence or else an acceptance of what the two or three of us who do attend the meetings may decide upon.

I presume the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who has offered the amendment, wishes to make some observations concerning it that we may consider before morning, but I would like to have all those who desire to discuss the amendment be here when the Senate convenes so that we may get along with the business of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not care to speak to-day.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I stated this afternoon that I would ask the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to move a recess to-night until 11 o'clock to-morrow. I will say now that I have talked with the Senator from Kansas, and it has been found impossible to carry out that suggestion on account of certain committee meetings which are to be held in the morning. So I shall be entirely agreeable to the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, in accordance with an order of the Senate heretofore made, refers to the appropriate committees the Executive messages transmitted to the Senate by the President to-day.

RECESS

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow noon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, January 18, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, January 17, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5240. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Natchez, Miss.

S. Con. Res. 31. Concurrent resolution to print the briefs of counsel and transcript of record filed with the Supreme Court of the United States in the St. Louis & O'Fallon Railway case as a Senate document and for extra copies thereof.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15569) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes."

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may sit during sessions of the House for the purpose of conducting hearings upon radio legislation and for consideration of such legislation.

Mr. CLARKE. Reserving the right to object, do I understand this includes hearings on the Crowther bill?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. It includes hearings generally on the subject of radio, although the hearings are immediately directed to another bill, but the whole subject matter is under consideration.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I understand, the gentleman asks this by direction of the committee?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. By direction of the committee; yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if the committee will give any consideration to revision of the shipping laws and to a change in the limited liability provision of the shipping law?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I can not answer that question definitely. The committee has already voted to take up two or three matters of legislation. As soon as these are disposed of, it may be possible to take up the matter to which the gentleman has directed attention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an announcement. Several Members have spoken about their interests in a bill that has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture familiarly known as the oleomargarine bill. Mr. HAUGEN, the chairman of the committee, is to appear before the Rules Committee to-morrow morning to request a rule for the consideration of that bill. Several Members wanted to know when the hearing was to take place.

Mr. BANKHEAD. At what hour?

Mr. SNELL. Ten o'clock in the morning.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 15569 and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$958,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,712,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, as to each of such amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Makes the allowance for clerk hire at United States consulates available, as proposed by the Senate, for the payment of salaries of clerks during the period of transit to and from their homes in the United States.

On Nos. 2 and 3: Strikes out the increase of $10,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation for transportation of Diplomatic, Consular, and Foreign Service officers.

On Nos. 4, 5, and 6: Makes technical corrections in the bill in three items under the Department of Justice.

On Nos. 7 and 8, relating to the administrative appropriation for the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce: Makes the allotment for personal services in the District of Columbia not to exceed $263,210, as proposed by the Senate, instead of not to exceed $229,570, as proposed by the House, and fixes the appropriation under the paragraph at $958,000 instead of $935,000, as proposed by the House, and $968,640, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 9: Appropriates $938,500 for export industries activities under the Department of Commerce, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $923,500, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 10 and 11: Corrects totals under the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to conform to conference action.

On Nos. 12 and 13: Appropriates $370,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $360,000, as proposed by the House, for the Alaska general service under the Bureau of Fisheries.

MILTON W. SHREVE,
GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
ERNEST R. ACKERMAN,
W. B. OLIVER,
ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, I may state that this bill when it passed the House carried $111,832,887.43. When it passed the Senate it carried $111,901,527.43. The amount added by the Senate was $68,640. The Senate has receded from $20,640 and the House has receded from $48,000.

The bill as agreed upon to-day totals $111,880,887.43. The bill as agreed upon slightly exceeds the Budget estimates by $6,540.

The Senate added only 13 amendments to the bill, of which 8 were technical amendments.

The Senate receded from an increase of $10,000 for transportation, Diplomatic, Consular, and Foreign Service officers.

Of the Senate increase for the aeronautics branch, Department of Commerce, the Senate receded from $10,640 and the House accepted $24,000.

The House agreed to the Senate increase of $15,000 for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for the citrus fruit industry.

The House agreed to the Senate increase of $10,000 for the Alaskan general service under the Bureau of Fisheries.

The conference report is a complete agreement, and when adopted by the House concludes final action on the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will remember my speaking to him about the $50,000 added in the House for the immigration inspectors; was that taken care of all right?

Mr. SHREVE. There was no change made in the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. It was all right as we put it in the House?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Some one from the department called me up and thought there had been an error in the way it was put in the bill—that it was not in the right place. I could not understand that.

Mr. SHREVE. No error could take place unless there was a mistake in the figures.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman thinks it is all right, I am satisfied.

Mr. SHREVE. I have been informed by the clerks of the committees that it is all right.

Mr. SNELL. I am quite sure it is. They were probably misinformed.

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; because we were quite anxious to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. SNELL. I knew that and that is why I spoke to the gentleman in advance.

Mr. SHREVE. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 15089, the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the conference report on the Department of the Interior appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 16, 17, 19, 22, 23, and 26.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the purchase of a proportionate interest in the existing storage reservoir of the Warm Springs project, $230,000; in all, $236,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For operation and maintenance, $20,000; for continuation of construction, $1,112,000: Provided, That the unexpended balance of $138,000 of the appropriation of $1,500,000 contained in the act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1929 (45 Stat. 277) shall remain available during the fiscal year 1930 for such continuation of construction; in all, $1,132,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$7,978,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$157,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert: "$36,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert: "$5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$219,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 4, 20, 30, 39, 40, and 41.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
FRANK MURPHY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and embodied in the accompanying conference report, as to each of such amendments, namely:

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

On No. 2: Makes the appropriation for industrial use of the Pima Indians immediately available.

On Nos. 3 and 21: Correct the structure of the bill, by transferring the position of an item.

On No. 5: Makes an appropriation of $25,000 for repair, improvement, replacement, or construction of additional public-school buildings within Indian reservations in Arizona, to be equipped and maintained by the State of Arizona.

On No. 6: Makes an appropriation of $7,000 for a warehouse at the Fort Mojave Indian Boarding School.

On Nos. 7 and 8: Appropriates for 900 pupils at Haskell Institute as proposed by the Senate instead of 850 as proposed by the House.

On No. 9: Appropriates $20,000 for the purchase of additional lands at the Haskell Institute as proposed by the Senate, but eliminates the appropriation of $70,000 for construction of new dormitory and gymnasium for girls, proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 17, 23, and 24: Correct totals.

On No. 14: Appropriates $60,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $48,000 as proposed by the House for maintenance of Shawnee Sanatorium.

On No. 15: Appropriates $94,600 as proposed by the House instead of $394,600 as proposed by the Senate for the Rapid City Sanatorium School.

On Nos. 16 and 18: Makes no appropriation for construction or repairs and improvements at the Kiowa Hospital instead of the appropriation of $60,000 from tribal funds as proposed by the House or the appropriation of $60,000 as a gratuity appropriation as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 19 and 22: Appropriates $60,000 of tribal funds of the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches as proposed by the House instead of $60,000 as a gratuity as proposed by the Senate.

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

On Nos. 25 and 26: Appropriates $500,000 for continuation of construction on the Sun River project as proposed by the Senate instead of $213,000 as proposed by the House, and restores the House language requiring issuance of public notice.

On No. 27: Makes the appropriation for survey and examination of water storage reservoir sites on the headwaters of the Truckee and Carson Rivers available for boring of test wells in the Truckee Meadows as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 28: Appropriates $230,000 for the purchase of a proportionate interest in the existing storage reservoir of the Warm Springs project for the benefit of the Vale project instead of $650,000 for continuation of construction of the Vale project, including $130,000 for purchase of such interest in the storage reservoir, as proposed by the Senate, and no appropriation for continuation of construction for the Vale project as proposed by the House.

On No. 29: Appropriates $1,112,000 with reappropriation of $138,000 for continuation of construction of the Kittitas division of the Yakima project instead of a new appropriation of $1,500,000 and reappropriation of the unexpended balance as proposed by the Senate, or new appropriation of $862,000 with reappropriation of $138,000 as proposed by the House.

On No. 31: Corrects total.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

On No. 32: Appropriates $45,000 for topographic survey of the boundaries of the proposed Shenandoah National Park as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 33: Makes $157,500 of the appropriation for stream gauging available only for State cooperation, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $165,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 34: Corrects total.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

On Nos. 35 and 37: Corrects totals.

On No. 36: Appropriates $5,000 for a residence for the United States commissioner in Glacier National Park, instead of $6,000, as proposed by the Senate, and no appropriation, as proposed by the House.

On No. 38: Makes available for 1930 the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the construction of water-supply and camp-ground facilities at Glacier Point, Yosemite National Park, as proposed by the Senate.

DISAGREEMENT

The committee conferees have not agreed to the following Senate amendments:

On No. 1: With reference to compensation of matrons, etc., in the Indian Service.

On No. 4: With reference to contracts for payment of tuition of Indian children in public and special schools.

On No. 20: Placing the position of superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes in the competitive classified civil service.

On No. 30: With reference to crediting the farmers' irrigation district, North Platte reclamation project, with the sum of $2,376.45.

On No. 39: With reference to condemnation of privately owned lands in national parks.

On No. 40: With reference to construction of the transmountain road in Glacier National Park.

On No. 41: With reference to quarters, etc., for the superintendent and other employees who are required to live at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
FRANK MURPHY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the report which is now before the House is a partial agreement on the differences between the House and the Senate with reference to the Interior Department appropriation bill. The report and statement before the House are signed by two of the three conferees on the part of the House—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] and myself. The third member of the House conferees is the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]. I think it is only fair to say that he sat in at nearly all of the conferences had on the consideration of the bill. At the last meeting he was not able to attend, but he was entirely in harmony with the position taken by the other conferees, and said that we might sign his name to the report if desired. That not being in accordance with the practice of our committee, we did not deem it wise to do so. But the report represents the harmonious views of all three members.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to ask any action on the amendments in disagreement?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; as soon as the report is adopted I purpose to take up the amendments in disagreement. Some of these amendments are not actually in disagreement but are of a legislative character which had to be brought back. There are three about which a real disagreement existed in the conference and the fourth one that was a matter of some discussion in the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What about amendments 39 and 40?

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall discuss those when reached. I hope the House will instruct the conferees to further adhere in our disagreement as to them.

Now, as to the partial agreement, I will ask unanimous consent for leave to extend my remarks, and in doing so will insert certain tables to which I am about to refer.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Under the permission given me to extend my remarks I will include a statement as to the effect of the amendments. I will say that all of the amendments that affect the money in the bill are disposed of in the pending conference report. The amount of the bill as passed by the Senate was $2,176,500 higher than the amount as it passed the House. As to that difference, the House receded to the amount of $903,500. The Senate receded on items which amount to $1,273,000, and the bill as now recommended by the conferees is $157,882.76 below the Budget estimate. The following statement gives the details:

Amount of bill as passed the Senate	$286,858,463.02

[2] This item was estimated for by the Budget and carried in the bill as passed by the House as an appropriation from Indian tribal funds. The Senate inserted the item as a gratuity appropriation and final action resulted in the item being eliminated from the bill.
[3] This item was estimated for by the Budget and carried in the bill as passed by the House as an appropriation from Indian tribal funds. The Senate inserted the item as a gratuity appropriation but final action resulted in the provision being carried as a tribal fund item.
[4] The Budget estimate on this item includes a supplemental estimate for $300,000, received after the bill had passed the House.

Then, in accordance with the practice of this subcommittee heretofore, I will insert Table B, which shows the annual appropriations under the Department of the Interior, including deficiencies, for the years 1916 to 1930, inclusive, which I think is of interest to this House:

TABLE B.—Annual appropriations under the Department of the Interior, including deficiencies, fiscal years 1916–1930

[Exclusive of permanent and indefinite appropriations]

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 21, after the word "practicable," insert: "Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, physicians, nurses, and other hospital employees, and stockmen provided for in this act shall not be included within the limitations on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912 (U. S. C. p. 692, sec. 58)."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in that amendment. I will simply state that that amendment restores to the bill language that was reported to the House from the committee, which went out in the House on a point of order upon the ground that it is legislation. Of course, it is legislation. It is a provision that has been carried for a great number of years—I do not know how long. It is a limitation on the total salaries that can be paid on any one reservation for a certain class of employees, and the Indian Service states that some of these reservations are of such importance that to leave out this language would seriously handicap the work the Government is carrying on.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 4: Page 40, in line 3, after the word "prescribed," insert a comma and add the following language: "but formal contracts shall not be required, for compliance with section 3744 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C. p. 1310, sec. 16), for payment of tuition of Indian children in public schools or of Indian children in schools for the deaf and dumb, blind, or mentally deficient."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, as to that amendment I move that the House recede and concur. That is in the same situation as the amendment just referred to. It is language that has been carried in the bill for some time, which went out in the House on the point of order and has been restored by the Senate and brought back for a separate vote. The only effect of it is to waive formal contracts, and I think that carries with it the necessity for advertising, where these Indian children are placed in schools for the deaf and dumb, blind, and mentally deficient. There are not many of those children. Not a great deal is involved, but the Indian Service says that they get along better with these State institutions, if this language is carried, and that is where these defective Indian children are I think in all cases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 20: Page 57, line 6, after the word "tribes," strike out the following language: "Provided further, That the position of Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes is hereby included within the competitive classified civil service and shall be subject to civil service laws and rules."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment. That sentence was in the bill as reported and as it passed the House. It has been stricken out by the action of the Senate. It reads as follows:

That the position of Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes is hereby included within the competitive classified civil service and shall be subject to civil service laws and rules.

Several years ago, in 1914, on an appropriation bill, a provision was inserted which took out this one superintendent from the civil service. All other Indian superintendents are under the civil service, but this one, that has charge of probably more Indians than any other superintendent and who administers more funds and property, is not under the civil service. The estimated value of tribal lands and other tribal property of the Five Civilized Tribes is $10,566,154, the estimated value of restricted allotted lands and other individual restricted property is $79,463,871, and the balance of individual Indian money on hand June 30 last was $16,926,321, or a total of property and funds under the guardianship of this officer amounting to considerably over $100,000,000. The disbursements of Federal, Indian, and miscellaneous funds for administrative purposes under his direction the fiscal year 1928 was over a half million dollars. There are opportunities galore for the wrong kind of a man in that office to favor rapacious whites of Oklahoma at the expense of the Indians. There is constant and tremendous local influence exerted on this agent by political and other forces in Oklahoma, and the political and other forces should not have the right to dictate that appointment. Be it said to the eternal credit of Commissioner Charles H. Burke that he has refused to yield to such dictation, that a year ago, when the post became vacant on the indictment of Wallen, Burke brought in Ellis, a man of long experience in the Indian Service and of high integrity, not the creature of Oklahoma politics, not beholden to Oklahoma influences, and has kept him there under a temporary appointment in spite of all Oklahoma influences.

Since that action was taken in 1914, exempting that position from the civil service, the duties of that official have been very greatly extended, through a desire in Oklahoma to have the work somewhat decentralized, and have many things passed on by that official instead of having action in Washington. That law reads as follows:

That hereafter no undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or uncontested agricultural and mineral leases (excluding oil and gas leases) made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, shall be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such undisputed claims or uncontested leases (except oil and gas leases) heretofore required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall hereafter be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma.

That has added to his responsibilities. In recent years two of those superintendents have been under serious question in respect to their probity and integrity. One, Victor Locke, was removed from office for misconduct; and his successor, Mr. Shade E. Wallen, the last regular appointee, was indicted by the grand jury; but in justice to him I should say that he was not convicted, and that I am advised that the indictment has been quashed.

However, there were serious irregularities; and those come largely because of the pressure of local influence in Oklahoma to get advantage for individuals out of contracts and other matters affecting these Indians. A former Member of Congress from Oklahoma was indicted there about that time because of attorney contracts with Indians, as I recall.

There is no position in the whole Indian Service that needs to be removed from the pressure of local politics more than this one office we are speaking about, and the language of the bill, which the amendment of the Senate seeks to strike out, will accomplish that purpose. The Board of Indian Commissioners is in favor of such action, and I will quote from their annual report for the fiscal year 1926.

I hold in my hand the annual report of the Board of Indian Commissioners for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926. That board is made up of 10 distinguished citizens of the United States, whose names are as follows:

Warren K. Moorhead, Andover, Mass.; Samuel A. Eliot, Boston, Mass.; Frank Knox, Manchester, N. H.; Daniel Smiley, Mohonk Lake, N. Y.; Malcolm McDowell, Washington, D. C.; Gen. Hugh L. Scott, Princeton, N. J.; Clement S. Ucker, Savannah, Ga.; Flora Warren Seymour, Chicago, Ill.; John J. Sullivan, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mary Vaux Walcott, Washington, D. C.

The members of this board serve without pay, and their point of view is entirely disinterested.

They are not under the Indian Bureau. They are a sort of official board of unofficial visitors and the board is composed of men and women of very high standing.

In the report of this board for the year 1926 I find this statement in respect to the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes:

CIVIL-SERVICE STATUS FOR SUPERINTENDENT

The Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes is the only superintendent in the Indian Service who has not a civil-service status. He is appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, by virtue of an act of Congress approved in 1914. All other reservation superintendents are appointed by the Secretary of the Interior under civil service laws and regulations. Before 1914 this jurisdiction was ably managed by two officials appointed in conformity with the civil service law, and under them the great task of allotment and organization was practically completed.

It is quite evident that the radical change in the status of the superintending official was effected 12 years ago as a matter of political expediency. There were no unusual conditions existent at the time which required the setting apart of this agency as a unique exception to the long-established and time-tested practice that placed the field management of Indian affairs in the hands of civil-service employees. There then were a number of competent, experienced field officials having the civil-service status—as there are now—any one of whom could have effectively superintended the agency for the Five Civilized Tribes.

This office is frankly regarded as a rightful perquisite of the political party in power. No other superintendency is so regarded. There is no valid reason why the Five Civilized Tribes superintendent should be unique in this respect. It certainly is a sad commentary on our vaunted American civilization that the happiness, welfare, and progress of several thousands of human beings, who happen to be the Indian wards of a great Government, should be made secondary to the political fortunes of a few white persons who happen to live in Oklahoma.

For the past 12 years, no matter which of the major parties was in power, and irrespective of the personality of the incumbent of this office, there has been a constant atmosphere of suspicion, of charge and countercharge, of factional jockeying, of favoritism and discrimination surrounding the office of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes. The incumbent not only has been subjected to attacks from the party in opposition but also by the faction of his own party to which he did not belong and which vehemently wanted to get him out in order to get its man in.

If these political maneuverings did not affect the Indians, this matter perhaps might be passed over as of minor consequence. But the injection of practical politics into the administration of the affairs of this group of tribes has been most injurious to the welfare of the Indians and has brought discredit to the Nation and the State of Oklahoma.

The sole cure for this evil situation is the repeal of the law which changed the office of superintendent from a civil-service status, making it a political appointment.

Such action would make this office similar in all respects to that of other superintendencies in the Indian Service.

At the present time I remind the House that the platforms of both the Republican and Democratic Parties in the last campaign indorsed civil service.

The Democratic platform reads:

CIVIL SERVICE

Grover Cleveland made the extension of the merit system a tenet of our political faith. We shall preserve and maintain the civil service.

The Republican national platform reads, under the heading Civil Service:

The merit system in Government service originated with and has been developed by the Republican Party. The great majority of our public-service employees are now secured through and maintained in the Government-service rules. Steps have already been taken by the Republican Congress to make the service more attractive as to wages and retirement privileges, and we commend what has been done as a step in the right direction.

There is no other place, in my judgment, where it is needed so much as in this one particular office.

Mrs. Corinna Lindon Smith, chairman of the division of Indian welfare, of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, a very capable woman, who is very much in contact with these questions in the field, has written me a letter in which she says that nothing is more important for the welfare of the hundred thousand enrolled members of the Indian tribes in eastern Oklahoma than to have a continuous, well-planned constructive policy carried out by the civil-service officials trained in the Indian Service. She says:

As chairman of the division of Indian welfare of the General Federation of Women's Clubs I wish to indorse very strongly the Cramton amendment appearing on page 57, lines 6 to 9, of H. R. 15089.

Senator HAYDEN, on the floor of the Senate, emphasized the fact that there has been more or less scandal connected with the Five Civilized Tribes office ever since the position of superintendent was taken out of civil service and made a political one.

As brought out in the hearing before your committee, the funds in the hands of the Superintendent of the Five Tribes amount to approximately $17,000,000, with an estimated value of restricted Indian lands of about $80,000,000. It is obvious that a position of such financial responsibility should not be by political appointment.

I believe that nothing is more important for the welfare of the hundred thousand enrolled members of Indian tribes in eastern Oklahoma than to have a continuous and well-planned constructive policy carried out by civil-service officials trained in the Indian Service.

I trust that you will see that the amendment placing the position of Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes under civil service is retained in the Interior Department bill as finally agreed to by Congress and approved by the President.

A letter from Charles J. Rhoads, president of the Indian Rights Association, says:

In the interest of honest and efficient administration of Indian affairs, we express the earnest hope that when the Indian appropriation act (H. R. 15089) is considered in conference, you will endeavor to secure the restoration of the following clause, which was stricken from the act by the Senate on December 20, 1928:

"Provided further, That the position of Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes is hereby included within the competitive classified service and shall be subject to civil service laws and rules."

Under the conditions existing since 1914, when the position of Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes was withdrawn from the classified service, there has been much scandal and mismanagement connected with that office, due to the pernicious political interference with tribal affairs. We therefore trust that you will agree with us that this important office should be so protected that the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes can be administered in the interest of the Indians, regardless of the wishes of those seeking to despoil them.

Miss Amelia E. White, secretary of the Eastern Association on Indian Affairs, wrote me about this matter:

We heartily indorse such legislation. With the right sort of superintendent, free from political control, the Five Civilized Tribes would be in an excellent position.

The superintendent has a position of great responsibility, since he is responsible for the funds of the Five Tribes, amounting to many million dollars. He must not only be a man interested in the tribe as human beings, he must also be a man who has had financial experience.

H. Eliot Kaplan, secretary of the National Civil Service Reform League, wires me:

Provision absolutely necessary and desirable to remove management of Indian wards from evils resulting through political favoritism, which is inevitable if position of superintendent is placed in unclassified service.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman's motion is to vote down this amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. My motion is to further insist upon the House disagreement to the Senate amendment. That would send it back to conference for further consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—ayes 88, noes 0.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next item in disagreement.

Amendment No. 30: Page 85, after line 9, insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to credit the Farmers' Irrigation District with the sum of $2,376.45, as of January 1, 1927, which represents 50 per cent of the expenses incurred by said district in operating and maintaining the Nine Mile Drain from January 1 to June 30, 1926, under contract with said district dated June 16, 1927, in connection with the North Platte project, Nebraska-Wyoming."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, as to that I will simply say there was a contract between this district and the Reclamation Service by which if the district paid up its charges half of the particular expenditure discussed here would be borne by the Federal Government. The district got behind in their payments, and later they paid up, and when they had paid up, then they felt that the Federal Government or the Reclamation Service ought to pay this half the same as if they had paid up more promptly. That view was sympathized with by the Reclamation Service. It was urged that the penalty for their slowness in payment, the 10 per cent, was all the penalty intended, but the Comptroller General held otherwise. This was put in in the Senate, and it is not objectionable to the Reclamation Service and may well be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next item in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 39: On page 106, line 3, after the word "purchased," strike out "or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C. p. 1302, sec. 257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. After that, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I desire to make a preferential motion, that the House recede and concur, and I would like to inquire if now is the proper time to make that motion?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to lose——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not intend to try to take the floor from the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. This motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will be considered as pending and preferential.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire some time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like some time. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire me to proceed or wait?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will suit the gentleman's wishes as to that. I would like to go ahead and explain the situation, and then yield to the gentleman. That probably would be in the interest of the best procedure for the House. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House the House adopted the section on page 106 and the first half of page 107, reading as follows:

For the acquisition of privately owned lands and/or standing timber within the boundaries of existing national parks and national monuments by purchase, or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C. p. 1302, sec. 257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government, $250,000, to be expended only when matched by equal amounts by donation from other sources for the same purpose, to be available until expended: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of the Interior may incur obligations and enter into contracts for additional acquisition of privately owned lands and/or standing timber in the existing national parks and national monuments not exceeding a total of $2,750,000 as matching funds from outside sources are donated for the same purpose, and his action in so doing shall be considered contractual obligations of the Federal Government: Provided further, That the sum herein appropriated and the appropriations herein authorized shall be available to reimburse any future donor of privately owned lands and/or standing timber within the boundaries of any existing national park or national monument to the extent of one-half the actual purchase price thereof: Provided further, That as part consideration for the purchase of lands, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion and upon such conditions as he deems proper, lease lands purchased to the grantors for periods, however, not to exceed the life of the particular grantor, and the matching of funds under the provisions hereof shall not be governed by any cash value placed upon such leases: Provided further, That appropriations heretofore and herein made and authorized for the purchase of privately owned lands and/or standing timber in the national parks and national monuments shall be available for the payment in full of expenses incident to the purchase of said lands and/or standing timber.

That section makes an appropriation of $250,000 for the acquisition of privately owned land in national parks. It further authorizes contracts to the extent of $2,750,000. It further provides that in the case of some individuals who have summer homes in the parks that a life lease may be given so they can continue to use their homes for that same purpose during the life of the present owner. It further provides that these appropriations are only available when matched by an equal amount of funds from private sources. It further provides that if private individuals go in and acquire land, it may be lands that are in danger, where timber is to be cut or something of the kind, but if they go ahead and put in 100 per cent of the cost later when funds are available the Government may pay for half of their expenditure and take over the title.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would prefer, if I may, to proceed without interruption. But I will yield.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman if this provision is not improperly included in an appropriation bill? That is, if a point of order had been made in time, would it not have been subject to a point of order as being legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. If a point of order had been made against the language as it stands in the bill, the point of order would have been good, and I so stated on the floor when the item was before the House, and the gentleman who was considering the making of a point of order did not make it. I do not want to get diverted, however. I say it would have been subject to a point of order; that is, certain minor provisions of the language would have been subject to a point of order. For instance, the one with reference to a life lease, and so forth, would have been subject to a point of order. But the main provisions of that paragraph would not have been subject to a point of order. The right of the Government to buy privately owned land in a national park is already clear under the law, so that a point of order as to that would not have stood. And it could have been sustained further as continuing a work in progress. But some of these minor provisions that were necessary to round out the paragraph would have been subject to a point of order. If the point of order had been made, I would have modified the language.

Mr. CANNON. The main provisions of the paragraph to which the gentleman refers relate to legislation under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Public Lands and not the Committee on Appropriations. No doubt there is excellent reason why this important provision should be hastily tacked on an appropriation bill instead of being submitted for mature consideration to the legislative committee to which it properly belongs.

Mr. CRAMTON. An emergency existed. But I want to emphasize the fact that the most important provisions were not subject to a point of order. The language could have been trimmed down so that the point of order would not have held.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The condemnation feature of the paragraph would not have been subject to a point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. It would not, I will say. I will explain that when we get to it. That is my judgment. I admit that the Chair does not always take my view of things. But I am satisfied as to that.

Now, an emergency exists as to these privately owned lands in the national parks, and that section was intended to reach that emergency; and in order to make clear what is before the House now, let me say that in the Senate the item was not stricken out, and no attempt was made to strike out the item in the Senate, but these words were stricken out:

> Or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C. pp. 1302, 6257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government.

That is to say, the House proposed that that acquisition of land may be either through purchase or by condemnation when in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous. The House proposed that the Secretary of the Interior should have that authority to initiate condemnation proceedings.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. I am sorry. I want to make a continuous statement. The Senate says you may buy the land, but you can not resort to condemnation proceedings, no matter how extravagant may be the demands that are made. Later I will go into that in a little more detail. But the issue here is when we are entering upon a program to buy land aggregating $6,000,000 and half of it from private funds and the other half from Government funds, we shall say, "You shall not have the right to institute condemnation proceedings when lands that are invaluable for park purposes are needed and threatened with destruction and held at unreasonable figures."

That is the issue between the House and the Senate, and that is the issue pressed here by the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] when he moves to concur in the Senate amendment. It means that we are to take away from the Interior Department the right to institute condemnation proceedings.

I contend that that right to condemn land in fact exists now. This language is not required to confer the authority to condemn, but this language is necessary, as it passed the House, to enable this money to be used for the purchase of land acquired by condemnation. We are not seeking here to confer the right to condemn. That exists now. But we are seeking rather to confer the right to use this money in acquiring land by condemnation when the Secretary of the Interior finds it necessary to do so. I have therefore outlined the issue, and will be glad to yield some time to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman yield 10 minutes?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I was not here at the time the Interior Department appropriation bill was considered by the House originally, and my attention to the particular feature that is now at issue has but recently been drawn.

I wish if I can to first impress the membership of the House with what I conceive to be the grave seriousness of this question and of this issue. I do not concur with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] in his opinion that this language which has been stricken from the bill by the Senate could have gotten by a point of order in the House. I am not familiar with any law, any act of Congress, which at present gives general authority to the Secretary of the Interior or to any other governmental functionary to condemn land for park purposes, so that I do not believe this particular language would have stood up against a point of order, and I think the Senate has very wisely stricken it out. It is not because I am particularly interested in any one park, but because I am interested in the great general policy.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I speak as a friend of the national-park system of the United States in so far as we may go with propriety and under the Constitution of the United States.

Let me call your attention to the fact—and I am surprised that so careful a legislator as my friend from Michigan has not envisioned the possibilities that are involved in the adoption of the policy proposed in this bill—that up until quite recently the national parks that have been established in the United States have, in the main, been set apart from the public lands, lands that belonged to the Government and lands about which no question was raised as to the right of the Congress and the executive authority to set them apart for that particular purpose, but in recent years in my own State, in the State of North Carolina, and in the State of Virginia, it is proposed to go into States where there are no public lands to serve as a nucleus in the establishment of a park. But the States have taken action. They have acquired a certain amount of the land and it has been provided that there shall be raised by private subscription millions and millions of dollars for the purpose of acquiring the privately owned lands that have not been acquired by the States, and then when these have been acquired, up to a certain point, the Congress has authorized the Secretary of the Interior to take over the projects in Tennessee and North Carolina and, as I remember now, the project in Virginia.

What does it mean? It means that in the non-public-land States parks are to be established and placed under the national jurisdiction, and there will be unquestionably numbers and numbers of tracts of land that will not have been acquired and passed to the ownership of the Park Commission before the park is taken over by the Secretary of the Interior; and here, then, you will have set a precedent under which some time you will be authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter these non-public-land States where parks have been established and expend millions of dollars in taking over the private lands there by the processes of condemnation.

I have always had a question, Mr. Speaker, as to how far the power of the Federal Government extended, under the powers given it in the Constitution, to acquire non-public lands by condemnation for the purpose of instituting a park. I think it is a question which should have been studied with care by one of the legislative committees of the House before this great, broad policy, with its far-reaching possibilities, was ever entered upon. I am sorry I was not here when the Interior Department bill was under consideration before in order then to present the views I entertain in regard to it. I am sorry it came in from a committee which is expressly inhibited by the rules of the House from inserting legislation in their bills. It is a matter of broad portent, and one that may be of profound consequence to the Treasury of the United States in the years that are to come, with the growth of the sentiment throughout the country for the establishment of parks in the non-public-land States.

Mr. Speaker, passing over these broad questions and coming to another phase of the matter: Assuming, for the sake of the argument, that it is all right to clothe the department with the power of condemnation, what sort of a situation are we getting ourselves into when we couple with that a provision that a part of the compensation for the condemned lands must be put up by private parties? That to my mind is an unsound principle to engraft in any bill. If we are going to authorize condemnation for park purposes, assuming you have a right to do it, we ought to put behind it the whole responsibility of the Government itself. I question gravely the legality of mingling the activities of the National Government and private individuals to carry out the supreme, sovereign process of the condemnation of private property for a public purpose.

Those, briefly, are the objections I entertain. I should be very glad to have the matter properly considered by the proper legislative committee of the House and let all these grave legal questions be analyzed. Let us investigate the question; let us see how far we ought to go; and let us be sure that in fixing a policy like this, and fixing a precedent which will arise to plague the Congresses and the Government years hence as the sentiment, as I have said, grows in regard to the establishment of national parks throughout the various States of the Union, we are doing the right thing.

For that reason, it seems to me, in the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves, the only wise and sensible thing to do is to concur in the Senate amendment and let this very grave question receive consideration at the hands of the proper legislative committee.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. COLTON. I recognize that the question I am about to ask would not affect the general principle the gentleman is discussing, but if the Congress continued to follow its present policy of requiring that all private rights shall be acquired within the exterior boundaries of a proposed park before the park is created and taken over by the Federal Government, will not that meet the situation as to future parks, and that this would only apply to the acquiring of lands that are now within the parks which are necessary for park purposes?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, that would be true if that assumption were continued; but here is my fear, I will say to the gentleman from Utah—and it looks to me as though this ought to address itself particularly to members of the majority party with very great force——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I say, it seems to me this ought to address itself with great force to the majority party that will be responsible—I fear that the policy of acquiring title is soon to be outstanding, and let me say to my friend from Utah that the pressure is going to become very tremendous, I predict, in regard to the future park projects to eventually have the Federal Government step into this activity and devote large sums of public money to the acquirement of lands.

Mr. COLTON. The pressure is great now, but I hope we can withstand that pressure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I very much hope so, but I fear the result. I have seen too much in my long experience here.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, the last objection that the gentleman from Tennessee made is not involved here, because the language stricken out by the Senate does not include the question of private donations and therefore that is not a question before the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But that private donation clause applies to the lands acquired by condemnation as well as those acquired by purchase.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; but that language is left in the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And if this language goes out, there will be no condemnation. Therefore, as a practical proposition, the one-half provision will only apply to that land which is purchased. So that part of it is all right. I am not complaining about that. I am perfectly willing to give authority to purchase, and I am perfectly willing for it to be a half-and-half proposition, if you want it so, because I reiterate that I am a friend of the national-park system, but I do not want to go to the extent now of entering upon a policy of condemnation. [Applause.]

I thank the gentleman from Michigan very much for his courtesy.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee, I think, in what he has urged has imagined vain things as to what might happen. The bill before us has nothing to do with the acquisition of any lands to be used in creating a park. It has to do only with "the acquisition of privately owned lands and timber within the boundaries of existing national parks and national monuments."

The policy is becoming well established, and it ought to become fixed and final, and I hope we will have at all times in this session the aid of the gentleman from Tennessee in holding to the policy of creating no new national parks that include private holdings. What is a national park? It is an area set forth for the common use of all the people of the Nation; and whenever John Jones acquires an acre or 10 acres of land and has the right to put a fence around it and say, "This is mine! Private! Keep out!"—and you will see these signs now on areas in national parks—whenever this happens, John Jones to just this extent defeats the fundamental purpose of the national park. It was created for the common purposes and the common use of all. [Applause.] And whether it is a Senator of the United States, whether it is a Member of this House, whether it is an unknown private individual, it is the same truth that to the extent he fences in a part of this great national park he, to that extent, defeats the purposes of the park.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In a moment.

And I hope we will not create any more national parks with private holdings, because out of my experience of eight years in studying park problems I have found that they are destructive of proper development in two ways. These private holdings are destructive of proper development and use of the park for public purposes, first, because the man who owns the land can develop it in a way that is contrary to the desirable general use of the park. He can put up in a most beautiful scenic spot—and there exist now places where this is threatened—a garish sort of oil station.

Testimony before my committee from a reputable, responsible officer of the Park Service is to the effect that now on these private lands in national parks the owners are not only putting up undesirable structures, not only interfering with beautiful scenery, but these private lands are being used in some cases as bootlegging joints and houses of ill fame. Now, I say this sort of thing is repugnant to me in the national-park system.

I believe national parks are to play a great part in the development of this country, and we ought not to create any more with private holdings. But we have created these national parks in the past and we find now they are encumbered by these private holdings, and we had better get rid of the private hoidings as soon as we can and secure the national parks for the people of the Nation.

I now yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. COLTON. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly and the gentleman may be interested in knowing that this particular question has been thrashed out within the last few days by the Public Lands Committee and almost unanimously that committee decided that that would be the policy so far as we are concerned in the creation of these parks.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is fine. And that policy was followed by the Congress when it created two great eastern national parks, the Shenandoah in Virginia and the Great Smoky in Tennessee and North Carolina.

And let me remind the gentleman from Tennessee that in his own State there is under way the creation of a great national park that will be a great asset to the State of Tennessee and the State of North Carolina and provide pleasure for the people of the Nation, and in the creation of that park the law passed by Congress said it should not become effective until all private lands were acquired.

Now, what have they found? In the last week the right of the State to condemn land in North Carolina for the purpose of this park was sustained. They found they could not get the timber that was necessary. The lumber companies were rushing ahead to cut down the timber and destroy the scenic value of this area dedicated to a public use. So they have had to resort, even in the gentleman's own State, to condemnation proceedings, and in the State of North Carolina the proceedings have gone to the supreme court, and that court last week decided that the proceedings are valid. And then those who sought to destroy the timber came to Washington and held conferences and got no encouragement from the legal powers here.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I might add for the gentleman's information that since the provision was put in the Interior Department bill I have received communications from private property owners in national parks placing a valuation on their holdings twice in excess of any common-sense amount that would be placed upon them.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is what is inevitable so long as human nature is human nature. I will emphasize that further in a moment. There is a splendid example from Tennessee as to private contributions. How does that Great Smoky National Park come into being? We required in our act that before it should become a national park private holdings should be bought and turned over with no private lands left in to interfere with park development. These lands were to cost $10,000,000. Five million dollars has been raised in a splendid way by the States of North Carolina and Tennessee and $5,000,000 comes from one private individual who desires to take that wonderful method of setting up a memorial that will stand forever for his mother. Five million dollars from a private contributor makes possible the splendid national park in Tennessee, and I did not expect from Tennessee would come any word of criticism on the policy of creating the park in part with private contributions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman does not desire to put me in a wrong attitude?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am discussing the legal question, and a serious one. I do doubt the policy of the Government exercising the power of condemnation and providing that half of the compensation shall be made by private parties.

Mr. CRAMTON. As long as the use is purely public I do not see that it matters whether the money all comes from the Treasury, or one-half of it. What I object to is not sharing the contribution, I think it a splendid way for wealthy men to use money to buy areas to be perpetually devoted to the use of the public. What I object to is sharing the use of the park.

Senator WALSH of Montana secured this amendment in the Senate. He has a summer home in the park. I know that has not actuated the Senator a particle in this but Senator WALSH knows that when he is exercising that ownership he has a certain area that is his and the rest of us have what is left.

There have been parks where we wanted to establish automobile camps for John Jones and his flivver and in order to do so we had to buy it. I have thought sometimes that in the Rocky Mountain National Park all we own is the scenery and that all of the land was in private ownership.

Now this is not new. This is the third year that the Interior bill has carried this kind of a proposition—appropriations for the purchase of private land and providing for Federal appropriations to be matched by private funds.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Condemnation has not been carried heretofore.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is unnecessary. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that if the Senate amendment had stricken out two more words I would not have cared a cent about it. But the Senate left in the two words. The Senate Committee on Appropriations proposed that they be stricken out with the rest of it, but objection was made on the floor of the Senate by, I think, Senator WALSH. These two words that the Senator insisted upon the Senate retaining while it struck out the provision for condemnation are, "by purchase." If they had stricken out those words it would have read—

> For the acquisition of privately owned lands and/or standing timber within the boundaries of existing national parks and national monuments $250,000, to be expended only when matched by equal amounts by donation from other sources for the same purpose, to be available until expended.

Then, with that language the department could have purchased or condemned as authorized by existing law. We preferred to have the condemnation clause definitely set forth but the authority would have existed anyway. But when the Senate strikes out the reference to condemnation and retains "by purchase," then the use of this appropriation is restricted to purchase. The words "by purchase" not being in disagreement the conferees can not now take them out.

Here is the law of 1888 to which the House language refers and which is the basis of condemnation proceedings. I quote it from the speech of Senator WALSH yesterday at page 1767 of the RECORD:

> That in every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer of the Government has been, or hereafter shall be, authorized to procure real estate for the erection of a public building or for other public uses, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to acquire the same for the United States by condemnation, under judicial process, whenever in his opinion it is necessary or advantageous to the Government to do so; and the United States circuit or district courts of the district wherein such real estate is located shall have jurisdiction of proceedings for such condemnation; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States, upon every application of the Secretary of the Treasury under this act, or such other officer, to cause proceedings to be commenced for the condemnation within 30 days from the receipt of the application at the Department of Justice.
> SEC. 2. The practice, pleadings, forms, and modes of proceeding in causes arising under the provisions of this act shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the State within which such circuit or district courts are held, any rule of the court to the contrary notwithstanding.

There is the authority that any officer of the Government authorized to acquire land for public purposes, if it is advantageous to do so, may resort to condemnation proceedings.

If the words "by purchase" had been stricken out with the other language stricken out the Senate amendment would have made no difference at all.

It would have left it for the Secretary of the Interior to acquire these lands by purchase or condemnation, but the Senate proposes an exception here. That for any other public purpose you can acquire lands by condemnation when extortionate prices are asked, but as to existing national parks you can only buy them by taking the price that the holder asks.

When we were considering this bill, and this did not come up suddenly, we had hearings upon it, Senator WALSH appeared before our committee and made a very helpful statement, which was referred to in my speech on the floor December 11, when I first presented the bill to the House and at which time I gave notice that we intended to offer the amendment.

Senator WALSH said before our committee at our hearings in November:

> I am entirely in sympathy with the plan of the committee to acquire the property held in private ownership at the foot of the lake by exchange, purchase, or otherwise—any way it can be acquired.

That is what Senator WALSH said to our committee.

Mr. LEAVITT. But the Senator was confining that to the land at the lower end of the lake.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. But I can not distinguish between the lower and the upper ends of the lake. He said further:

> I sympathize altogether keenly with the views of the committee as expressed by its chairman concerning the advisability of the acquisition by the Government of the property at the foot of the lake.

He said further:

> Now, it is a simple question as to whether, with the work half done, you should stop there in order to coerce those people into selling you their land at a lower price than they think it is worth or that they are asking for it, while the law gives you the perfect right to determine what it is actually worth, and to take it at that price.

That coercion is with reference to a certain road-building program, and not condemnation. Mr. Chairman, the only way the law gives you the right to determine what it is worth is through condemnation proceedings, and Senator WALSH told our committee that we had the right to do it. Said he:

> If the Government wants those lands, and these people want exorbitant prices for them, the way is open to determine just what is a fair price, and the Government ought to be willing to pay that.

So much for the language; so much for the authority to condemn.

Now, as to the emergency that exists. I do not think I ought to take time to quote the details, but let me say this: For several years our committee has been studying these problems along with other Interior Department problems, and we have been impressed by many specific examples of the danger to the national parks through these private holdings. I started to say a while ago that there were two dangers: First, the undesirable use or development on the part of the private owners, and secondly—and I did not say this at that time—the impossibility of the Government proceeding with its program of development because the lands are owned by individuals. Those are the two things that create numberless difficulties. As I said in the hearings when Senator WALSH was before our committee:

I am sure I speak for the committee when I say that we take a good deal of interest in the national-park situation, largely because we realize what they mean to the country in the future. We are in the beginning of a formulation of a national-park policy. Foundations are now being laid. Our experience has impressed upon us that for the proper administration of national parks, that they may perform their proper functions as national parks, it is imperative that eventually all of the lands in those parks become the property of the Federal Government. That seems to me self-evident, because a national park is intended to be set aside for the common use of the Nation, and for some individual or group of individuals to have some portion of it set aside for their exclusive use is a denial of the common use of the Nation.

In addition to that fundamental proposition, there are certain practical considerations that have come to our attention as a matter of experience. The ownership by individuals of portions of a national park makes possible two undesirable sets of circumstances. First, we frequently find the developments the park authorities themselves, representing the Nation, desire to make in the park, are obstructed by the failure to own the land. We have had that experience. We want to establish an automobile camp, and find that before we can do it we have to make an agreement with the owners or buy those lands.

In Rocky Mountain Park, where the situation was more extreme than in Glacier, it seemed that about all we owned was the scenery, and wherever you wanted to go with an automobile and camp there were signs up "Private Property; Keep Off." So the private ownership stood in the way, and does in many cases now stand in the way of development which the Government would like to make.

Secondly, and sometimes even more serious than that, has been the possibility as well as the actual experience in some cases of an undesirable development taking place on property in private ownership. In Glacier there is an undesirable development going on. Some church organization is putting up a lot of shacks, etc., that detract from the scenery in the park. In some cases more unsightly and undesirable structures have resulted.

Now, because of these experiences, I think we have all come to the conclusion that some time those private holdings must be eliminated, and we have felt that the sooner they are eliminated the better, so we have been very anxious to see a comprehensive program under way.

We pressed the Park Service to give us a survey of that whole thing. In the 1928 Interior bill our committee recommended and the House approved and Congress approved $50,000 for the purpose of buying these lands when matched by private sources.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. CRAMTON. Surely.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In the bills authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to accept the parks to which the gentleman has referred, the one in North Carolina and Tennessee, and the one in Virginia, was it provided that there shall be a certain area definitely described, and that the title to the lands within that area shall be in the Government?

Mr. CRAMTON. My recollection is this: I know how they were created. There was a commission headed by our colleague [Mr. TEMPLE] who made a survey of the entire East, and finally recommended those two areas. I do not think the definite metes and bounds were specified, but they knew that we were proceeding on this report that had to do with certain specific areas, and unless those areas in general could be acquired then, of course, the park could not be created, but the act itself did not entirely define the metes and bounds. It did provide that unless a certain minimum area was acquired, then it would not become a national park.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; and within that minimum area is it possible for privately owned land to be retained, not as a part of that area?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; anything within those exterior boundaries will come in, and will be acquired, and they have had to resort to condemnation proceedings to get them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But they are doing it through the right authority.

Mr. COLTON. I think the gentleman is correct. The bill provided a minimum acreage should be acquired, but that the land within the exterior boundaries of the area that is required should be conveyed to the Government, that there should be no private rights within the exterior boundaries.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I say, two years ago we appropriated $50,000 to be matched by private funds for this same purpose. A year ago a second $50,000 was approved by this House and the Congress, and this year a larger program is proposed, because the general survey of the situation which our committee desires has been completed, I think, as late as December. An additional aid was given the Park Service a year ago to do that, Mr. W. B. Lewis, former superintendent of the Yosemite National Park. He was appointed an assistant to the director and carried on that work and made his report, and it appears in our hearings. He was for many years the head of one of our greatest national parks, and that report, filed in December, and appearing in our hearings, sets forth that it will cost between five and six million dollars to acquire all the private lands in existing parks and monuments.

The most acute situation, challenging the most public attention, is in the Yosemite National Park of California, and I am approaching now the emergency that makes absolutely necessary this legislation as passed by the House, unless this Congress is to be held up to the condemnation of the country. Here is the emergency: In the Yosemite National Park there are 13 square miles of timbered lands, carrying some of the most beautiful sugar pine and yellow pine of California. Certain projected and soon to be constructed scenic highways will travel for a distance of about 4 miles through that wonderful wooded area.

These lands are in private ownership. In the last few weeks they have come all into one ownership, 8,500 acres, that is carrying on lumber operations in the vicinity of the park, and it is definite if these lands are not acquired the lumbering operations will go into the park this coming summer and the timber will be cut off. Certain private interests who have been trying to prevent or avert that national calamity have made an investigation, and I happen to know they employed skilled timber cruisers to go in there and measure the timber and make an estimate of the value of this land for the timber, and they made their report as to what this land is worth, but the owners of this land have been refusing to consider any such price, and it looks as if the fact is they consider the Government has to have this land or suffer execration from every nature lover, and are encouraged to ask an unreasonable price.

When that situation developed, this great tract in the park coming into one ownership, we knew that the cutting of timber was a matter of a few months. Then from a certain private source there was an offer of $1,000,000 as a gift to be used when matched by an equal amount of public funds to acquire this land in the Yosemite and the balance to be used in other national parks in the same way. That offer was made in response to the invitation that Congress has made for the last two years when we appropriated certain amounts on the half-and-half basis.

Here, when the emergency is apparent, comes this generous offer from a private source to give a million dollars to take care of the emergency and the balance to go to other parks, and it would be a crime, and certainly it is a crime to which I do not wish to be a party, if we should fail to take advantage of the generous private offer and put up the money to match such a contribution. [Applause.] I say it would be a crime if we fail to match the very generous offier, and I say we would be subject to the severest criticism if we fail to put up money to match their money and if we fail to put it up in a way that will protect them as well as the Treasury from the unconscionable prices that may be asked for this land otherwise.

Furthermore, I have had the hope that the same source that gave the million dollars, or some other source, if it is seen that Congress is going ahead to clean up these particular holdings not only in the Yosemite but other national parks—I say I had the hope that if we definitely adopted a program such source would put up the entire half of the five or six million dollars needed. That is the reason this language is in the bill. Here is an attempt to match the million dollars that is offered. It outlines a definite program for matching of public and private funds, so that in a few years we can clean up all these handicaps in our park development.

In the Senate yesterday Senator WALSH said this:

I want to impress upon the minds of Senators the idea that the national park officials do not desire these lands for any purpose whatever; they simply do not want any of these lands held in private ownership.

I am sure the gentleman from Tennessee, from what he said, does not agree that these lands when turned over and set apart for perpetual public use will serve no use whatever. The general public use is the highest use.

In the Lewis report it is stated:

As the timberland menace is most pronounced in Yosemite, so is the summer-home-site evil at its worst in Glacier, where at both ends of Lake McDonald nearly 200 individual owners have erected flimsy, unattractive structures presenting a striking example of landscape despoliation; 597.50 acres of land is involved in the two subdivided areas at either end of the lake, both areas being traversed by the new transmountain road, the final completion of which has been deferred pending acquisition of control of these holdings by the Government.

Even larger areas and a larger number of individual owners are involved in similar subdivisions in Yosemite. While the immediate situation is less serious than in Glacier, it will become more and more aggravated as time goes on, as two of the subdivided tracts are adjacent to the Tioga Road, one astride the Big Rock Road, and the other readily accessible to it. The latter tract comprises 200 acres, subdivided in 1912, and involving 1,230 lots with 336 individual owners. Three other tracts, totaling 433.52 acres, more recently subdivided, are still largely in the hands of the promoters, but already about 50 individual owners are listed.

While in each of the parks private holdings are for the most so located as to obstruct park administration and development, the most serious problems are to be found in Yosemite, Glacier, and Rocky Mountain, where the holdings are most extensive and the ownerships most complex. The imminent danger of an early resumption of lumbering operations on nearly 9,000 acres of exceptionally fine sugar and yellow pine lands in Yosemite, with the resulting scenic destruction and fire menace, makes it extremely urgent that ways and means be found immediately if these stands are to be saved. Second only in importance is the Glacier situation, with its hodgepodge of summer homes obstructing the development of the transmountain highway. Then comes Rocky Mountain, with its extensive private holdings monopolizing the best available sites for public camp grounds in the park. Following these in order of importance and urgency comes Grand Canyon, with its strategically located private holdings on the South Rim; Zion, with its main entrance blocked by private ownership; General Grant, with a large tract subdivided into summer-home sites in the heart of the General Grant Grove of Sequoias; Lassen, with its southeastern entrance blocked by a privately controlled tourist development; and Mesa Verde, Sequoia, Mount Rainier, and Crater Lake, with general administrative and protective problems by reason of the existence of lands outside the control of the Government.

The Yosemite situation is attracting widespread attention in the Nation, and if we fail to act effectively the condemnation will be universal, for Yosemite is dear to the hearts of the Nation.

Mr. Don Tresidder, president of the Yosemite Park & Curry Co., writes me:

The menace of private holdings in the parks is growing yearly. In the case of Yosemite, it is placing the very integrity of the park itself in jeopardy.

Mr. Francis Farquhar, of San Francisco, a gentleman I know well, a member of the Sierra Club, who is very much interested in the parks, says:

Mr. McDuffie informs me that he has just heard from you that you have strong hopes of reestablishing the condemnation clause in the bill when it is finally enacted. I earnestly hope that this will go through, as without it negotiations for purchase might be extremely difficult and long delayed. We have already been double-crossed once by one of these lumber companies, and we need every bit of backing we can get to keep them from the massacre of the forests which they are contemplating.

The preservation of this forest is one of the most urgent things that I know of; not alone on account of its beauty and its place in the national park but also because of its protection of the watershed. The farmers and agricultural interests seem to have been sound asleep on this question of lumbering in this portion of the Sierra and have permitted an irreparable damage in many places. You can, therefore, feel that you have accomplished a genuine act of conservation in the interests of agriculture as well as in the interests of the park.

Here is a letter from Mrs. Bernice C. Marshall, chairman of the forestry national scenery committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, who recently visited this area, in which she says:

My husband and I made a trip to Yosemite Park last August in order that I might make a special study of the situation there. It seems to me unthinkable that those wonderful sugar pine and other giant trees growing on the privately owned lands within the boundaries of the park should ever be touched by the lumber companies.

Furthermore, Dr. John P. Buwalda, chairman division of geology and paleontology, California Institute of Technology, at Pasadena, Calif., says in a letter:

All men who have a knowledge of the relation of these holdings to park administration, and the menace they constitute to proper park development, appreciate the importance of taking the steps which you have so wisely urged.

It is moreover clear that the Government should not delay in acquiring these private holdings until irreparable damage has been done.

The president of the Sierra Club, San Francisco, Duncan McDuffie, says:

The Sierra Club regards the elimination of private holdings in the national parks as a matter of the utmost importance.

Furthermore, the acting superintendent of the Yosemite National Park, Mr. E. C. Leavitt, who is living with this problem, says:

I do hope that the right to condemn these lands, if necessary, will be kept in the bill, for I am confident that it will place the Government in a much more advantageous position in dealing with the various private owners. While it might not be necessary to use this means, the fact that we have the right will go a long way in inducing owners to deal fairly with the Government.

The National Park Service is known to the Congress. They have built up their usefulness and their standing because of their reasonableness in their handling of the public. Who is there who has any real fear that any unfair or drastic action will be taken with reference to this matter? It has been asserted in the Capitol that it is proposed that the Secretary may enter and take possession of these properties. We propose only the old Anglo-Saxon method of letting the condemnation jury go in and fix the prices, and the general experience is that such juries are not unfair to the local owners, but they do protect us from unreasonable extortion.

If we are going to acquire these lands—and it is vital to the park system that we do—it is necessary that we do it now. There are other situations outside of those in the Yosemite Park that are acute. Zion National Park, in Utah, is threatened by privately owned land adjacent to its entrance. There are acute situations elsewhere. There are people who have gone into these lands who are subdividing them and selling summer homes on which are built shacks that disfigure the landscape. In one of these parks you pass over a road and pass by miles of outhouses and shacks put up by private owners on their land. It seems inconceivable that Congress should delay, particularly when such generous offers by private holders are now made to us. It is inconceivable that we would not do in the national parks just as we do in the city of Washington, where, when we want land for a national purpose, we condemn it. When we want land in Tennessee for a national purpose and can not get it otherwise at a reasonable price we condemn. That is all we ask to be done here—to give them the right of condemnation where it is necessary in order to protect the public interest. I hope you will reject the amendment offered by the Senate.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. As the law now stands, is it that the Park Service or the Government can determine the improvements on the land?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. The department has no authority to regulate the matter of improvements on privately owned land in these parks beyond what might be done under the general nuisance laws.

Mr. LEAVITT. I understand by the statement of Senator WALSH that that right does exist.

Mr. CRAMTON. He expresses the belief that the park authorities shall have the same right as cities in zoning.

He said, at page 357 of our hearings:

So far as the use of the property is concerned, they seem to think they are impotent; that they have no control over the character of buildings to be constructed or the particular business to which they shall be devoted. I totally disagree with that. I think the act gives the Secretary of the Interior full power in the premises, just exactly the same power as the State or any municipality would have, and the power is to be measured in a way by the purpose or use to which the property generally is put, and the fact that it is within a national park.

If the property were within a municipality it would be zoned so that only buildings of a certain type or character could be erected within a certain district. That has been fully justified. The Department of the Interior or the Secretary of the Interior has power to make all necessary rules and regulations having exactly the same force as acts of the legislature or ordinances of a municipal body. So that, so far as the character of the buildings is concerned, referring to the religious organization that makes that a summer headquarters, there is no difficulty about providing a rule as to the character of buildings they may erect, none whatever, even on privately owned land.

I question that authority, especially in the absence of any direct legislation by Congress.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left of my hour?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am particularly interested in this matter because the question has been raised with reference to Glacier National Park in Montana. The question has nothing to do with any lands in my own district, as I understand it, but it has to do with the land on the west side of Glacier Park, and many of our people are greatly exercised through the fear that some arbitrary use of the authority of the Government to condemn and purchase will be exercised to the disadvantage or injustice of people who have owned lands in that park for a long time.

I understood from the debate that was had here when this appropriation bill was before the House previously that it was the purpose and authorized in the bill itself that when land in national parks is purchased, through agreement with the owners, condemnation or otherwise, the Government would be authorized to enter into and intends to enter into an agreement with the owner for the continued use of that land throughout the lifetime of such owner.

I think that meets the situation in the minds of some of the private owners with whom I have talked, though by no means all, but it does not meet in any particular one situation that exists in Glacier Park, and that is the matter of ownership of 80 acres of land belonging to the Methodist Church organization in Montana, which is being used as a summer camp for young people. It was acquired by that church organization through the gift of the original homesteaders on that land, who had gained title to it by living on it as pioneers before the national park was created.

I do not see how any provision or agreement that during the lifetime of an individual such an individual might be allowed to continue the use of the land would apply to a situation such as that. That bequest was made by an old couple who lived there as pioneers and who wished to leave something to the young people of Montana, and who did so by granting that land to the church organization to which they belonged. It is used by that church for a summer camp. Even under a provision for continued use during the life of an owner it might be impossible to continue the use of that land for that religious and public purpose if the Government ever decided it wished, through condemnation, to take it away.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Are we not doing the same thing in Washington? Through condemnation proceedings in the District you can take property when it is needed in a scheme of building, so that we are doing the same thing right here.

Mr. LEAVITT. That is true, but I am speaking now of the way in which this particular land might be reached even with that particular form of agreement for the benefit of individuals. I serve notice at this time that I have prepared, and am dropping in the basket now for introduction at the end of my present remarks, the following bill:

That the right of the Government to purchase through condemnation shall not apply to lands within any national park now owned by any religious organization and used exclusively for religious purposes.

I see no other way to meet the situation which exists in that case through the provisions of the law as it now exists or as it is intended to have it clarified by the enactment of this bill.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that the gentleman should add the word "fraternal" after the word "religious."

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not think that is necessary, because I know of no such situation. I know of no other situation as exists in the Glacier National Park.

I do not believe any public purpose could be served by requiring a church organization to give up land which has been donated to it by people of that faith for the creation of a memorial, just as fully a memorial as is the case of this $5,000,000 gift on the part of John D. Rockefeller, jr., for the purposes of public benefit and a memorial to his mother. I do not think that under any circumstances through condemnation should it be possible to dispose of that land unless it is in accordance with the wishes of the Methodists themselves.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I will simply take one minute to say this: There is no one who has taken a more active interest in promoting the interests of the park in Montana than the gentleman who has just spoken. Whenever we have gone there he has been there to assist in studying the problems, and I think he need have no fear about any proper religious organization holding their meetings in a proper way in a national park. They are encouraged to come there with their meetings, but when it comes to the setting aside of a certain area for the purpose of developing unsightly shacks which interfere with the public use of the park that is a different proposition. There will be no difficulty about their continuing to come there and holding their meetings, even if their lands should be acquired by the Government. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 16, noes 72.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 40: "and for the continuance of construction of the transmountain road in said Glacier National Park."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, as to that I simply wish to say this: The Senate amendment proposes in the general lump sum for building roads in national parks to specify a road in the Glacier National Park. The only other roads specified in that lump-sum appropriation are fragments of roads outside of national parks for which the money could not be used if they were not specified. It has not been the policy to specify roads in the national parks in this lump-sum item because oftentimes weather conditions make it necessary to change the program, and so forth.

Now, there are three good reasons for not accepting the Senate amendment. The first one I have stated, that we do not want to establish the precedent of specifying one particular road. If we did give such a preference, it should not necessarily be given to the Glacier National Park, which stands third among the national parks in amount of money spent already for road building, but stands only thirteenth in number of visitors. Up to the time of our hearings $1,661,022.52 had been allotted for road building in Glacier National Park, an amount greater than any other national park except Yosemite and Mount Rainier, and an amount greater than has been allocated either for Yellowstone, Grand Canyon, or Rocky Mountain National Parks. So Glacier has not been discriminated against and ought not to be given this preference. Secondly, we do not think we will have the money for Glacier this year, anyway. It was expected we would have $5,000,000 for road construction, but we will have only $3,500,000 for new work. Thirdly, we think we ought to give preference to roads where conditions are favorable, and they are not now favorable in Glacier. We think it is foolish to rush the completion of this road and raise the market price of a lot of adjacent land immediately. We think it will be time enough to build this road after we have cleaned up the private land situation, which is so serious along its route.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman state what the plans are for the acquirement of this private land within any reasonable time?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say that I am very hopeful that if we can get the Senate to recede on this Walsh condemnation amendment, the private funds will be contributed as stated; and we hope that a real program of private-land acquisition in the Glacier Park will follow during this coming fiscal year, and if that does follow, then by another year the road-program situation will have straightened out, the lands will have been acquired, and then we can go ahead.

Mr. LEAVITT. Is it the expectation to go ahead just as rapidly as the key points are acquired, or is it the intention to wait until all of the land is acquired?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. There are a lot of private lands in remote sections which the department and the committee have no idea of acquiring prior to this road development. Money is so badly needed in a variety of places that we expect to go to those places where conditions are right.

It has been urged in the Senate that the State of Montana has spent a lot of money on roads to connect with this road, it being stated by Senator WALSH:

In anticipation of the completion of that road the State of Montana has spent an enormous amount of money for a State as sparsely settled as ours upon the improvement of roads leading to the Glacier National Park, anticipating that tourists will travel through that country by the thousands for the purpose of viewing the beautiful scenery and enjoying the advantages it offers.

As a matter of fact, the State of Montana has spent not more than a few thousand dollars on roads directly connecting with Glacier Park roads. The Blackfeet Highway and the approach road from the east through the Blackfeet Indian Reservation were built 100 per cent from Federal funds.

The roads on the west are built with Federal funds. There is another road that will serve the purpose of the transmountain road, the Roosevelt Highway, being built 100 per cent of Federal forest highway funds. This road will get the transcontinental traffic over the mountains.

I do not say this in criticism of the State. I am aware of the difficulties they have had and I have tried to help the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT] get his Red Lodge road, or whatever he calls it, but I say this in answer to the criticism that has been made in the Senate.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. That is true unless we go into detail with regard to it, but when we go into detail we find that the Blackfoot Indian Reservation, for example, is Government land, and that roads in Montana leading up to that reservation and then on through must be considered as roads connecting with the national park.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is true.

Mr. LEAVITT. And the State of Montana has spent a good many hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Montana is to be commended for this—it is because of his help and his cooperation and his sympathy and other gentlemen like him in this House that this committee has been able to bring about an increase in the appropriation for building roads in the national parks from about $1,000,000 a year to $5,000,000 a year. Without this sympathy and this encouragement and this help this could not have been done. As a matter of fact, if it had not been for gentlemen like the gentleman from Montana and others who have supported the program of this committee, there would not have been any money for building roads for anybody in Montana to quarrel about. His position is always constructive helpfulness.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 41: On page 120, line 1, after the word "Interior," insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That the practice of allowing quarters, heat, light, household equipment, subsistence, and laundry service to the superintendent and other employees who are required to live at St. Elizabeths Hospital may be continued without deduction from their salary, notwithstanding the act of March 5, 1928 (45 Stat. 193)."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment to add to the Senate amendment the following:

Pending determination by the Personnel Classification Board in accordance with said act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 41 with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by the Senate add the following: "Pending determination by the Personnel Classification Board in accordance with said act."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there has been more or less of a tempest in a teapot about this St. Elizabeths proposition. The amendment inserted by the Senate restores language recommended by our committee and stricken out in the House on a point of order. The amendment adopted by the Senate reads:

Provided further, That the practice of allowing quarters, heat, light, household equipment, subsistence, and laundry service to the superintendent and other employees who are required to live at St. Elizabeths Hospital may be continued without deduction from their salary, notwithstanding the act of March 5, 1928 (45 Stat. p. 193).

Now, what was the act of March 5, 1928? That is all that makes this legislation subject to a point of order. Section 3 of that act provides:

SEC. 3. The head of an executive department or independent establishment, where, in his judgment, conditions of employment require it, may continue to furnish civilians employed in the field service with quarters, heat, light, household equipment, subsistence, and laundry service; and appropriations for the fiscal year 1929 and thereafter of the character heretofore used for such purposes are hereby made available therefor: Provided, That the reasonable value of such allowances shall be determined and considered as part of the compensation in fixing the salary rate of such civilians.

The point of that is this proviso:

Provided, That the reasonable value of such allowances shall be determined and considered as part of the compensation in fixing the salary rate of such civilian.

Now, here is what happened as to St. Elizabeths after this became the law: The Personnel Classification Board, or its representatives, went over to St. Elizabeths, made an examination of the salaries, made their allocations of salaries, and took into consideration these allotments of quarters, and so forth.

They could have fixed the salaries a little higher and then made a deduction for quarters, but instead they fixed the salaries at what the Personnel Classification Board thought they ought to be, the quarters being considered.

They did not show this on the face of things, so the Comptroller General raised the question that they have not acted under this law and made the necessary deductions, and he made some talk about deducting $11,000 for quarters from a $9,000 salary. This was not final. This was not definite. He had not any idea of doing a foolish thing like that, although certain Members on the floor seem to have taken him seriously.

Now, this is the situation. The amendment I have offered will make it read in this way:

"The practice of allowing quarters, and so forth, to the superintendent and other employees who are required to live at St. Elizabeths Hospital may be continued without deduction from their salary, notwithstanding the act of March 5, 1928, until the Personnel Classification Board shall proceed under that act," or words to that effect.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the Personnel Classification Board took into consideration the value of these quarters, they evidently made no allowance for them in fixing Doctor White's salary, because $9,000 is the highest salary that can be paid under the Welch bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I make the statement, and it comes from the secretary of the Personnel Classification Board after consultation with the board, that they passed on these salaries and took into consideration not only the quarters but the surrounding conditions.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. How could they have taken into consideration these things in Doctor White's case when they give him the utmost that can be paid under the terms of the Welch bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. They might have done this and not been far wrong. They might have said that the disadvantage of living in quarters where insane people crowd the door and the corridors—that that disadvantage joined with the 24-hour service offset any value that might be deducted.

Mr. SCHAFER. How about the United States Veterans' Bureau hospitals at North Chicago, Ill., and Camp Custer, Mich.?

Mr. CRAMTON. I frankly say to the gentleman that the only reason I am offering this amendment is in order that the language as it stands in the bill might not be misunderstood as making an exception, but to make it clear that St. Elizabeths is to be handled the same as any other institution governed by that law. We are not making an exception. I am making it clear that it is to be passed on by the Personnel Classification Board.

Now just a word. There has been a good deal of misconception about this. There have been attacks made on Doctor White. He is undoubtedly a great authority in his line. I am not going to discuss the particular attacks made on him. The business of our committee is not to legislate for individuals. We are legislating for the office, and whoever holds the office should be treated the same way. If it should be held that Doctor White was not the one to continue in charge of the office they would have to get some one else. I would like to have the conditions such that you could get a man equally great in attainments in his profession, and that could not be done if you subtracted $11,000 expenses from the $9,000 salary.

What are the facts? It is claimed that there are 19 rooms in this building. There are not that many. In the next place, these rooms are used for the entertainment of official guests from all over the country. These guests are entertained at the table. All the expense of Doctor White's table is not borne by the Government. He spends $75 a month, on an average, from his own funds for food for the table. Anything on the regular menu for the institution can go to his table and his guests, but if he wants something beyond the ordinary menu he pays for it.

Mr. SCHAFER. If he is to have this place for the entertainment of guests, why should not the heads of Veterans' Bureau hospitals have the same privilege?

Mr. CRAMTON. It would not be in order to put that in this bill. That bill is not before the House. This bill does not extend to the veteran's hospital. Under the law the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital is required to live in the hospital. The quarters furnished the superintendent for his home are in a building which was erected in 1855 and remodeled in 1872. There has been no change since that time, and these same quarters have always been occupied by the superintendent of the hospital. The quarters occupied by him are in the center of the building, housing about 1,000 patients. The entrance is through a hallway used by patients and others, as is also the stairway leading to his quarters, which are flanked on either side by wards.

These quarters are situated in such a way that it would be inconvenient, if not impossible, to divide them and use them for other purposes. They do not consist of 19 rooms, there being several less than that number.

Four employees, including a cook and an assistant, are employed in the superintendent's quarters but are not required to give full time to his service. Under the law these employees work only eight hours. They have 30 days' vacation and sick leave. These employees are not employed full time by the superintendent but devote their time when not so employed to other hospital duties.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Has the gentleman any information to indicate how much time they give to Doctor White's personal home and how much time they give to the patients?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not that information. During the past year the superintendent has entertained visitors from foreign countries, including representatives from Austria, England, Scotland, Australia, Denmark, Holland, France, Japan, Siam, Ceylon, and many other foreign countries. It is advantageous to the hospital to have these scientists visit it. They very often give clinics to the medical staff of the hospital for the benefit of the patients. They bring the last word in medical science and through such means the hospital is able to give its patients the most enlightened and curative treatment as required by the organic act. No paid help is furnished to employees with the exception of the superintendent and a maid four hours each day to the first assistant physician. These employees are all in the custodial grade, regular classified service.

For the other employees there is no help furnished, except a maid four hours a day for the first assistant physician.

It is not easy to get medical men of this training for this work. The number available is quite limited, and we certainly do not want to skimp on salaries for a man who has the responsibility for caring for 4,000 to 5,000 insane people. That is not my idea of the place to start in with economy.

Mr. SCHAFER. But the medical personnel is filled from the civil-service list, and I think if the gentleman will consult the Civil Service Commission he will find that there is no shortage in the number of applicants for these positions.

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me tell the gentleman a little something definite. There are 800,000 beds in hospitals in the United States, and of those 400,000 are in mental institutions in the United States. There are 150,000 physicians in the United States. About 1,500 of them are psychiatrists. Fifty per cent of the beds in the hospitals are for mental cases. Only 1 per cent of the physicians are at all trained to take care of the mental patients. That gives some idea of the difficulty of getting the right kind of personnel to do this work.

Something has been said about the automobile. The fact is that Superintendent White bought his own automobile without Government funds and pays for its operation when on personal business. When it is on Government business he gets no compensation for the use of his automobile for Government business. He pays for his telephone calls and telegrams, and so forth. I present in support of these statements the following from Mr. Sanger, assistant to the superintendent:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1929.

HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: I inclose herewith a statement covering some of the pertinent facts bearing upon the furnishing of quarters, heat, light, etc., to officers and employees of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

I have underscored the heading of each paragraph giving you pertinent facts. The other information is descriptive, supporting these statements.

You will note on page 3 information pertaining to the number of rooms in the superintendent's quarters and the number of cooks employed for the superintendent; on page 4 information pertaining to the number of visiting scientists entertained during the last year, and information that paid help is furnished to only one other officer or employee; on page 5 there are statements showing that the superintendent owns his own automobile, contributes toward buying groceries for his table, and pays for his personal telegrams and toll telephone messages.

Very sincerely yours,

MONIE SANGER,
Assistant to the Superintendent.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1929.

SOME PERTINENT FACTS BEARING UPON THE FURNISHING OF QUARTERS, HEAT, LIGHT, ETC., TO OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

Furnishing of quarters, etc., to officers and employees of mental institutions is not a new thing. It has been the practice in institutions throughout the United States, and we believe the civilized world, to furnish such quarters to officers and employees for such a length of time that there are no records to the contrary. This practice has continued without question up to the time that the comptroller raised the question with regard to the officers and employees of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Quarters and subsistence, including heating and lighting, etc., are not furnished for the benefit of the officers and employees. The sole reason for giving such service is for the benefit, care, and treatment of the patients, who are wards of the Government, and for the protection of the public property.

Officers and employees who are given these quarters are required to be subject to call 24 hours, with the right to call on them for such service 365 days each year.

These additional allowances are incident to the work and not a reward. Officers and employees must incur additional responsibility and hazards of living in the hospital, and, where they have families, bring up their children in the environment of a mental institution; and they must be ready to respond to any emergency such as a surgical operation or a fire at any and all times.

The environment in which the officers and employees live is not a desirable one. There are great hazards and employees are frequently attacked, and there are instances on record where they have been killed by patients.

All employees are not permitted to live on the hospital reservation. When the original classification bill became a law more than 500 employees resided on the reservation. This number was reduced to include only those absolutely essential for the proper care and treatment of the patients and protection of the property. More than 350 employees moved out of the hospital, and approximately 130 at the present time reside on the hospital reservation.

Under the law the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital is required to live in the hospital.

The quarters furnished the superintendent for his home are in a building which was erected in 1855 and remodeled in 1872. There has been no change since that time and these same quarters have always been occupied by the superintendent of the hospital.

The quarters occupied by the superintendent are in the center of a building housing about 1,000 patients. The entrance is through a hallway used by patients and others, as is also the stairway leading to his quarters, which are flanked on either side by wards.

These quarters are situated in such a way that it would be inconvenient, if not impossible, to divide them and use them for other purposes. They do not consist of 19 rooms, there being several less than that number.

Four employees, including a cook and an assistant, are employed in the superintendent's quarters, but are not required to give full time to his service. Under the law these employees work only 8 hours have 30 days' vacation, and sick leave. These employees are not employed full time for the superintendent, but devote their time when not so employed to other hospital duties.

The superintendent must be considered in two capacities. First, in his official position representing the Government; second, in his personal position as an employee. In his official position representing the Government he must entertain prominent scientists from practically every country in the world and from the various States.

During the past year the superintendent has entertained on an average about one visiting scientist each week. These visitors from foreign countries included representatives from Austria, England, Scotland, Australia, Denmark, Holland, France, Japan, Siam, Ceylon, and many other foreign countries. It is advantageous to the hospital to have these scientists visit it. They very often give clinics to the medical staff of the hospital for the benefit of the patients. They bring the last word in medical science, and through such means the hospital is able to give its patients the most enlightened and curative treatment, as required by the organic act.

No paid help is furnished to employees with the exception of the superintendent and a maid four hours each day to the first assistant physician. These employees are all in the custodial grade, regular classified service.

It is difficult to get sufficient medical officers for the work of the institution. There have been 72 separations from the hospital staff during the past six years. To make reductions from the salary for quarters and other allowances would have a tendency to make it still more difficult to get help.

There are about 800,000 beds in hospitals throughout the United States, one-half of which, or 400,000, are in mental institutions. There are about 150,000 physicians throughout the United States, about 1,500 of whom are psychiatrists. While 50 per cent of the beds in hospitals are for mental cases, only 1 per cent of the physicians throughout the country are at all trained to take care of mental patients. This is a fair indication of the degree of difficulty in getting adequate and properly trained personnel for this character of service.

The superintendent has his own automobile, maintenance, and cost paid for out of his own funds.

The superintendent pays for personal telephone calls and telegrams out of his salary.

Quarters and allowances, including subsistence, furnished the superintendent at this time are the same as have been furnished to all superintendents since the opening of the institution in 1855, and were offered to the present superintendent when he was appointed to the position. The food furnished to him is of the same class as is furnished to the patients. Anything additional the superintendent must purchase out of his own funds. This includes anything unusual or special supplies required to assist in entertaining visitors. This has averaged about $75 each month, which he pays out of his salary.

The quarters occupied by the superintendent are occupied by and for the United States Government in his capacity as superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, not in his personal capacity.

I think that information may help to leaven the general discussion that we have had on this question. I was in hopes that my amendment would go far in meeting the objections of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], because my amendment does not make an exception of St. Elizabeths, but it makes it clear that the Personnel Classification Board are to act so as to fix the salary schedule and to make any needed deductions therefrom for quarters. In other words, they are to take St. Elizabeths up anew and handle it in a way that will not constitute an undesirable precedent for other institutions.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, those Members who are particular that the Committee on Appropriations shall not usurp the functions of the legislative committees, and that the executive branch of the Government does not usurp the functions of the legislative branch, should oppose this amendment. The adoption of this amendment will be a step toward legalizing and validating the appropriation that Doctor White made for personal allowances, amounting to $10,059 per annum, without any authority of law.

Let us look at the facts. The Comptroller General on August 15, 1928, revealed this situation in his decision A 23927: That in addition to the $7,500 per year salary allotted to the superintendent of St. Elizabeths, which has been increased to $9,000 per year under the Welch bill, he had received per year for laundry service an estimated amount of $300; for food, $2,676; for coal for kitchen, $195; a 19-room apartment, estimated rental value, $2,400; for a housekeeper, $1,020; for a waitress, $960; for a cook, $1,380; for an assistant cook, $1,080; and telephone service, $48.

Comptroller General McCarl recommended to the Secretary of the Interior that a discontinuance of some of the allowances be held in abeyance pending consideration by Congress. The comptroller, however, indicated that some of the allowances be immediately discontinued.

The comptroller's letter of October 11, 1928, to the Secretary of the Interior states in part:

This office can not accept the view you advance that the Congress has heretofore expressly or impliedly sanctioned or approved the furnishing of the various allowances referred to in my decision of August 15, 1928, to the extent there set forth and free of charge or without being considered as a part of the compensation of the officers or employees under St. Elizabeths Hospital. And while this office would be disposed to permit a postponement of the final adjustment of the salaries of the officers and employees involved until the Congress shall have had an opportunity to give consideration to the matter, it is suggested for your consideration whether there are not now being furnished to certain of the personnel allowances which should be immediately discontinued, such as servants, automobiles, laundry service, personal telephone service, etc., leaving for continuance pending presentation of the matter to the Congress only such allowances as may be generally classed as bed and board, that is, rooms and meals. Your views in this connection are requested.

Mr. Speaker, Doctor White testified before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which I am a member, and gave the information which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has just given to the House. Doctor White did not admit that he had authority of law to make those expenditures. He called to the attention of the committee that it was a difficult matter to obtain qualified doctors for the institution, notwithstanding the fact that the Government is operating institutions for the care of mentally sick war veterans, and has no difficulty in obtaining qualified physicians. Do we want to agree with Doctor White and Mr. CRAMTON that this Government is taking care of the inmates at St. Elizabeths, many of whom are jailbirds, in a much better manner than it takes care of the disabled incompetent and mentally sick veterans of the Nation's wars?

Let us look at some of the salaries and allowances in Government hospitals where the mentally sick veterans are cared for. I quote now from the hearings held December 19, 1928, before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, this session of Congress.

Mr. McCarl makes this statement at page 21:

Although my report submitted May 19, 1928, referred only to a civilian branch of the Government and to laws relating to officers and employees in the civilian branch of the Government, pursuant to the specific request of the committee there has been included in the chart or tabulation the salary rates, quarters, etc., of officers in charge of Army and Navy hospitals which are controlled by other statutes in terms other than appearing in the statutes governing the payment of salary and furnishing of quarters to officers and employees in the civilian branch of the Government. Reference to the chart or tabulation will show that under the Veterans' Bureau, which is a civilian branch, the value of quarters and other allowances in kind to the officers in charge of the hospitals has been determined and deducted from the total salary rate as required by law. With respect to the Army and Navy, the hospitals usually are in charge of a colonel (Army) or captain (Navy); and under the laws relating to the pay and allowances of such officers, the maximum which either may receive in pay and allowances (quarters and subsistence) is $7,200 a year. That is to say, if the officer is not furnished quarters or subsistence in kind, his entire gross compensation may not exceed $7,200 a year. If he is furnished quarters in kind (the maximum authorized allowance of which is seven rooms), the maximum amount that he could then receive would be $6,000 as salary, plus a cash subsistence allowance of $438 a year, or an aggregate compensation of $6,438 and a 7-room house. The Army and Navy do not furnish subsistence in kind to officers living in Government quarters; neither are Army and Navy officers entitled to be furnished laundry or servants at Government expense.

A table appears in the hearing on pages 22 and 23, which shows that the medical superintendent at North Chicago, Ill., receives a total annual salary of $6,500, allowance for quarters $750, and no other allowances such as Doctor White has granted himself. The table further shows that the medical superintendent at Camp Custer, Mich., receives a total salary of $6,500 per year, $690 for quarters, and no other allowances. The quarters' allowance is deducted from the salary in both cases. And remember that United States Veterans' Bureau hospitals at Camp Custer, Mich., and North Chicago, Ill., are Federal Government hospitals in which are cared for mentally sick, shell-shocked, and insane war veterans. Is there any reason which would warrant the Congress of the United States taking one step leading toward the legalizing of the illegal expenditures of the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths?

There is not.

Action should be taken by the proper law enforcement officials of this Government to make the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital return to the people's Treasury every dollar which he has expended for personal allowances without legal authority.

The pending amendment should be defeated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The House divided (on demand of Mr. SCHAFER); and there were—ayes 47, noes 8.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, before the Speaker passes on the point of order I ask unanimous consent if it is possible to do this—I do not object to the roll call—but the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] is called away by serious illness in his family, leaving at 3 o'clock. He has been promised time in general debate on the next bill. I wish it were possible for the gentleman from Kentucky to have some time now, say, 10 minutes——

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman I withdraw the point of no quorum. The matter can be threshed out later before a legislative committee. [Applause.]

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is very kind of the gentleman. Does the message state the Senate asks for a conference?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate has not asked for a conference.

Mr. CRAMTON. I move that we ask for a conference and that the conferees be appointed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to ask for a further conference on the disagreement between the two Houses.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. MURPHY, and Mr. TAYLOR.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, this day, the 17th day of January, is the anniversary of the birth of one of the greatest of American citizens, one of the founders of the Republic, Dr. Benjamin Franklin, statesman, philosopher, scientist, author, patriot, and, withal, an ideal American gentleman. He was born on January 17, 1706, and died on April 17, 1790.

Benjamin Franklin had a most distinguished career in the early history of our country. His signature appears on four of the most important documents in our annals: On the Declaration of Independence, on the treaty of alliance with France, on the treaty of peace with England, and on the Constitution of the United States.

In Chicago and elsewhere there are organizations of men who bear the Christian or given name of this distinguished American. They are known as the "Benjamin Franklins," their initials being in every instance "B. F." The Chicago organization annually celebrates this day, and I have here a symposium of the great virtues of this illustrious American, prepared by the "Benjamin Franklins" of Chicago. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including therein a brief statement of the life and work of this distinguished fellow citizen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by including in the same certain tributes to Benjamin Franklin. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

[From the Benjamin Franklins of Chicago]

TO ENCOURAGE DISCUSSION OF AND INCREASE INTEREST IN THE GREAT CONTRIBUTION FRANKLIN MADE TO HIS GENERATION AND POSTERITY

On January 17 we celebrate the two hundred and twenty-third birthday of that great American, the many-sided Benjamin Franklin. The life work of this plodding and resourceful genius stands out as one of the great gifts to mankind and it would seem worth while to encourage the discussion of and intensify interest in the great contribution that he made to his generation and posterity, thereby inducing emulation of his thrift, industry, public spirit, and other fine qualities.

So general were his activities, so versatile his achievements, so genuine his public spirit, that his useful life appeals to the interest and incentive of people in every field of endeavor.

His thrift, his sterling honesty, his natural simplicity, his keen sense of justice, his patience and endeavor in overcoming obstacles all serve as examples and inspiration to worth-while service.

The literature devoted to his career is voluminous. It is doubtful if any other eminent man has left so complete a record of his own life as Benjamin Franklin. There is scarcely an important incident in his life which is not described by himself in his remarkable autobiography or in his correspondence to be found in biographies by Bigelow, Sparks, Morse, and others.

Of no other man can it be said that he distinguished himself as a business man, inventor, printer, editor, publicist, author, statesman, diplomat, harmonizer, public servant, educator, philosopher, philanthropist, benefactor, and exemplar.

As an inventor and scientist he greatly improved the methods of printing by devising an improved printing press; he invented the Franklin stove. He taught much regarding electricity through his writings. By flying his kite and other experiments in electricity he began the great work which Edison still carries on.

As a publisher he edited the Pennsylvania Gazette and later Poor Richard's Almanac, in which he displayed his incomparable faculty of translating great principles into terms of simple anecdote. Its reputation was established by its first issue, and it was the first American literary production to find favor in foreign lands. Franklin has never ceased to be Poor Richard teaching the basic facts which are essential to normal living and true progress. Here follows a few sayings from Poor Richard's Almanac:

"The noblest question in the world is, What good may I do in it?"

"Reading makes a full man; meditation a profound man; discourse a clear man."

"Cæsar did not merit the triumphal car more than he that conquers himself."

"Good sense is a thing all need, few have, and none think they want."

"Sloth, like rust, consumes faster than labor wears, while the used key is always bright."

"Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that's the stuff life is made of."

"Laziness travels so slowly that poverty soon overtakes him."

"Early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise."

"Little strokes fell great oaks."

"It's the easiest thing in the world for a man to deceive himself."

"Lost time is never found again, and what we call time enough always proves little enough."

"If you would be wealthy, think of saving as well as of getting."

"Plough deep, while sluggards sleep, and you shall have corn to sell and to keep."

"Leisure is time for doing something useful."

"A wise man will desire no more than what he may get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly."

"If you would reap praise you must sow the seeds; gentle words and useful deeds."

He organized the Junto Club for the study and discussion of morals, politics, and natural philosophy, which led to the establishment of the Philadelphia Public Library. It became the parent of all public libraries in America and paved the way for the great philanthropy of Andrew Carnegie.

He helped to establish the American Philosophical Society and was one of the founders of the Academy of the Province of Pennsylvania, which finally became the University of Pennsylvania. With little school training he so educated himself that he was recognized as a great philosopher and received the degree of doctor of laws from the University of St. Andrews, at Edinburgh. He also received honors from many other universities and societies in the United States and Europe.

He carried on correspondence with nearly every important man in this country and many of the leading characters of other countries. His correspondence covers quite fully the early history of this country and its foreign relations.

It has been said of him that he never said a word too soon, never said a word too late, and never said a word too much. While he never seemed to attempt eloquence, he never spoke without attaining it. He was sparing with words but lavish with ideas.

He organized the police and fire departments and did much toward improving the streets of Philadelphia and starting the good-roads movement.

As showing what many of our present generation think of Franklin, the professors of the University of Washington included Franklin as the only American in a list of men whom they considered had made the greatest contribution to learning in the history of the world—the list including 3 Greeks, 3 Germans, 3 Italians, a Scotchman, a Roman, a Frenchman, a Hebrew, and a Dutchman.

As early as 1754 he wrote a treatise showing that the Colonies must be united, and this first public proposal grew and crystallized and resulted in the United States of America.

He organized and was president of the first society ever formed in America to advocate the abolition of slavery, and sent the first protest on this subject ever addressed to the Congress of the United States.

As a public official he served as clerk of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, postmaster of Philadelphia, Postmaster General of the Colonies, was a delegate to the constitutional convention of Pennsylvania, and served three terms as president of Pennsylvania.

He was elected a delegate to the provincial congress, which appointed him a member of a committee of five to frame the Declaration of Independence. While the makers of the Declaration of Independence were signing, John Hancock said to Franklin: "We must all hang together." "Yes," replied Franklin with his brilliant wit, "We must all hang together or most assuredly we will all hang separately."

He worked energetically in war times, but he was a constant advocate of peace. More than once he said, "There never was a good war or a bad peace. What repeated follies are these repeated wars." Thus he was a pioneer in the great work for world peace.

He was our first colonial messenger to England, and was successful in securing the repeal of the unjust stamp act and adjusting other delicate problems of diplomacy. He was our minister to France, and through remarkable feats of tactful diplomacy he secured financial and military support and established friendly relations which have been beneficial and enduring to the present time.

During his life he stood in the presence of five different kings and many of the most cunning diplomats of his time under embarrassing and complicated situations, but always his influence tended to supplant chaos with order, discord with harmony, enmity with friendship, and indiscretion with wisdom.

He was 81 years of age when he was chosen a delegate to the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States in 1787. The convention had been in session for five weeks without writing a word or sentence, and on the last morning of the fifth week during a very heated discussion the delegates threatened to adjourn and abandon the great purpose for which they had met. Washington, his face white with anxiety, looked at Franklin, hoping that he could do something or say something that would hold the delegates together for another effort. Franklin made a very eloquent appeal that they open their sessions with prayer, and from that moment they began to make progress in the framing and adoption of that old fame-crowned document.

In the realm of statecraft his name among all the great sons of America is to be found in signature upon the four great documents which make us a free people; namely, the Declaration of Independence, the treaty of alliance with France, the treaty of peace with England, and last, but not least, the Constitution of the United States. He is one of the few men in our history whom it is difficult to overpraise.

When his death was announced in the National Assembly of France that body, on motion of Mirabeau, seconded by Lafayette, adjourned in his honor. In delivering the eulogium the great orator of the Revolution said:

"Franklin is dead. The genius that freed America and poured a flood of light over Europe has returned to the bosom of Divinity. The sage whom two worlds claim as their own, the man for whom the history of science and the history of empires contend with each other, held without doubt a high rank in the human race. Antiquity would have raised altars to this mighty genius, who, to the advantage of mankind, compassing in his mind the heavens and the earth, was able to restrain alike thunderbolts and tyrants. Europe, enlightened and free, owes at least a token of remembrance and regret to one of the greatest men who have ever been engaged in the service of philosophy and of liberty."

Franklin, in the unequaled sweep of his genius, is one of the greatest of American intellects. He was the first American to attract the attention of the world, and he typifies as none other that product of our institutions, the self-made man.

No brief statement can do justice to the generous contributions and fruitful service of Benjamin Franklin to civilization. To understand and appreciate Franklin one must read his autobiography and some of his correspondence. Few things in all literature are so illuminating, informative, and inspiring. In this age of reckless extravagance and loose thinking, copious selections from his writings could well and profitably be made a part of the curriculum of educational institutions here and in other countries.

The two Americans who seem to typify the average American character are Franklin and Lincoln, and both unite in their personalities the qualities of good humor, genial fellowship, generous patriotism, originality of thought, simplicity of ideas, unwearying industry, all of which are, or at least were, peculiar characteristics of our people.

No nation has ever gone down while it produced and revered great men. No nation has long survived when it ceased to produce and revere great men.

If Franklin could return to earth to-day, he would stand in wonder and rapt admiration at the wonders of steam and electricity and especially of the wireless and radio. Franklin, the philosopher always, with that common sense which with all his learning was his greatest characteristic, would say that the true question was not whether one could talk a thousand miles but whether when one did thus talk over the radio he had anything to say that was truly worth saying.

By revering the memory of Franklin, by rendering honor unto him to whom honor is due, by studying his life and emulating his example, we shall gain new inspiration with which to carry on the unfinished work.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1930

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is any arrangement made as to time?

Mr. CULLEN. May I suggest to the gentleman from New Hampshire that we run along for a while indefinitely, without fixing the time for general debate?

Mr. WASON. And we shall divide the time equally between ourselves?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes. I have several requests for time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to proceed with the general debate without fixing the time; the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN] and himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16301. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16301, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16301, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] is recognized.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I desire to express my appreciation of the courtesy extended to me by the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire, chairman of our subcommittee [Mr. WASON], in charge of the bill in permitting me to address the House at this time. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] for withdrawing the point of no quorum, thereby avoiding a roll call.

The bill as reported to the House carries an appropriation of $541,314,144. The amount of the appropriation for the 26 independent agencies in our bill was practically $13,000,000 less than the sum total herein. The committee recommend an increase for the Veterans' Bureau of almost $14,500,000, which more than covers the increased total of the bill.

The agencies for which we appropriate are set forth as follows:

Alaskan Relief.
American Battle Monuments Commission.
Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission.
Board of Mediation.
Board of Tax Appeals.
Bureau of Efficiency.
Civil Service Commission.
Commission of Fine Arts.
Employees' Compensation Commission.
Executive.
Federal Board for Vocational Education.
Federal Power Commission.
Federal Radio Commission.
Federal Reserve Board.
Federal Trade Commission.
General Accounting Office.
Housing Corporation.
Interstate Commerce Commission.
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.
Public Buildings and Public Parks.
Smithsonian Institution.
Tariff Commission.
United States Geographic Board.
United States Shipping Board.
United States Veterans' Bureau.
White House.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE

In this item is included the salary of the President and Vice President and the expenses connected with their activities, including the maintenance of the Executive Mansion and grounds and the cost incident to the White House police. The total of this item is $458,120, which is a Budget increase of $20,940. It has an increase in salaries of $14,570 and an increase of $6,470 for the painting of the exterior of the White House.

AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION

This commission, of which Gen. John J. Pershing is chairman, is charged with—

(a) The erection of a memorial chapel in each of the eight American cemeteries in Europe and the construction of masonry walls at the cemeteries where needed. The names of these cemeteries and their locations are as follows:

Meuse-Argonne American Cemetery, near Romagne, France.
St. Mihiel American Cemetery, near Thiacourt, France.
Oise-Aisne American Cemetery, near Fere-en-Tardenois, France.
Aisne-Marne American Cemetery, near Belleau, France.
Somme American Cemetery, near Bony, France.
Flanders Field American Cemetery, near Waereghem, Belgium.
Suresnes American Cemetery, at Suresnes (near Paris), France.
Brookwood American Cemetery, at Brookwood, England.

(b) The erection of 15 memorials at the following places outside of the cemeteries:

Montfaucon, France.
Montsec, France.
Near Chateau-Thierry, France.
Brest, France.
London, England.
Tours, France.
Rome, Italy.
Near Bellicourt, France.
On Blanc Mont Ridge, in the Champagne Region, France.
Audenarde, Belgium.
Near Ypres, Belgium.
Cantigny, France.
Gibraltar.
Corfu, Greece.
Ponta Delgada, Azores Islands.

(c) The placing of two bronze memorial tablets, one at Chaumont, France, and the other at Souilly, France, to mark, respectively, the headquarters of the American Expeditionary Forces and the American First Army during the World War.

It was originally contemplated that $3,000,000 could well be the limit of costs, but General Pershing showed that prices for materials and construction in Europe have increased approximately 40 per cent and that it was necessary to increase the authorization to $4,500,000. With this sum the additional costs of material and construction can be cared for and necessary landscape gardening and other beautification features in the cemeteries can be provided. This increase has the Budget approval.

The status of work on the projects at this time is as follows: The site for each of our memorials has been selected and all sites but 6 have been obtained; designs for 19 of the memorials, including all 8 of the chapels, have been approved; working drawings for 14 of these have been completed by the architects; bids for the construction of 11 have been received; 7 of the memorials are under actual construction; and it is expected that 6 others will be under construction by late winter.

The memorials now under construction are as follows:

Monument near Chateau-Thierry, France.
Chapel in the Oise-Aisne Cemetery, near Fere-en-Tardenois, France.
Chapel in the Aisne-Marne Cemetery, near Belleau, France.
Chapel in the Brookwood Cemetery, near Brookwood, England.
Chapel in the Flanders Field Cemetery, near Waereghem, Belgium.
Monument near Kemmel, Belgium.
Monument near Audenarde, Belgium.

The bill carries $600,000 for this item as against $700,000 for 1929.

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE COMMISSION

The Budget estimate of $2,000,000 for this item has been included in the bill. This sum is $300,000 less than the amount carried for 1929. Colonel Grant, who is in charge of this program, reports that the work is progressing within the scheduled period and that the bridge will be completed in 1930; and by the providing of temporary approaches at the ends of the bridge it can be made available for traffic during the calendar year 1931. This use, practicable in 1931, is contingent upon the State of Virginia providing a suitable highway approach.

Colonel Grant also informs us that the construction thus far is within the estimates submitted to Congress except the so-called water gate and the Washington side connection with the Lincoln Memorial. It is contemplated to add a water pass at the Washington end of the bridge at an estimated cost of $160,000. Colonel Grant states that certain nonessentials may easily be dispensed with to provide this essential without any increase in cost.

PROPOSED OPERATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1930

During this fiscal year it is expected that all contracts previously entered into will be completed. New contracts will be made for surfacing the sidewalks and roadways of the two bridges and the roadway across Columbia Island and from the Virginia shore to the Georgetown-Alexandria road, so as to make the bridge usable by the end of the fiscal year.

The necessary fenders for the protection of the draw span will be installed.

A contract will be let for carving the eagle stones over the piers and abutments of the bridge, and for the large statues at the entrance to the bridge and the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway.

Further purchases of land for the B Street extension will be made as favorable opportunities offer.

Before the end of the fiscal year a contract will be let for constructing the upstream bridge over the Boundary Channel, connecting with the Lee Boulevard and Virginia road system.

BOARD OF MEDIATION

The amount carried in this bill is $302,270, together with a reappropriation of $46,000 unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1928, which brings the total of the item to a little more than the appropriation for the current year.

Up to June 30, 1928, 363 cases had been submitted to the board, 256 of which had been disposed of—145 of these being settled during the fiscal year 1928. Of these 145 cases, 84 were settled through mediation, 14 were submitted to arbitration, 37 were withdrawn through mediation, 8 were withdrawn without mediation consideration, and 2 were closed by action of the board.

BOARD OF TAX APPEALS

The appropriation for this activity is practically the same as for the current year. The sum of $62,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1928 was reappropriated, together with $663,863, making a total of $725,863 for the fiscal year 1930. There is a reduction of six persons in the number of employees.

From the creation of the board, July 1, 1924, to October 31, 1928, there had been cases docketed to the number of 41,275, of which 20,734 had been disposed of on the latter date. So on that date there were pending 20,541 cases; 12,000 of these cases were for trial and 6,000 were on the reserve calendar, with the remainder not at issue.

Between 300 and 450 cases are filed each month. The work of the board has been sped up considerably within the past year and now they are disposing of between 650 and 975 cases per month. Thus far, 342 appeals have been taken from its decisions—37 cases affirmed, 27 cases reversed or modified, with 278 awaiting decision. The work of the board has been sped up through the employment of assistants to assist in writing up findings of fact and opinions, together with the right to prepare memorandum opinions.

In the last bill I called attention to the rent item for this activity and shortly thereafter a reduction in rent of some $5,000 was secured for the same quarters for the present fiscal year, with the same rate for the next fiscal year.

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY

The sum of $224,330 is appropriated for this activity—an increase of $17,780 over the current appropriation.

The report of the Budget estimate calls for an increase of one employee in the position of chief investigator, with a salary of $3,800. Mr. Herbert E. Brown, chief of the bureau, is very certain that he did not ask for this additional employee. In short, Mr. Brown states that the schedule of salaries and expenses was arranged as it is to suit the Budget Bureau. In 1929 a reserve of $5,000 was set up at the request of the Budget. Mr. Brown says it will be utilized. The reserve was set up, but, according to Mr. Brown, it is just a paper reserve. I do not feel that an estimate should be submitted for certain employees unless it is expected to be used for that purpose. Otherwise there is no need for such an estimate. From the hearings, which I insert herein, it is apparent that there was no additional employee on a salary of $3,800 requested by the Bureau of Efficiency; but was added by the Budget Bureau to enable the Bureau of Efficiency to set up a reserve of at least $3,800. In short, this sum was added in order that they might have a so-called reserve. I inclose herewith the hearings which bear out this conclusion:

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

Mr. WASON. Now, the first item is—

"For chief of bureau and other personal services in the District of Columbia; contract stenographic reporting services; contingent expenses, including traveling expenses; supplies, stationery; purchase and exchange of equipment; not to exceed $100 for law books, books of reference, and periodicals; and not to exceed $150 for street-car fare; in all $227,780, of which amount not to exceed $221,580 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia."

That is an increase of $17,780 over your present appropriation.

Mr. BROWN. That is to take care of the increases required by the Welch Act.

Mr. VINSON. There is one extra employee, too, is there not, Mr. Brown?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; it is not one additional employee. The details of the estimates here set up for salaries and expenses create the erroneous impression that we are asking for an increase in 1930 over 1929 of one employee at $3,800 per annum. It will be observed, however, that the total appropriation is the same for both years. This apparent increase is due to the fact that the Director of the Budget required us to set up a reserve of $5,000 for the fiscal year 1929, as was done in the previous year. The amount of the reserve had to be taken from the various subitems appearing in the detailed estimate; $3,800 was taken from the item for salaries and $1,200 from the various items for expenses. While we will put forth our best endeavors to keep this reserve intact, we do not believe we will be able to accomplish it without detriment to the work.

Mr. VINSON. That is for 1929?

Mr. BROWN. For 1929.

Mr. VINSON. Now, the estimate submitted to us from the Budget calls for a chief investigator at $3,800 per year. Is it satisfactory to you to strike out that amount from the appropriation?

Mr. BROWN. We should not like to have you strike anything from the appropriation.

Mr. VINSON. If you are not going to have an extra man, why should we carry that item of $3,800?

Mr. KERLIN. We have a staff at the present time that will absorb our entire appropriation, and it was only at the request of the Budget Bureau that we set up this reserve of $5,000. We had the same personnel requirements last year and set up a reserve of $5,000, but we turned back out of the total appropriations only about $350. In other words, we adjusted the 1929 items in these estimates in such a way as to show a reserve of $5,000.

Mr. VINSON. You have two chief investigators, as a matter of fact, that are being appropriated for for 1929?

Mr. KERLIN. That is the classification title.

Mr. VINSON. Well, you have two men under the heading "Chief investigator" who draw salaries of $3,800 per annum for 1929?

Mr. KERLIN. That is right.

Mr. VINSON. Now, for 1930, the estimate calls for three men at that salary. Is it planned to cut off that extra man, or do you need that extra man?

Mr. KERLIN. We need that full amount for salaries.

Mr. VINSON. Then, as a matter of fact, you do have an extra man estimated for, do you not?

Mr. BROWN. No.

Mr. VINSON. Let us let the record show wherein his statement that he has filed as part of the hearings, that there has been no increase of one employee, is not inaccurate.

Mr. WASON. That should be modified.

Mr. BROWN. We spent last year all the money that was given us, and very profitably, I may say in passing, we think, and we are asking for no more money for 1930 than we had for 1929.

Mr. VINSON. That statement is accurate.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. But in that same amount, according to the estimates submitted by the Budget, which evidently were made up in cooperation with your bureau, they call for one additional employee at a salary of $3,800 per annum.

Mr. KERLIN. That is partly offset by the reserve of $5,000 which the Budget Bureau specifically directed us to set up. We have set that up in years past, and we have subsequently used the reserve which we have set up.

Mr. VINSON. Then this $5,000 is the reserve which you have been requested to set up for the fiscal year 1929?

Mr. KERLIN. And we expect to use it; yes, sir.

Mr. VINSON. In fact, you are going to use practically all of it?

Mr. KERLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VINSON. Now, then, is it your intention to set up a reserve of $5,000 for the fiscal year of 1930?

Mr. KERLIN. That all depends upon the requirements of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. VINSON. If that happens, that does not mean anything except on paper?

Mr. BROWN. That is right.

Mr. VINSON. That is all?

Mr. BROWN. Absolutely.

Mr. VINSON. And this reserve of $5,000 for 1929, in dollars and cents, has not meant a thing?

Mr. BROWN. Not a thing.

Mr. VINSON. But that does not meet the question that, under the estimate submitted for 1930, you call for 66 employees. Now, if you were to call for 65 employees and a reserve of $3,800, your total would be identically the same and you would have no additional employees.

Mr. BROWN. That is right.

Mr. VINSON. And if you call for 66 employees, as against 65 the present fiscal year and do not set up the reserve, why, you are simply covering up.

Mr. BROWN. We are not covering up.

Mr. VINSON. I am interested in knowing, and I think Congress would be interested in knowing, how you got the Budget to O. K. and approve three chief investigators, when last year you used only 2 and when you only expect to use 2 this year.

Mr. KERLIN. Well, I would not like to say specifically we used three investigators last year, but we certainly used investigators which consumed the salary equal to those three.

Mr. SUMMERS. Do you mean different people you employed at different times?

Mr. KERLIN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS. Not listed here as regular employees and, consequently, do not enter immediately into the 65; is that it?

Mr. BROWN. That is it.

Mr. SUMMERS. I understand they had piece men here, here, and here. [Indicating.]

Mr. VINSON. I understand that, but here we have a set-up that is put in here in order to make the books balance. That is about the brass tacks of it, is it not?

Mr. BROWN. What we are trying to do as best we can is to give you a picture of what we will probably spend during the year, but the Lord knows whether it will be that way or some other way.

Mr. VINSON. The thing that attracted my attention, Mr. Brown, was your statement that the Budget estimate created an erroneous impression that you were asking for an increase of one employee for 1930.

Mr. BROWN. That is true; that is correct. It does give an erroneous impression.

Mr. VINSON. I can not follow that, when you evidently made out your case before the Budget, calling for an increase of one employee.

Mr. KERLIN. The Budget Bureau appreciates just what we are doing; they understood this situation exactly.

Mr. WASON. It means this, Mr. Brown, if I understand it: That they allowed you $3,800, which is equivalent to an additional salary for the two men that you had in 1929. And you propose to use this $3,800 that we are talking about for special men at different times during the year.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASON. Which will not be paid, the whole amount, to any one man?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON. And men doing other work than as chief investigators?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON. That is what I got from your statement a moment ago.

Mr. BROWN. Now let me explain this, if you will, please. Your committees up here frequently call on us for information, and we feel that we must be in a position to go out and hire a punch clerk for a week or some other short period. Now we can not say in advance that we shall need a punch clerk; we may need some other kind of a clerk.

Mr. VINSON. I think you could have a miscellaneous item there. Supposing you were called upon to investigate a bureau and you found a condition of this kind, Mr. Brown. Would not you think they were not particularly efficient in handling their pay roll?

Mr. BROWN. Well, I do not know that I should say that anybody would be efficient or inefficient in setting up that schedule or some other one. It is the best guess we can make.

Mr. KERLIN. Let me say this, if you will, please: We set up $5,000 two years ago and, if we had kept that reserve intact two years ago, our appropriation the following year would have been reduced by $5,000. Then one year ago we set up another reserve of $5,000 and if we had kept that intact the appropriation would have been reduced. That is the effect of the $5,000 reserve that the Budget Bureau requires our bureau to set up.

Mr. VINSON. But this reserve has not a thing on earth to do with your painting the picture to the Budget that you were going to have three chief investigators instead of two. Now there is no use confusing the matter; the reserve for the fiscal year 1929 has not a thing to do with the actual set-up here, showing an increase of one employee.

Mr. KERLIN. I might say this, so far as that is concerned, sir, that when we come to expend the money, if in setting up our staff we find we have to use that $5,000 reserve, we proceed and use it without any more ceremony about it.

Mr. VINSON. But you have not any reserve for 1930.

Mr. KERLIN. No.

Mr. VINSON. So that your reserve item and the estimates for 1930 are just as far apart as the poles.

Mr. WASON. At the foot of the list here, for last year, you have "reserve, $5,000."

Mr. VINSON. Yes; that is for the 1929 fiscal year.

Mr. WASON. Now, then, when this set-up was made, why should it not be $5,000, and then when we asked you what that was for—it was to employ special men or persons for an emergency.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. VINSON. In other words, the books could balance if you had 65 employees with $3,800 down there in an item called "reserve."

Mr. BROWN. We have no objection to its being shown that way.

Mr. KERLIN. The Budget Bureau requires it to be shown as a reserve.

Mr. WASON. If you will explain it to us, we will determine how it shall be presented to the Congress.

Mr. KERLIN. Yes.

Mr. WASON. The Budget Bureau is helpful, but they have trouble in explaining everything, the same as committees of the House. I think it is fairer to you men and fairer to Congress to have it appear as a reserve, and let you explain later how you use that $5,000.

Mr. VINSON. Of course. Then there won't be any covering up about it.

Mr. BROWN. You all know that I never cover up anything coming to the committee. That schedule of salaries and expenses was arranged as it is to suit the Budget Bureau.

Mr. SUMMERS. Either as a reserve or for miscellaneous employment. Either one would be understandable, it seems to me.

Mr. WASON. Reserve would be the shorter way.

Mr. KERLIN. These reserves are set up by practically all of the bureaus and independent offices.

Mr. VINSON. But certainly they do not call the reserve an extra man, Mr. Kerlin.

Mr. KERLIN. But they do absorb it in the items of the Budget just the same.

Mr. VINSON. Of course, you have that $3,800 in the total, but you have it in the guise of a man called "chief investigator," drawing $3,800.

Mr. KERLIN. We have such a small amount of money available for miscellaneous items that we could not begin to set up a reserve of $5,000 out of the miscellaneous-item appropriation.

Mr. VINSON. I do not see why you could not add $3,800 to any item, if you got the money.

Mr. KERLIN. It is a question of taking away from these items in order to set up a reserve.

Mr. WASON. It is immaterial how you keep the books of the expenses, but the picture is liable to affect anybody the way it affected me. When I looked at that I should have said, without your explanation, that you found it necessary to have a third investigator, the same as my colleague here.

Mr. VINSON. Why, of course.

Mr. WASON. Now, then, if we carry it as a reserve, if anybody wants to know what that means it means that from time to time you would need special help for a special purpose.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. WASON. And that is the way it is carried, as an emergency fund.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS. And it does not mean that you are going to put on a third man at $3,800?

Mr. BROWN. Not at all.

Mr. SUMMERS. But you are going to use that money for miscellaneous help in different ways, as you find it necessary during the year.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. WASON. Some of the investigations you made last year were at the request of the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. BROWN. They were; yes, sir.

Mr. WASON. For which you expended this $5,000?

Mr. BROWN. Part of the money we expended last year was to pay for investigations made for the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. WASON. And you made investigations and submitted reports to them?

Mr. BROWN. We did.

Mr. WASON. And the $5,000 is an emergency appropriation which you expect to use by employing different people for a short time?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. WASON. For specific investigations and reports?

Mr. BROWN. Yes. That is correct, is it not, Mr. Kerlin?

Mr. KERLIN. I do not know how we can express it to make it much plainer than that; but that is not a true picture of it.

Mr. VINSON. Just suggest what the true picture is.

Mr. WASON. As far as I am concerned, I think the appropriation set up last year shows the true picture. Then, if anybody asks what that $5,000 is for, we can say it is a fund which authorizes them to employ A, B, and C, as occasion may arise, to make investigations and reports.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. WASON. And that keeps your permanent personnel the same as last year?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. WASON. That is your purpose?

Mr. BROWN. Yes. That is the way I wish that you would put it.

Mr. Brown filed a statement of total estimated savings accomplished by his budget, $415,650, which was about equally divided between Federal establishments and the District government. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars of that amount represents the defeat of certain legislation in Congress relative to the employment of certain persons in the Bureau of Internal Revenue; $25,000 of this amount was caused by certain legislation which Congress passed last May, relative to the requirement of certain activities to make annual report; $79,000 is in recommendations made that in painting school buildings in the District, and in repairing motor vehicles in the District that it should be done in their repair shop. We do not know just the part which the Bureau of Efficiency played in these activities.

However, we thought that it was proper to take appraisal of the work of this bureau, so we felt that they should report to the Budget the amount of savings effected, and thereupon the Budget could indicate to Congress the savings effected as a result of the survey of the Bureau of Efficiency.

For this purpose we added this language in the bill:

Hereafter the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency shall certify annually to the Bureau of the Budget, for inclusion in the annual Budget, along with his estimates of appropriations for the ensuing year, a statement of the amount of the savings which he estimates have been effected in the various bureaus and offices of the Government, including the District of Columbia, as a result of the surveys and recommendations made by the Bureau of Efficiency during the previous year; and the Budget shall include a statement, following the estimate for the Bureau of Efficiency, of the reductions or adjustments of appropriations effected or proposed to be made in the appropriations for the respective bureaus or offices as a result of such surveys by the Bureau of Efficiency.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

We have recommended an increase of $93,450 over the appropriation for the current year. The amount carried herein is $1,251,562. There are 12 additional employees in the Washington office and 16 employees in the field service. The total additional salary item is $53,185. In the main, the examination growing out of prohibition work occasioned the increased personnel.

A most unusual occurrence to me was developed in the hearings relative to the manner in which reserves are set up. The commission requested an increase in personnel in the Washington office as follows:

Mr. DEMING. The Bureau of the Budget has approved increase in this item amounting to $25,950, distributed as follows:

1 assistant medical officer	$2,600
1 associate research assistant	3,200
3 service-record clerks, at $1,440	4,320
2 fingerprint classifiers, at $1,800	3,600
2 junior clerks or typists, at $1,440	2,880
3 field examiners, at $3,000	9,000
Total	25,600

In presenting the estimate to Congress, the Budget recommended an increase in personnel of 13. When attention was called to this fact it is disclosed that the additional employees were included in the Budget estimates in order that the commission might set up a reserve of $3,000 for 1930, and, if unexpended, it would appear to be an actual saving. To back up this conclusion, I insert a portion of the hearings:

Mr. VINSON. I notice that the Budget estimates call for 13 additional employees and the figures you submit call for 12. Where is the other one?

Mr. VIPOND. Our estimate is the Budget estimate.

Mr. VINSON. That may be, but these figures call for 12 additional employees, while the Budget estimates show an average increase of 12.

Mr. VIPOND. I know why that is. They put in the reserve as a reduction of force. We have objected to this method of fixing those columns, but our objections have been overruled. They use the reserve as showing a reduction in the force; and in order to keep the 1930 column in line with the estimates, and the 1929 appropriations, we have to make that difference of one or two employees, depending on the size of the reserve.

Mr. VINSON. The reserve here is $3,000.

Mr. VIPOND. That is shown as one employee.

THE COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS

During the fiscal year 1928 the Commission of Fine Arts gave particular attention to the public buildings program, which is under way in Washington, also to progress plans for the Arlington Memorial Bridge and plans for World War memorials in Europe, submitted by the American Battle Monuments Commission. These consist primarily of chapels and monuments, and designs for them have practically all been prepared and approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

PROJECTS COMING BEFORE THE COMMISSION

Other of the more important plans and projects which came before the commission during the fiscal year 1928 were—

Plans for enlargement of the Capitol Grounds and development of Union Station Plaza.
Water Street railroad bridge (to be built by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.).
M Street Bridge plans.
Freer Gallery of Art planting plan.
General Butler tablet.
Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.
Civic center plans, submitted by the District Commissioners.
Houdon bust for the Pan American Building.
President Lincoln memorial tablet for Arlington.
Corinthian column from Temple of Jupiter, Athens (proposed gift of the Greek Republic; submitted through Department of State).
General Miles flagstaff, Soldiers' Home.
Plans for bathing pool, McKinley High School Grounds.
Plans for Aisne Marne (Belleau Wood) plan for planting and approaches.
World War monuments at Brest, Cantigny, and Somme Py, France.
World War monuments at Tours and at Bony, France.
World War monuments at Montfaucon, Montsec, and Chateau Thierry, France.
Plans for bird house, Zoological Park.
Plan for center parking, Massachusetts Avenue.
Plan for community center and park, Brightwood.
Plan for bathing pool, Twenty-fifth and N Streets NW.
Plans for new Department of Commerce Building.
Plans for Internal Revenue Building.
Plans for development of Fort Humphreys.
Paul Junior High School plan.
Plan for grade school, Nineteenth and Columbia Road.
Plan for Potomac Park Heights School.
Plan for fire engine house No. 30, Piney Branch.
Farmers' Market site.
Sault Ste. Marie Reservation landscape plan.
Coast Guard Memorial, Arlington.
Monument to Gen. Artemas Ward.
Plan for United Cigar Stores Building, Fourteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue.
Design for Hawaii sesquicentennial coin.
Plans for development of Wakefield.
Park projects: Fort Stanton Park, Soapstone Creek Valley Parkway, Shepherd Parkway, Foundry Run tract, Fort Dupont Parkway, Recreation Center at Brookland, Great Falls Park, Potomac Avenue tract.
Red Cross Building—Memorial to the Women of the World War.
Agricultural Department World War Memorial.
Continental Office Building plan, Fourteenth and K Streets NW.
Hospice for Montfaucon plan.
Robert Lincoln Memorial, Arlington.
Plan for new boathouse, Tidal Basin.
Fort Sumter Memorial flagpole.
Memorial to Samuel Gompers, American Federation of Labor.
Meridian Hill Park plans; completion of lower garden.
Project for Negro World War Memorial.
Howard University Dormitory (plan).
National Arboretum project.
Buchanan Memorial.
Nurses' Home, Freedmen's Hospital (plan).
Washington Monument Grounds, project of development.
United States Supreme Court Building.
Great Falls Bridge (plan).
Wright Memorial.
Lindbergh Medal.
Lindbergh Statue, Paris, proposed by Representative KELLY.
Fort Lincoln development.
Painting of President Harding.
District of Columbia Armory, project for new building.
Mount Vernon Boulevard.
National Museum of Engineering and Industry.
Jane A. Delano Memorial.
Henry Clay Statue.
District of Columbia World War Memorial.
Thomas Edison Medal.
Urn (gift to the President by Cuba).
Seville International Exposition Building (plan for consulate).
Agriculture Department buildings; completion of central portion and extensible building.
George Rogers Clark Memorial, preliminary consideration.

The Government departments consult the commission informally as well as by formal reference of projects. The best results are obtained when preliminary consultations are held. During the past fiscal year the commission was frequently consulted by Senators and Members of Congress individually in regard to projects in which they were interested. In some 17 reported bills in the first session of the Seventieth Congress, and in about 65 other bills which are pending, the Commission of Fine Arts is specifically required to give advice, this in addition to the regular duties prescribed by the organic act.

MEMBERSHIP OF COMMISSION

The membership of the Commission of Fine Arts consists of Charles Moore, chairman; Lorado Taft, sculptor; Abram Garfield, architect; Benjamin W. Morris, architect; Ferruccio Vitale, landscape architect; Ezra Winter, painter; John W. Cross, architect.

The members are appointed by the President. They serve without compensation, and from the creation of the commission by Congress in 1910 the artist members have been drawn from the representative men of their several professions—all men of high training, broad experience, and successful achievement, and all devoted to the progressive development of the National Capital along the finest lines.

The total appropriation for this activity is $9,080.

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

The amount carried herein is $4,073,326, together with a small unexpended balance. It would look like a decrease. The increase over the present fiscal year, $318,000 plus, is more than accounted for by the increase in the employees compensation fund of $400,000. There is an increase in salary of $9,000. A rent item of $22,250 formerly carried in this item has been transferred to Public Buildings and Public Parks. Then, there is an item of $60,000 carried in the District of Columbia bill.

New language relating to Private Acts Nos. 120 and 290, Seventieth Congress, repealed the permanent appropriations made therein, and said appropriations are henceforth to be paid from the employees' compensation fund.

FEDERAL AID FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

The vocational education work of the board is provided for by permanent appropriations, totaling $7,367,000, of which $200,000 is for salaries and expenses in connection with the administration of the vocational education law. The committee has supplemented the latter sum by a direct appropriation in this bill of $13,400, as estimated by the Budget, for increases called for under the Welch Act. The bill also carries a direct appropriation of $30,000 for extending the benefits of the original act to the Territory of Hawaii.

The vocational rehabilitation work of the board is cared for out of annual appropriations. The Budget estimate of $700,000 for this purpose, which has been allowed by the committee, is $50,000 less than the current year's appropriation. The board itself does not engage in rehabilitation work. It only allots to the various States which have complied with the provisions of the act the proportion of the total sum due them on a basis of population. The States of Vermont, Connecticut, Delaware, Texas, Kansas, Washington, and Maryland are the only ones which have not as yet availed themselves of the benefits of the act. The reduction in the amount of the appropriation will not affect the amounts received by any State, for the reason that in the past the States have not met the total amount of the appropriation. The language of the appropriation provides that allotments to the States shall be on a basis of $1,034,000, and in the event the States in any given year should exceed, under the allotment, the amount actually appropriated the situation would be met through a deficiency appropriation.

Following is a table of the allotments to the States:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

There is an increase of $57,610 over the current appropriation. There is an increase of 11 employees at a cost of some $37,400. In the personnel requested there is a chief counsel at $6,500 a year and a valuation attorney at $5,600.

The secretary of the commission states that it is highly necessary for the valuation of the properties to be made now, else the public, if the recapture clause is exercised, may pay excess prices for the properties. The actual investment of the licensees must be known to determine accurately the net investment at the time of recapture. It is shown that this work is very largely in arrears.

There are total pending cases involving 87 projects, claims of $297,000,000. About 7 per cent, or $22,000,000, of claims have been settled by mutual agreement; 14 per cent, or $42,000,000, audited. There remain some $255,000,000 of claims not yet audited and $275,000,000 not yet settled. The total of claims eventually involved in connection with the projects already under license, if the projects are completed, will aggregate approximately $1,000,000.

According to the water power act, under which this commission operates, the receipts have a certain manner of distribution. The total receipts from licensees and distribution thereof is shown in the following:

The total expenditures as compared with receipts, first 10 years' operations, are set forth herein:

Expenditures compared with receipts, first 10 years' operations

NOTE.—Fees from licenses accrue and are payable according to the calendar year. They are deposited and accounted for according to the fiscal year.

The commission's first fiscal year expenditures covered the period between June 10, 1920 (the date of passage of the Federal water power act), and June 30, 1921—the fiscal year 1921—but the first fees from licenses did not become payable until December 31, 1921, being accounted for under the fiscal year 1922.

Hence, for the purposes of this statement, expenditures for the fiscal year 1921 are offset by receipts for the fiscal year 1922, and so on during succeeding years.

Fiscal year	Estimated total expenditures	Fiscal year	Offsets: Total receipts	Offsets: Portion of total receipts collected for the purpose of reimbursing costs of administration

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION,
Washington.

CONCLUSIONS

By this statement are shown:

1. That as offsetting the fiscal year 1925 receipts exceeded expenditures, direct or indirect, incurred in administering the Federal water power act by nearly $92,000.

2. That the commission arrived at a self-supporting basis following the end of the fiscal year 1927, when total receipts practically offset total expenditures.

3. That receipts now in course of collection as following the fiscal year 1928 will total $438,700, or two and one-third times last year's expenditures, direct or indirect.

4. That estimated collections following the present fiscal year (1929) will be $483,126, or two and one-half times the present year's expenditures, direct or indirect.

5. For the fiscal year 1930, estimates for which are now being considered, expenditures, direct and indirect, are estimated at $265,000. Practically twice that amount, $525,000, will be collected from licensees immediately after the end of the year.

HOUSING CORPORATION

The appropriation carried in this bill is $243,450, together with the unexpended balance of $144,000, making a total of $387,450. The appropriation for the fiscal year 1929, $475,750, with the reserve of $53,250 set up. It is stated that before the end of the present fiscal year all the field offices involving any administration expenditures will be closed with the exception of Bremerton, Wash., Vallejo, Calif., and Erie and Philadelphia, Pa. There is a reduction of nine employees.

There are 1,880 mortgages, totaling $3,508,796.51, outstanding as of October 1, 1928, together with 250 parcels of real estate with the appraised valuation of $115,409.39.

The Government hotels showed an excess of receipts over disbursements for 1928, $21,481.45; and up to June 30, 1928, had covered into the Treasury of the United States $292,149.26 in excess of all appropriation disbursements incident to their operation. This does not take into consideration interest and amortization charges.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

This bill carries the sum of $7,496,289, together with reappropriation of unexpended balances of $665,000, making a total of $8,161,289 actually available, an increase of $507,844 over the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

There is only one item in which the committee has not met the Budget estimate, and that is in the general expense item. The Budget estimated for 25 additional associate examiners, and we recommend the appropriation for 13 at an average of $3,378 per annum, together with travel expense for that number.

There is no doubt but that there is a congestion of the docket of formal cases. A normal docket of such cases is between 1,800 and 2,000. At present there are some 2,800 cases on the docket, but the decision of the cases has sped up considerably. This year the commission decided 1,900 cases—375 more than they did the year previous. In 1922, the commission decided 1,013 cases, so there has been an increase of almost 100 per cent since this latter date. The commission had 68 examiners in 1923; now they have 117. This increase is about 85 per cent.

It was stated before the committee that the commission was working overtime and could not stand up under the present strain. Commissioner Eastman feared that the increased work of taking testimony in the field by the 25 additional examiners sought might bring about a most serious congestion in the "neck of the bottle," in the commission itself.

It was suggested that they were going to make an effort to secure legislation which would give them authority to delegate certain powers theretofore nondelegable; and it was suggested that there might be a redistribution of the work in the commission. Your committee is anxious for the prompt disposition of the formal cases, but if there is to be a delay in trials, there is no difference where the delay is occasioned. It may as well be "in the field" as "in the commission." It was the thought of the committee that with the addition of 13 men, at this time, the congestion might be relieved.

In the discussion of the legislation which they may endeavor to secure this colloquy occurred between Commissioner Eastman and myself:

PROBABILITY OF CONGESTION IN WORK OF COMMISSIONERS IF ADDITIONAL EXAMINERS ARE PROVIDED

Mr. VINSON. Without such authority, how many additional associate examiners would bring about this condition at the neck of the bottle to which you refer?

Mr. EASTMAN. I think myself we are pretty near up to that point of congestion now. I know that I have handled pretty nearly all the cases during the last year that it is physically possible for me to handle without neglecting some of them.

Mr. VINSON. Would it be a practicable thing to do to add these 25 additional associate examiners?

Mr. EASTMAN. Yes. I ought to say this: I happen to be a member of division 4 of the commission and also of division 6. I think that the work is now a little improperly distributed between the divisions. We have in mind a new distribution of the work. I think that division 4 gets too heavy a load at the present time in view of all the finance cases that it has to handle.

So that I think we can handle more work at the neck of the bottle by a little better distribution of the load than we have at the present time, even more work than we have now got. But only through overtime work can that be done, and I think this authority that we are seeking here would not only tend to prevent congestion, but it would ease the situation considerably.

Mr. VINSON. But, Mr. Commissioner, if the commission is now overburdened in its work the addition of these associate examiners, 25 in number, would certainly pile up your work tremendously.

Mr. EASTMAN. It will, and we have got to face that.

In this item, $20,000 is made immediately available for the purpose of starting off the additional associate examiners in their work. This was done at the instance of Commissioner Lewis, now chairman of the commission.

VALUATION OF CARRIERS

A very unusual thing occurred pertaining to the manner in which the estimates were submitted by the commission and approved by the Budget. It was while the item of salary for employees of the field service was under discussion that I called attention to Commissioner Lewis that while there were 197 employees appropriated for in the present fiscal year, and 199 for the next fiscal year, there appeared to be 78 new positions created with a deletion of 76 positions, with an increased appropriation of almost $100,000. Mr. Lewis immediately indicated to the committee that he knew that these estimates submitted to our committee by the Budget were erroneous and asked that he might be given an opportunity to look into the matter when he could then explain this condition. We insert herein the estimates for the present fiscal year and for the next fiscal year, as they came to us from the Budget; and the revised estimates submitted by Mr. Lewis:

Whereas there were six accountants at a salary of $4,900 added under the Budget estimate, there is not a single accountant drawing such salary in the revised estimate, and only one with a salary of $3,600.

Whereas at present and under the revised estimate they will need 21 rodmen, under the estimate submitted by the Budget the rodmen were dispensed with. I mention these two instances as illustrative of the differences involved. Under the revised estimate 36 additional employees may be hired within the same limits of cost as recommended by the Budget.

It is very apparent to me what was done. No need to criticize the Budget for the creation of the estimate, as it was initiated in the commission, but it is rather strange that such difference in the salary increases and the nature of the services to be rendered would escape the Budget officers. It is fair to state that immediately upon being shown these estimates, Mr. Lewis was convinced that something was wrong and, after he had opportunity to look into it, he submitted this statement which contained the revised estimate.

Mr. LEWIS. That statement of estimated expenditures, 1930 field forces, is wrong. I here offer the correction. I must say that one of the most difficult undertakings I have in this valuation work is to estimate more than a year in advance the number of staff and salary requirements, particularly when, as in this work, there are constant changes in the character of the work taking place which have an effect on personnel and its distribution in and out of headquarters. Our original estimates made way last May for the year beginning July 1 next, called for something over 800 members of staff. When the present set-up was made, I happened to be in Arizona on commission business, and I did not see this estimate of field staff and salaries until it was laid before me in the independent offices appropriation bill. It provides an increase in our field staff of only two persons and more than $100,000 of salary. I am not surprised that that would attract your eye—it certainly does mine. I ask you gentlemen to substitute this revision of the 1930 estimate for field staff.

This corrected statement carries the same increase in total field work but adds 36 people. It is built up after consultation with our department heads on the basis of the number of field employees that we now have in our service at their present salaries and the addition of 36 at minimum salaries of the grades at which they would enter, ranging from $2,000 to $3,200 per annum. This covers the range of salaries generally in this type of our service.

Mr. Wason directs my attention to the fact that under the set-up to which you refer, the average salary for field employees for 1929 is $2,782, whereas the 1930 estimate would raise it to $3,257. The revised estimate which I am now submitting shows an average of $2,772, which is less rather than above the averages. It is inevitable that there will have to be certain readjustments in salaries made, but what we need most is the 36 additional people for this field work in the 1930 period. We can probably take care of salary readjustments in our turnover. We hope, under the appropriation which is recommended, to build up for the purposes that I have previously set forth, a staff of 736 people.

The amount carried for this item is $1,285,000, which is an increase of more than $600,000 over the current appropriation. Of this increase, $525,000 goes toward the consideration of a full-scale wind tunnel to be erected at a limit of cost of $900,000.

There is no doubt in our mind that the work of this committee has proved of wonderful service in the development of airplanes. To illustrate their work, we will insert a portion of the hearings dealing with the cooling of the air-cooled radial engine so as to diminish the head resistance. This has been heralded as one of the greatest advance movements in aviation. Here is Doctor Ames's statement on the subject:

REDUCING HEAD RESISTANCE RESULTING FROM USE OF AIR-COOLED MOTOR

When it comes to the problems of commercial aeronautics I have spoken about construction, but the most important example of advance made this last year by our committee was in answering a question which has been asked by every designer during the past year. It was one question on which every manufacturer at Langley Field last summer was unanimous in saying was the most important problem so far as commercial aeronautics is concerned.

You all know the type of engine now most used—used by Lindbergh and by Chamberlain and many others—is an air-cooled radial engine, of the type made by the Wright Aeronautical Corporation or by the Pratt & Whitney Co. These air-cooled engines offer great advantages over water-cooled engines for many purposes, but the trouble with them is that they stick out so much that they have very great head resistance. When they go through the air you have to use a lot of energy in horsepower just to get them through the air. They have a tremendous frontal area which has to be driven through the air. A lot of horsepower is used in overcoming what is called the drag, and all the manufacturers said that their most important problem was to know how to hood such an engine properly—put a cowling over it in some way so as to diminish the head resistance; make the air flow very smoothly rather than in a disturbed condition.

That problem is not as simple as it sounds; because if you put a hood over an air-cooled engine, then, of course, you keep the air from getting to the engine, and the engine no longer cools; so the problem was to find a compromise between those two things—to have as small a head resistance as you could and, at the same time, to have the proper amount of air come through, properly directed, so that the engine could be cooled. The interesting thing is that we have solved the problem, and I will show you some photographs of the application. It has been heralded all over the country and all over the world as the most important advance made in aviation since—well, any date you want to make.

What has happened has been this: That the number of horsepower which is required to maintain a given speed has been decreased by 20 or 30 per cent. In other words, if it required 200 horsepower to drive an airplane at a certain speed, you can do that now at about 160 horsepower. You are saving, in other words, about 20 per cent of your fuel. We have solved that problem satisfactorily, and not only have we done it in our laboratory—this was done in the propeller-research tunnel I spoke about—but after this was worked out experimentally in the laboratory it looked so good—almost too good—that we thought we would try it out on an airplane. We had a cowling made and put on an actual airplane and flew the actual airplane, and it came out within about 2 per cent of what we calculated.

There is another feature in connection with this problem that I would like to call attention to, that when this new cowling and cooling system is used on the airplanes now in service the savings in one year will pay for the cost of the new tunnel. In order to get the same speed they can use engines of less horsepower, less weight, at a less cost, less material everywhere, so that the actual saving to the industry will be large.

At the present time we lead the world in the work of the wind tunnel, and with this full-scale wind tunnel we will retain our place in the van.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND PUBLIC PARKS

This activity is under the supervision of Colonel Grant and there is carried an increase of $235,081 for the activities thereunder. The current appropriation is $2,888,061.

The regular maintenance item is $775,000; the extra work item—leveling of floors in the Navy and Munitions Buildings, $30,000; the installation of boilers, State, War and Navy, $40,000; emergency repairs temporary buildings, $10,000; repairs to War Department buildings, $4,000—total $84,000—stands off against $108,000 for extra work during the present fiscal year. In this regular maintenance item, rents total $196,545, the Barr Building and the employees' compensation space in the Investment Building having been transferred to this activity. If you will recall, in this bill last year attention of the House was called to the manner in which space was being rented for offices in the District, together with the idea that there might be a saving in the rent. It occurred to me that a considerable annual saving might be effectuated. Whether my efforts occasioned it or not, after the matter was brought to the light, in the second deficiency appropriation bill last session the office of Colonel Grant was authorized to rent the space needed for the different departments, including an authorization for the transfer of the rental money for the departments to this activity.

Colonel Grant said:

By pooling all of the requirements we are able to work out leases and assignments of quarters which were very much less expensive than they would have been the other way, and the method proved so valuable that it was deemed almost essential that the possibility be continued. By the amount appropriated you put a limit, of course, on what can be done; but if these arrangements can be continued as an authorization we can take care of emergency needs with any remainder we are able to save.

Mr. VINSON. What did you do in regard to that work? I would just like to get the picture.

Colonel GRANT. In the first place, the Public Buildings Commission picked out the rented space for which they felt too high a rent was being paid and notified the departments occupying those spaces that a renewal of their leases at those rates would not be approved. The commission then made a very thorough investigation of all the available space that could be found in Washington and the rates that would have to be paid therefor, and after this survey and consulting with the department heads concerned as to the satisfactory character of the space the Office of Public Buildings and Parks entered into leases for the space. Then the various departments that were being taken care of and had previous appropriations for their space were requested to transfer the funds corresponding to the amount of room rented.

Now, in renting that space, we considered the cost to the Government of maintaining the buildings and we made whichever bargain was cheapest. Either the owners would rent the building or the space we needed at a very low figure, provided they would not have any duties of maintenance and heating and care; or, in other cases, where they already had an organization for taking care of the building, we got more favorable prices by allowing them to furnish the janitor service, the heat, light, etc. So that this wording gave us the elasticity by which we could enter into whichever was the best bargain.

Mr. VINSON. You got a reduction in the rent of the quarters for the Board of Tax Appeals, did you not, in the Earle Building?

Colonel GRANT. Yes, sir.

Mr. VINSON. Did you secure a similar reduction for the Board of Mediation in the same building?

Colonel GRANT. Yes, sir.

Mr. VINSON. Then you got a reduction in the rent for the Emery Building?

Colonel GRANT. No, sir; the Emery Building rent was the same as we had been having. The decreases in the rent were in the Earle Building, in the Investment Building, and in the Otis Building. Those were the reductions in rent for space already occupied. Then we obtained additional space in the Lemon Building, in the Barr Building, and some additional space in the Earle Building and in the Investment Building at new low rates.

Mr. VINSON. Would you just insert a table showing the floor-space price per square foot, and the savings made?

Colonel GRANT. Yes, sir.

Mr. VINSON. And, Colonel Grant, I would like to have this study made, and a statement inserted in the record, showing the entire rental moneys paid by the Government in the District of Columbia for the independent agencies, as well as the departments.

Colonel GRANT. Yes, sir. We put that in the public-buildings report every year, sir.

Mr. VINSON. But that does not have the floor space, does it? I want to know what the rents are and where they are, and then what savings have been made.

Colonel GRANT. Yes, sir.

Mr. VINSON. I had overlooked it.

Colonel GRANT. Of course, that report for this year has not come out yet, because that is a calendar-year report and we are getting the information together for the present calendar year now.

Mr. WASON. And will the last report you issued cover what you have just testified to?

Colonel GRANT. It does not quite; no, sir; because that is up to the last of December. In order to answer this question, I will have to bring it up to a fiscal-year basis from the calendar year, but I can insert that statement.

In this connection Colonel Grant testifies that the average cost of the entire space cared for by his office for janitor service, light, heat, and so forth, is $0.3148 per square foot per annum. Each item is figured out to exactitude, and if it is cheaper to rent with the services furnished the lease is made in that wise. Last year inquiry was made as to the total rents paid in the District. We submit it to you in these figures:

There is no doubt in my mind but that the continued activity of this agency, looking toward the reduction in rents in the District, can save many thousands of dollars annually.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE

Appropriation for this item is $1,046,183, an increase of $102,021 compared with the current appropriation. The hearing upon this item was most interesting. A very interesting dissertation upon the astrophysical studies, including radiation of the sun and stars, was delivered. Then we traveled through the National Museum in a most interesting hearing. Doctor Sterling told us about his exploration of New Guinea and his sojourn among the most primitive type of human. By the time Doctor Wetmore, Doctor Abbott, and Doctor Sterling concluded their testimony, it was simply a question of what they wanted. The institution is one of which we can well be proud.

TARIFF COMMISSION

The amount of $778,000 is carried in this bill, an increase of $34,000 over the current appropriation.

Unless the work of this commission is of real benefit to the Committee on Ways and Means in drafting a new tariff bill, under the present set-up, it is not worth the money.

UNITED STATES GEOGRAPHIC BOARD

Members of this board are appointed from the various departments and serve without additional pay. Total appropriation for this item is $9,200. It is an interdepartmental body created by Executive order for the purpose of bringing about uniformity in usage of geographical designations among the various departments of the Government.

SHIPPING BOARD

The total of this appropriation is $11,494,000. It is $2,194,750 less than the amount carried for the present fiscal year.

COAL BOATS

In this bill there is carried for the fiscal year of 1930, $1,500,000, together with the reappropriation of the moneys unexpended for this item, at the end of the current fiscal year, which has been suggested by the Shipping Board to be $400,000. These sums are to be used for a continuation of reconditioning and operating of vessels engaged in transporting American coal to foreign markets.

In order to preserve the record it will be my purpose to describe what has been done, and some things not done, by the Shipping Board, to effectuate the purpose of Congress in this regard.

The last session of Congress when this bill was being considered by the House, an amendment was adopted from the floor, adding $1,000,000 to the bill, to recondition and operate Shipping Board vessels in the coal trade.

For no good reason shown, the Shipping Board did not authorize the Fleet Corporation to have any vessels in readiness to enter upon this service until October 9, 1928, when three vessels were ordered for Mediterranean trade, and on November 23 three additional boats were authorized to be reconditioned. The fact is, that the first boat reconditioned, the Naamkook, was sold prior to its being loaded. It was sold November 8, 1928; it was completed on November 10, 1928; and was delivered to the purchaser on November 14. So there was not a boat loaded under the provisions of the act until December, and at this time only two vessels have left American ports with coal, and none returned. There has not been a single round trip made.

Yet some astonishing statements are contained in the hearings upon the question of costs, and losses that will be entailed in the transportation of coal. At one point it is intimated that there will be a loss of $6 per ton, but when this statement is scrutinized it must be admitted it is inclusive of the costs of reconditioning the vessels, which has never been so computed in arriving at the loss sustained in the handling of other cargo. It would be ridiculous to charge the costs of reconditioning these vessels to coal receipts of one year. As slow as they have been, it is perfectly reasonable that some of these vessels may only have the opportunity of making one voyage. But costs of putting vessels in shape to carry cargo has not been charged against a single ton of any other commodity.

It is stated in the hearings that they hoped to make 14 voyages carrying 97,000 tons of coal, and it is allocating the complete cost of reconditioning these boats to this tonnage that causes such a statement to be made. I presume that the mathematical computation in division may be correct, but the premises are wrong, not only wrong in fairness and common sense, but wrong so far as the practice in the Shipping Board itself is concerned.

As a matter of fact, representatives of the Shipping Board indicate that there will probably be a loss per ton of $2.25. They make such statement in the hearings. They do not attempt to show in the hearings how this loss would be reached. I was ill at the time of the hearings, with influenza, and had no opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses when they appeared before the committee. I felt that this estimate of loss was inaccurate, and immediately upon my recovery I called for and secured a detailed statement of the cost of each voyage that these six boats will make, which statement came to me from the Shipping Board. I hold these itemized statements of cost in my hand, and with your permission will make them a part of the record.

With these statements it is an easy matter to ascertain the net loss per ton. It should be noted that in each instance the estimates are based upon the return trip without cargo. Of course, with any income-producing cargo for the return trip, the revenues would be increased and the loss necessarily decreased. Then, in arriving at the total expense, we find an administration charge runs from $2,400 to $3,200 for each voyage, the maximum shown in voyage to Rosario. This charge amounts to almost 50 cents per ton. It is suggested that the administration charge is extremely excessive. There could not be any considerable additional cost in the management of the Fleet Corporation for this activity. It is rather a vivid picture, however, of the administration cost of the Fleet Corporation allocated against the tonnage carried.

It was not hoped that all this coal could be transported at a profit. A loss was admitted on the floor before this policy was initiated. For that matter every ton of cargo carried by the Shipping Board evidences a loss. In 1926 the average net loss upon all cargo was $2.06 per ton. In 1927 it was $1.48 per ton, and in 1928 the average net loss per ton was $1.67. It is with these facts in mind that we would compare the losses upon the coal shipments.

The trip to Genoa—according to a detail statement herein—shows a loss of $1.90 per ton. The Alexandria voyage, $2.57 per ton. The Rio voyage, $1.37 per ton. The Santos voyage was $1.32; Buenos Aires, $2.66; and Rosario, $2.50. This is based upon the return trip being made without cargo and is inclusive of the excessive administration charge.

As a matter of fact, the first boat loaded with coal hereunder shipped to Genoa is returning with a 5,000-ton cargo of ore—with a freight charge of $2.06 per ton, making gross additional revenue of $10,300 for this trip. The Shipping Board is unable to tell me the added cost for transporting this return cargo. Not computing this added cost, this first voyage shows a net loss of only 43 cents per ton. In other words, $1.24 below the average net loss per ton in 1928. The figures submitted for the voyage to Rio, without return cargo, shows a loss of $1.37 per ton, inclusive of this excessive administration charge. This is based upon a revenue of $3.50 per ton. As a matter of fact, the contract finally entered into calls for $3.75 per ton. So this trip to Rio without return cargo will show a loss of only $1.12 per ton. With any sort of cargo this loss will be wiped out and a profit will be shown. Without the return cargo and with the excessive administration charge, this route is 55 cents per ton less than the average loss per ton in 1928.

The voyage to Santos without return cargo and with the excessive administration cost can be made 35 cents per ton under the net average loss for 1928.

With the return cargo and with a fair administrative charge it can easily be made profitable.

The estimate for Buenos Aires, Alexandria, and Rosario are all based upon the idea that there will be no return cargo, and each has included in the cost an administration charge ranging between 40 and 50 cents per ton. It might be well to note that the boats upon which the estimates were based for these voyages, even though the mileage is greater and the revenue greater, are the smallest vessels reconditioned in point of tonnage.

It should be understood that, in arriving at the figures of $1.67 as the average net loss per ton for 1928, all revenues are considered in the estimates submitted by the Fleet Corporation. In 1928 the total cargo carried in Shipping Board freighters aggregated 8,852,219 tons, the total loss suffered in carrying this freight amounted to $14,770,140.48. This is where an average loss per ton of $1.67 is found. Of this total tonnage, only 5,438,859 tons were of export character. If there had been no return cargo the loss per ton upon the export cargo would have been $2.71 per ton.

In 1928 there was exported 1,467,093 tons of grain. The actual loss on transporting this commodity was $2,450,045. If there had been no return cargo on any Shipping Board vessels this loss would have reached $3,975,822.

In 1928 there was 1,107,191 tons of lumber exported. The actual loss on this commodity was $1,849,900. If there had been no return cargo on Shipping Board vessels the loss would have exceeded $3,000,000. All figures in this statement are Shipping Board figures.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Did the gentleman find in his consideration of this subject that the loss was because we could not secure sufficient freight?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No, sir. They have never made a start toward carrying coal. The first boat that was conditioned to carry coal was not loaded until the early part of December; on December 24 a second vessel was loaded, and there has not been a single round trip made as yet. There will be a vessel loaded in the later part of this month. There has been no coal cargo carried to South America. There is an unlimited amount of American coal anxious to get into these foreign markets.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MURPHY. The facts are that the loss on all merchandise shipped is greater than the loss on coal.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The coal transported to Rio and Santos can be carried greatly below the average net loss on all cargo, without taking into consideration that there is no return freight. With return freight from any of these markets, the loss on coal will be less than the average net loss on all cargo, even with the excessive administration charges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Last year, when we had this appropriation under consideration, the gentleman will recall that additional appropriations were allowed for the purpose of trying the experiment of carrying coal, and at that time it was stated a study would be made as to the markets for return freight. What has developed along those lines, if anything?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Just one coal ship has reached a foreign port—the Mediterranean. Just one ship has reached a foreign port, and that is due to the lack of action on the part of the Shipping Board. That single ship will return loaded with ore; so that there is just one coal ship that has ever reached any foreign port, and, as I say, it is returning loaded with ore.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So that there will not be such a great loss per ton on that ship?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. About 90 cents on the ton.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If you take your South American trade with a loss of $1.12 and $1.32 to Rio and Santos, respectively, with return cargo, there will be no loss.

For the information of the committee, there was a boat reconditioned by the name of Naamhok, which was to go into this coal trade. It was ordered September 25, 1928, and they reconditioned it at a cost of $42,000. When they got it reconditioned they immediately sold it, before it had carried a ton of coal in this trade. Of course, time had to go on to permit the reconditioning of the next boat.

Mr. SHREVE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHREVE. Can the gentleman state what amount of money was received for the boat when it was reconditioned?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The reconditioning cost was $42,000 and the price received was $65,452.50. In other words, there was a profit of $23,450 over the reconditioning cost, but the coal end of it got no credit.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But that represents a big loss considering the initial cost of the ship.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Of course, that is true; but as the gentleman knows, the policy of the Government is that when these boats are reconditioned for any activity, to sell them upon a restricted contract basis in which that trade line will continue for at least five years in the transportation of freight in American bottoms.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. True; but if the Government would absorb that loss in the transportation of coal they could make a great many trips.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct, but the Shipping Board did not give coal that advantage.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Did the hearings develop any facts with respect to what efforts are being made by the Shipping Board and our agents abroad to develop a market for this coal?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. So far as the Shipping Board is concerned, I do not know of any effort they have put forth. To be perfectly frank, they have not been in a particularly cooperative mood.

Mr. McDUFFIE. They are not in sympathy with this movement?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I think that is a correct statement of it. There has been formed, however, an Export Cargo Association that has been giving their attention to this phase of the problem.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I can not understand why it is we can not sell a great deal of coal to the Latin-American countries, and it has occurred to me that if our commercial attachés in those countries, cooperating with the Shipping Board with a view to developing more tonnage, would become active along this line, we could find a market and sell and deliver a great deal of coal.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In my judgment, it should be done.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And, of course, some of it should go out through the Gulf ports that are nearer the Latin-American countries.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The market is there for 20,000,000 or 25,000,000 tons of coal that they buy. With regard to South America, the costs are such that there is a good opportunity for this industry having a considerable outlet through southern ports.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not what you get for what they are bringing back make up for the loss?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That reduces the loss.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It does not eliminate it?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I can not say, because I do not know just what the net increased revenue will be, because there has been no round trip made up to this time.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, it is my information that this ship is loaded with 5,000 tons of ore which will pay $2 a ton. The Shipping Board estimates the loss on coal for this particular trip at thirteen thousand and some dollars, and if we get 5,000 tons at $2 per ton, that would go as a credit against this loss of $13,000.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Without considering increased expenses incident to return cargo, the loss on that shipment would be approximately 40 cents a ton, as against a net average loss of $1.67 for 1928.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The reason I asked the question was that I understand that copper coming up from Chile pays around $4.25 and $4.50 a ton as freight.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Lumber pays about $11.50 and grain pays $3.81, if my memory serves me correctly.

I do not think it is necessary for me to go into detail as to the condition of the coal industry at this time, except to state that anyone cognizant of its condition is fully aware that the coal industry is prostrate and unless something can be done for it much misery in the human family connected with its production will continue, as well as monetary losses suffered throughout the country as a whole. I am greatly interested in the rehabilitation of the industry and think that this is a step in the right direction. I should state, however, that I do not represent a coal-producing district. There is no appreciable amount of coal mined in my district. I live close to coal-producing country and know the conditions which obtain in the industry, but there will probably be not one ton of coal from my district which will enter into this foreign trade.

Last year the appropriation for this activity was secured when the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] was chairman of the subcommittee. There was no protest or objection made to the inclusion of $1,000,000 for such activity. I can not think that Congress, having initiated this service, would abandon it without a bona fide, honest-to-God trial. Such trial has not been given.

Reference has been made relative to private discussion relative to the tonnage which these boats will carry during the present fiscal year. It is suggested that 97,000 tons is a very inconsiderable amount in comparison with the market hoped to be created. In the first place, more than six months elapsed before a round-trip voyage was made. After the lapse of seven months from the time the money was available—only three boats have been loaded, consequently this small tonnage estimated—is not a fair figure to be considered. As a matter of fact American coal is produced from $1.50 per ton less than British coal, but England cooperates with the coal producers and preferential rail rates are obtained on coal to be exported. The big idea is to open up this foreign market so that the rail coal carriers may be in position to urge a preferential rail rate for export coal. In this way we would be in a better position to meet competition.

In the hearings it was stated by General Dalton and Admiral Cone that the British ports were closer to South America than American ports. But, of course, this is an error; and under date of January 21 Admiral Cone, of the Shipping Board, corrects this error and states that Hampton Roads has an advantage over English coal ports in respect to South American ports on the east coast of about 300 miles.

I want to extend my sincere appreciation for the forward-looking vision which my colleagues on the subcommittee have exercised in incorporating this item in the bill. It should be given an honest test, always keeping in mind that if the market be obtained, preferential rail rates may follow. And while the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation to my mind has not shown any particular spirit of enthusiasm connected with this venture, they must keep in mind that to have a real merchant marine in this country it is essential that no industry and no section shall be discriminated against at their hands. It seems to me that they should be not only willing but glad to effectuate the purpose of Congress and thus handle any American product within the limit of their resources. It is needless for the Shipping Board to make speeches and write articles on what they want to do for American industry and products unless they show some spirit of practicing what they preach. Undoubtedly if this item is continued, as I hope it will be, they can not fail to understand that we have embarked upon this effort and that their future efforts will be the subject of close scrutiny.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU

This bill carries $499,975,000 for this activity, an increase of $14,415,000 over the current appropriation. The subcommittee and the full committee have given the Veterans' Bureau every dollar that they requested, for which the Budget Bureau estimated. So far as we are advised in extensive hearings, they will secure every dollar that they have desired.

In the last session there was authorized an appropriation of $15,000,000 to provide for additional hospital facilities. Seven million dollars was appropriated in the second deficiency bill and $6,000,000 is carried in this bill. In the list of hospitals there is one to be located in Kentucky, and on the 16th of this month the President located the Kentucky hospital in the radius of 5 miles of Lexington, Ky. This hospital is to be one to care for neuropsychiatric patients. It will have 350 beds and will cost $1,100,000. General Hines informed our subcommittee that work would begin on this hospital around the middle of the year, and it will be completed some time subsequent to June 30, 1930. The location of this hospital is the end of a chapter of a battle waged by the entire Kentucky delegation, with unbroken lines, to secure this much-needed hospital for the area of which Kentucky is the center. Much credit is due the American Legion, who, in national convention assembled, upon three different occasions, I believe, went on record favoring such a hospital in this region. In the first place, a separate bill of authorization was reported from the Legislative Committee and thereafter, upon two occasions, the need of this area was recognized by the World War Veterans' Committee and its consideration recommended. Not having been included in the original program of the bureau, and not having the sanction of the Budget, it was necessary for the fight to be made before the committee. There was never a more righteous cause. The committee responded to the merit of the case, and after stormy sessions it was incorporated in the bill and reported to the House by that splendid, estimable friend of American soldiery, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]. So it is with real pleasure that I am able to report to the House that in this bill provision is made for the initiation of its construction.

WORLD WAR EMERGENCY OFFICERS' ACT

There have been filed to date applications to the number of 7,790; 2,016 of that number have been adjudicated. It is estimated that there will be at least 3,250 officers retired at a net increase in moneys received by them of $2,330,442. The total moneys received will be $5,204,850. These veterans are now being paid $2,874,408, which makes a net increase in cost the sum above mentioned, namely, $2,330,442.

ARRESTED TUBERCULOSIS CASES

On November 30, 1928, there were 44,034 veterans upon this roll. General Hines states that the experience of the bureau indicates that there are very few of these disabled veterans slipping back into the active tubercular list. The theory of this particular compensation is to prevent the arrested tuberculosis of a veteran from becoming active. It is gratifying to know that thus far it appears to be accomplishing its purpose. There has been some agitation to repeal this particular legislation. General Hines does not look with particular favor upon the legislation; but certainly, if the theory upon which it is predicated is justified by the experience of the years, I would not think that Congress would take a backward step along this line.

CIVIL WAR, SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR, AND WORLD WAR ALLOWANCES 10 YEARS AFTER EACH WAR

The hearings disclose that in the tenth year following the Civil War there were 121,628 pensioners. In that period after the Spanish-American War there were 21,967 pensioners of that war. In the tenth year following the World War there were 243,611 veterans receiving compensation for active disability. In that period, 82,839 World War veterans had suffered a service-connected death. I do not have at my finger tips the exact number of Union soldiers nor the total Spanish-American War veterans, but when you compare the number of World War veterans, more than 4,500,000, with the number of Civil War veterans it is easily seen, in proportion there were more Civil War veterans receiving pension in the tenth year following that war than there are World War veterans receiving compensation in the respective year. It could be said by one who would oppose compensation for World War veterans that the amount received by such veterans greatly exceeded the amount paid the Civil War veterans. But it is a different world in which the World War veteran lives, and I dare say that the money which the Civil War veteran received was worth as much to him in the procurement of necessities as that which the World War veteran secures from his Government to-day for services well rendered.

I insert herewith table which analyzes the active claims, showing disability ratings as of December 1, 1928:

Adjudication service—Compensation claims—Active claims—Analysis of active disability claims showing disability ratings, as of December 1, 1928

Degree of disability	As of Dec. 1, 1928	Per cent
Temporary total	13,174	5.2
Temporary partial	71,545	27.6
Permanent partial	142,941	54.3
Permanent total	33,906	12.5
Double permanent total	60	.4
Total	261,626	100.0

INSURANCE

On June 30, 1926, there were 423,557 veterans holding Government insurance and this increased to 654,625 as of September 30, 1928. While this is a considerable number, yet approximately 3,876,000 veterans have dropped their insurance.

PERSONNEL

The total personnel of the Veterans' Bureau in all its activities numbers 24,320 persons, of which more than 50 per cent, to wit, 13,835, are hospital employees. The personnel in the central office in Washington is 4,359; in the areas outside of Washington, 7 persons, representing the director in the various areas. There are 71 in the central board of appeals; 151 at the supply depots; and 5,897 in the regional offices. There is a decrease of 113 in the central office for the next fiscal year.

I reiterate my appreciation of the courtesies extended me. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I quote from the President's message read to the House of Representatives on December 4, 1928:

> I desire to repeat my recommendation of an earlier message, that Congress enact the legislation necessary to make permanent the parcel-post convention with Cuba, both as a facility to American commerce and as a measure of equity to Cuba in the one class of goods which that country can send here by parcel post without detriment to our own trade.

This excerpt is my text. On February 24, 1902, Palma was elected President of Cuba, at which time the United States formally transferred control of the island to the National Government. As the result of a postal convention held on June 16, 1903, the United States and Cuba entered into a parcel-post agreement limiting the weight of each package of merchandise to 4 pounds 6 ounces. Sections 2804 and 3402 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America, under date of June 28, 1866, provided:

> No cigars shall be imported unless the same are packed in boxes of not more than 500 cigars in each box and no entry of any imported cigars shall be allowed of less quantity than 3,000 in a single package, and all cigars on importation shall be placed in a public store or bonded warehouse and shall not be removed therefrom until the same shall have been inspected and a stamp affixed to each box indicating such inspection, with the date thereof; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide the requisite stamp and to make all necessary regulations for carrying the above provisions of law into effect.

This section prevented Cuba exporting cigars to the United States by parcel post, as the 3,000 package of cigars exceeded the weight of the limitation. In order to allow Cuba to export cigars in small quantities a parcel-post convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Cuba was held and by virtue thereof an agreement was entered into, duly signed by the Postmaster General of the United States and the director of posts of the Republic of Cuba on the 31st of October, 1925, increasing the weight of parcels to 11 pounds. It was further agreed that sections 2804 and 3402 be modified or amended to permit the importation into the United States from Cuba of manufactured tobacco, such as cigars and cigarettes, without limit of number that may be contained in a single package, such modification or amendment to become effective within 18 months from January 1, 1926, and the Republic of Cuba reserved the right to abrogate this convention should it not be ratified by the United States. As it was not ratified at the expiration of the 18 months, the Republic of Cuba extended the time to March 1, 1928. Our Government failed in an affirmative action, which nullified the parcel-post agreement between the two countries.

At the instance of the Post Office Department, I introduced a bill to repeal sections 2804 and 3402, which was reported out of the committee. The bill not having a privileged status, a rule was the alternative for its consideration. The Committee on Rules graciously granted a hearing, but no further action has yet been taken.

The parcel-post convention of 1925 met the wishes of those in trade with Cuba. In 1926, 218,000 packages were sent to Cuba; 19,000 from Cuba to the United States. The revenue therefrom totaled $230,000, $50,000 of which was paid to Cuba in form of terminal charges, leaving net receipts of $180,000. Two hundred different varieties of articles were sent to Cuba from the United States; the average weight of each parcel did not exceed 7½ pounds, although the limit was 11.

Records for 1927 show imports from Cuba to the United States were valued at $160,487,680—our exports to Cuba, $250,569,693.

When we take into consideration that sugar and tobacco are the principal products of Cuba and that $1,200,000,000 American money is invested there, and that the island has only an area of 44,164 square miles, with a population not exceeding 3,500,000, and that our Republic is the wealthiest in the world, with resources no nation shows a parallel, with an estimated wealth of $400,000,000,000, it seems very narrow on the part of Congress not to enter into a parcel-post agreement with Cuba, thereby permitting that Republic to export cigars in small packages to the United States. By the action of our Government we allow 1 per cent of our industries to control the 99 per cent of those in the land.

A few days ago the appropriation bill for State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor provided $490,000 to promote commerce in Latin America. In light of this it is a commercial absurdity to force Cuba to abrogate the parcel-post convention, which was of such importance for the industries of the two countries. Do we want trade only on one side of the ledger? Cuba being closely located to the United States naturally seeks our market rendering the more important that a parcel-post relation should exist, in order that small parcels can be sent to Cuba other than by express or freight.

We have a parcel-post convention with nearly every country of the world, accepting parcel-post packages varying in weight from 11 to 50 pounds, but not with Cuba, fearing the importation of a few cigars. Cuba has an agreement with nearly every country except the United States, we object because Cuba desires to send her most important commodity in small quantities to our ports. Even under the present law any person or group could very readily import 3,000 cigars and divide them, but this is not done because of annoyances. Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, attempted this, but it proved unprofitable.

A statement is made that many thousand cigar makers are unemployed. May I bring your attention to the fact that in 1927 there were fewer factories than in 1926, caused by the abandonment of hand-made cigars to machine-made. We can not blame Cuban parcel post for this. The manufacture of large cigars is noticeably on the decrease, while small ones and cigarettes are on the increase. In 1927 we exported to China 4,400,000,000 cigarettes of our total exports of 7,093,000,000 from our production of 100,126,021,619. The average total importation of cigars by the United States is valued at $8,933,000. If we deduct the value of cigars from the Philippines and Porto Rico, upon which there is no duty, approximately 90 per cent of all dutiable imports of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes come from Cuba. Parcel post would not increase importation nor diverge it from the importers nor lessen American production. The total number of cigars manufactured in 1927 was 6,949,961,965. One-third valued at 5 cents each and only 5,186,970 retailed at 20 cents and over. Cheap cigars would not be imported in small quantities and there would not be a large demand for the expensive ones.

The President of the United States approves the bill, the Post Office Department indorses it, and 99 per cent of the industries in our land have asked for parcel-post relations with Cuba, as provided in the bill. I trust the day is not far distant when Congress will favorably consider the measure. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I know that the gentleman is very much interested in American producers and in American labor. What effect would his proposal have upon the tobacco and cigar factories of the country?

Mr. WATSON. I do not think it would have one-quarter of 1 per cent effect.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I know how diligent the gentleman is in looking after the interests of his own district. Has he any cigar or tobacco manufacturers in his district.

Mr. WATSON. I have a great many cigar manufacturers in my district, but they are all broad-minded men, and not one has asked me not to support this bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am wondering whether the laborers and others engaged in making cigars and the producers of the raw product would suffer in any degree?

Mr. WATSON. I can not see how they would suffer at all, because I believe that hardly any cigars would come through the parcel post.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am interested, of course, because most of my constituents smoke imported cigars, and I am wondering whether the gentleman has any domestic cigar factories in his district.

Mr. WATSON. If I get a 5-cent cigar I am very well satisfied.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is it because there is objection to this bill that it is not passed, or is it because of some neglect upon the part of the Congress?

Mr. WATSON. It is because the Congress objected to it, and the Committee on Rules does not want to report the rule; it is afraid the bill will be defeated. However, since it has been indorsed by the industries of the whole country it seems to me that it is a very narrow position for a great country like the United States to say to little Cuba, "We will not let you send a cigar here by parcel post," when we are collecting $10,000,000 of duty on cigars from Cuba every year.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And next to Canada, Cuba is our best customer, is it not?

Mr. WATSON. Yes. Cuba purchased in 1927, $260,000,000 of our goods.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And I understand that sugar constitutes 90 per cent of all of the exports of Cuba.

Mr. WATSON. Yes. Nearly all sugar comes from Cuba. We who have a guardian hand over Cuba say to her that we are afraid to open a parcel-post agreement because she might send a half dozen cigars to this country by parcel post. It is a very narrow position that we are taking.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MOORMAN].

SACRED UNITED STATES CONTRACT UNFULFILLED

Mr. MOORMAN. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, the United States has usually been very generous in recognizing and rewarding her illustrious and worthy subjects, during their lives, and in adequately memoralizing them after death. It keeps faith with its citizens but is sometimes a little slow. It is only fitting that our national conduct in this matter should be such as becomes our present great wealth and leading position among the peoples of the earth. Likewise, Kentucky has always delighted in honoring her favorite sons, and of none is she prouder than of Abraham Lincoln. The Great Emancipator was born in the fourth district of Kentucky, which I now have the honor to represent. Through the untiring efforts and laudable persistence of many individuals and agencies, the old Lincoln homestead was finally acquired, the log cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born was returned and housed in a $225,000 impressive marble memorial building on the spot where he was born, and an endowment fund of $50,000 was collected and all held in the name of the Lincoln Farm Association. The United States made a sacred contract with this association and it is to-day unfulfilled.

ACCEPTED AS A GIFT BY THE UNITED STATES

On April 12, 1916, a bill was passed by the Congress, H. R. 8351, an act to accept a deed of gift or conveyance from the Lincoln Farm Association, a corporation, to the United States of America, of land near the town of Hodgenville, county of Larue, State of Kentucky, embracing the homestead of Abraham Lincoln and the log cabin in which he was born, together with the memorial hall inclosing the same; and further, to accept an assignment or transfer of an endowment fund of $50,000 in relation thereto. Committee Report No. 221, accompanying the bill, said:

The committee most earnestly recommends the passage of this bill. In fact, it hopes that it may be unanimously adopted.

Most interesting, instructive, and eulogistic speeches were made on this bill by Representatives McKinley, Fess, Clark, Eagle, Rainey, Crisp, Foster, Cannon, Sherwood, Smith, Hicks, Russell, Sloan, Switzer, Dale, Barkley, and Madden. There was not a vote against the measure and the speaker said:

The Chair announces that the bill was passed unanimously.

GOVERNMENT ASSUMES SACRED OBLIGATION

As provided in this act the Lincoln Farm Association conveyed, assigned, and transferred to the United States of America the Abraham Lincoln homestead, with all appurtenances and the $50,000 endowment fund, upon the conditions specified in said H. R. 8351, viz:

The title to such lands, buildings, and appurtenances is accepted upon the terms and conditions stated in said deed or conveyance, namely, that the land therein described, together with the buildings and appurtenances thereon, shall be forever dedicated to the purpose of national park or reservation, the United States of America agreeing to protect and preserve the said lands, buildings, and appurtenances, and especially the log cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born and the memorial hall inclosing the same, from spoliation, destruction, and further disintegration, to the end that they may be preserved for all time, so far as may be; and further agreeing that there shall never be any charge or fee made to or asked from the public for admission to the said park or reservation.

And, as to the endowment fund, said bill provided:

The title to said endowment fund is accepted upon the terms and conditions stated in said assignment and transfer, namely, that the United States of America shall forever keep the said tract of land described in said deed, together with the buildings and appurtenances thereunto belonging, dedicated to the purpose of a national park or reservation, and that there shall never be any charge or fee made to or asked from the public for admission to the said park or reservation; and, further, shall forever protect, preserve, and maintain said land, buildings, and appurtenances, and especially the log cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born and the memorial hall inclosing the same, from spoliation, destruction, and further disintegration, to the end that they may be preserved for all time, as far as may be, as a national park or reservation.

It was contemplated by the act in the minds of the contracting parties that there would be all necessary repairs and future development. Section 3 specifically provides:

That the President of the United States of America and the Secretary of War are hereby authorized to execute, in the name of the United States of America, such instrument or instruments as may be or may become necessary to comply with or carry out the terms and conditions of such gift or gifts and to secure the full benefit therefrom.

The Lincoln Farm Association had collected together the essentials to create this national shrine. Congress accepted it and agreed to do such things as necessary "to secure full benefit therefrom." Otherwise the association would have continued to function by collecting more money by popular subscription, thereby maintaining and improving the place to meet present conditions.

THIRTEEN YEARS WITHOUT DEVELOPMENT

Thus it was provided nearly 13 years ago, by our Government's written obligation, that it would protect and preserve the buildings and premises conveyed from disintegration and would properly maintain the homestead and surroundings as a national park, so as to secure the full benefits therefrom. Private citizens and organizations saved the homestead and cabin of Lincoln from the ownership of those who might have exploited them for commercial purposes and placed them under the protecting arm of a grateful nation to preserve as an inspiration to all future generations. The trust fund, $50,000, the cost of the memorial building, $225,000, the cost of collection and other improvements and expenditures before the Government acquired the property amount to about $300,000, several times that now asked for the project. I went with my predecessor, Hon. Ben Johnson, author of H. R. 8351, accepting the shrine, to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Hon. Martin B. Madden, and he promised a small sum for the road emergency then existing. I saw him later and he did include an appropriation in H. R. 5800, as follows:

Lincoln Birthplace Memorial: For improvement of the road providing access to the memorial hall and the log cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born, and for repairs and minor improvements in connection with such buildings and reservations, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Quartermaster General.

The bill that is pending—S. 4173—to place this park and others under the Interior Department, thus getting coordinated national park administration, will receive careful consideration. It would, I was advised by the Secretary of War, probably meet his approval. Further, people of Kentucky and all others hereafter, I think, should refer to this place only as "Abraham Lincoln National Park," which is the name the proposed law gives it. We will thus help advertise it to the world as a national shrine.

PLANS FOR PERMANENT IMPROVEMENT

On June 24, 1927, the Chamber of Commerce of Hodgenville passed a resolution reciting the deplorable conditions existing at the Lincoln homestead and enumerating the repairs and improvements necessary to accommodate the ever-increasing number of visitors to this most interesting United States reservation. Recently, in one party alone, 17 large busses, carrying an average of 40 passengers each, visited the place. With the different Federal highways now completed, and considering the wonderful motor trips featured by the bus lines connecting Camp Knox, Elizabethtown, Mammoth Cave, Lincoln Park, Bardstown and Old Kentucky Home, the demand for accommodations at the memorial have increased a hundredfold in recent years. I recently visited the place, and realize what it is, and also what every patriotic American citizen would have it, and that a reasonable appropriation, applied as recommended, will work a miraculous change. Conservatively stated, it is not what a proud people would have a Government-owned and nationally maintained memorial be. The War Department report recites urgent need of repairs and lack of drainage, adequate roads, fences, toilets and other water arrangements, and many other ordinary conveniences. The best has been done that could be, however, by the War Department with only the $2,000 income from the endowment to spend. From the first time I visited Lincoln's birthplace I felt that his country had neglected it. When I came to Congress I was determined to make every possible effort to induce the United States to make the Kentucky Lincoln shrine what it should be. If we fail this time, I fully expect to try to come back in two years and will continue my sincere efforts.

Of course, the first thing to be done was to get an intelligent, authentic survey and estimate of the improvements desired. On January 28, 1928, I requested Hon. Charles Williams, chairman of the Hodgenville committee, to furnish me all the data he had. I personally presented this and my arguments for action to the proper authorities. On March 8, 1928, I received a letter from Maj. Gen. B. F. Cheatham saying:

Reference is made to your personal call at this office on March 7, when you presented a communication from Mr. Charles Williams, Hodgenville, Ky., inclosing resolutions from the Hodgenville Chamber of Commerce concerning needed improvements at the Lincoln farm and memorial.

A copy of the resolution has been referred to the officer in immediate charge of the farm with instructions to make an investigation of the needs outlined and submit an estimate of the cost thereof. When his report is received it will be given consideration with a view to placing the farm and memorial in first-class condition.

On April 26 I received a communication from the chairman of the local Kentucky committee stating that Captain Maslin, the Army officer in charge of Lincoln farm, had no expense money allowed him and that the effort to get the necessary report and topographical map was thus handicapped. They also advised me that the Speed Scientific School, University of Louisville, would cause the work to be done by advanced students and teachers by payment of only necessary expenses. I took this up with Col. W. R. Gibson, of the Quartermaster Corps, and on May 5, 1928, I received a copy of a letter written by Colonel Gibson to the commanding officer Jeffersonville Quartermaster Depot, written by order of the Quartermaster General, as follows:

Hon. HENRY D. MOORMAN, Congressman of Kentucky, called at this office and explained the details of the arrangement which has been made with Dean B. M. Brigman, Speed Scientific School, University of Louisville, Ky., to survey Lincoln farm. Dean Brigman has offered to have the students of his school do this work under the supervision of an instructor, but will require transportation for the students for one round trip to and from the farm and their board and lodging while there. It may also be necessary to provide transportation from Hodgenville to the farm daily while they are engaged in this work. An accurate survey of the farm is highly desirable and the cost connected therewith can be defrayed from the funds appropriated in the first deficiency act for 1928–29 which have been allotted to you. It is requested that you get in touch with Dean Brigman and, if possible, that you make the necessary arrangements for carrying out the survey.

The survey and a very comprehensive and thorough report was thus obtained and was addressed to the Quartermaster General on July 19, 1928, by Lieut. Col. Norris Slayton, Quartermaster Corps. The report is illustrated by photographs, sketches, tables, and every other character of information possibly desired. The report submits detailed estimates of the work recommended as necessary to be done.

HISTORY OF LINCOLN CABIN

The history of Lincoln cabin, as recorded in the report, may be of some general interest, and is as follows:

At some unknown date in the early sixties, shortly after Lincoln's election, the cabin in which he was born was bought by George Rodman from Richard Creal, and moved from its original site to his property, about 1½ miles from the Lincoln farm, where it remained until 1894. During this period it was first used as a shelter for negroes and later as a tenant house. Two terms of school were taught in the cabin in 1872 and 1873. John Davenport married the school-teacher who taught in it and they lived in the cabin from 1875 to 1894, when it was purchased by Mr. A. W. Bennett and moved back to its original site on the Lincoln farm. The cabin rested on the old foundation but a short time when it was taken down and the 143 logs were shipped to the Nashville Centennial in 1894. It was moved to Central Park, New York, and again exhibited at the Buffalo Exposition in 1901, after which it was purchased by David Creer and stored in the old Poffenhausen mansion on Long Island. In 1906 the Lincoln Farm Association purchased the cabin and shipped it to Louisville, where it was one of the features of the Louisville Home Coming Celebration. It was stored in Louisville until the laying of the corner stone of the Memorial Building by President Roosevelt on February 12, 1909, when it was brought to Hodgenville for the occasion, but immediately returned to storage and remained there until the building which houses it was dedicated by President Taft on November 9, 1911. Meanwhile, the Lincoln Farm Association had been formed and had obtained title to the property from Robert J. Collier and his wife, Sarah Steward Collier, by deed dated November 9, 1907, and recorded in the commissioner's deed book No. 34, page 377, Larue County court, and by bill of sale from Robert J. Collier to the Lincoln Farm Association executed June 19, 1906.

The report further says:

The Lincoln farm and memorial comprises a tract of land of approximately 110½ acres about 2½ miles south of the town of Hodgenville, Ky., and is divided into two nearly equal tracts by Federal-aid project No. 107, from Hodgenville to Buffalo, which comprises a part of the Jackson Highway.

AMERICA'S PLACE OF INSPIRATION

Rather than endeavor to add anything to the thousands of written and spoken eulogies on this great Kentuckian and great American, I shall quote a few paragraphs from Congressmen who spoke on the bill assuming the obligation to maintain the Kentucky Lincoln shrine in 1916. The excerpts show the spirit prevailing then in the minds of the contracting parties. General Sherwood, veteran Congressman of Ohio, said:

Now, as to this log-cabin tribute, we have built many monuments to Lincoln. But monuments and temples and statues have no emotion, no human sympathy, no voice. But here is Lincoln's old Kentucky home. Here is the log cabin where he was born. Here is a silent monitor teaching a vital lesson in patriotism. Here is a symbol of hope and cheer to every poor boy struggling against poverty for an honorable career. Here is a mecca where all the children of the Nation can gather and take courage in the story of a man, born in a rude log cabin, who learned to read books at night in the silent woods by the light of a pine-knot fire, and who became the guiding hand—the leading spirit—in one of the greatest epochs of all history.

Mr. DALE, of Vermont, said:

Nothing indicates so well the life that was itself a contrast, a paradox, the meager compensation that came to him and his rich bestowment to the Nation as the log cabin and the marble hall by which it is inclosed.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, let us preserve this old log cabin that generations may learn from it the qualities that there had birth and are changeless and deathless forever.

Mr. Sloan, of Nebraska, said:

Davis moved southwardly to Mississippi, the then great cotton State, where slavery thrived. Lincoln found his way through Indiana to the prairies of Illinois, where labor was free. Each presided during four years of tragedy over a republic. The one republic struggled for an existence, the other battled to maintain its integrity undiminished. There was citizenship sufficient for the two greatest republics on earth, but I rejoice to hear from either side of this Hall the satisfaction that but one remains.

The cabin home this afternoon being considered was in the State which produced these two great characters. In that great struggle it seemed, as it were, that that State could not decide between the fortunes of her two matchless sons. It presented a divided allegiance. This measure furnishes to-day a fitting text for fraternal, patriotic sentiment from every part of this expanded Union.

Mr. Switzer, of Ohio, said:

In dedicating to the Nation the birthplace of this illustrous American Kentucky gives renewed luster and added fame to her already immortal name. The Nation, through its Congress, accepts this token of high respect to the memory of our martyred President as the most magnanimous of the many generous and noble deeds for which the people of the great State of Kentucky are so famed. The dark and bloody ground, the home of Daniel Boone and other noted pioneers, by this patriotic act, is consecrated anew to that Jeffersonian idea of liberty, the equality of all men before the law, which was ever so near and dear to the heart of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Hicks, of New York, said:

To you gentlemen of the Southland, in whose veins flow the blood of the soldiers in gray, who in your magnanimity claim that Lincoln is yours as well as ours, let me answer as one from the North: "Yes; Lincoln is yours as well as ours, and Lee is ours as well as yours." But in revivifying the memories of the past I would rather forget that there are any yours. I prefer to remember only that it is all ours; that American greatness and American heroism knows no section and belongs to no generation; that in our nationalism we are all Americans united in a common cause, possessed of a common love for country and for flag.

Mr. BARKLEY, of Kentucky, said:

The State of Kentucky is glad to give to the Nation this humble yet sacred little farm, whose one great product is to-day the admiration of the world; and when future generations shall view this little house, this log cabin in the hills of Kentucky, may they be inspired with the hope that the flag which hangs above your head, for which Lincoln, as well as countless others before and after him, gave all that they had—their lives—and the Union for which it stands may always mean what he thought it ought to mean, the equality of man before the law and the equality to pursue the legitimate objects of happiness and of service without regard to clime or creed or section.

As the Nation will this day accept the gift of the Lincoln farm, may we not hope that as a day not long postponed a similar acceptance may be registered of the Davis home; and that these two spots, not far from each other in the soil of Kentucky, may be enshrined in the love and imagination of patriots everywhere, typifying the reunion of heart and hope and hand through which our common country shall more and more become the land of opportunity and the beacon light of liberty for us and all who shall follow us, which shall become brighter and brighter unto the perfect day.

KENTUCKY PAST AND PRESENT

When I speak of Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson Davis and reflect on the foregoing forceful expressions of many great Congressmen linking their names I am reminded of one description of the place of their birth, as follows:

Old Kentucky: Not the oldest nor yet the youngest; not the richest nor yet the poorest; not the largest nor yet the least; but take it all in all, for men and women, for flocks and herds, for fields and skies, for happy homes and loving hearts, the best place outside of Heaven the good Lord ever made.

Again when I couple the memories of those two great Kentuckians, who really had convictions and stood for principles, with the foregoing beautiful and true description of the place where they were born, I can not refrain from uttering a protest against certain materialistic and unwholesome tendencies in Kentucky, especially in the last half decade. My complaint is directed at no person, organization, nor party; but at bipartisanism, a growing curse which will surely destroy any party and impede the general progress of any people in time. Neither Lincoln nor Davis, in my opinion, would approve the bipartisan system that defiantly has its ugly hands on the throat of our fair Commonwealth.

Reaffirming my convictions on the subject, and as an indictment against the prevailing system, addressing my remarks to Republicans and Democrats alike, I desire to quote from my speech in Congress on May 1, 1928, as follows:

I do not believe in bipartisan government, either in the State or in the Nation. I recognize and make the distinction between administration by efficient nonpartisan boards and commissions and the administration and conduct of a city, State, or government by a coalition of interests or combinations of politicians, without party responsibility or political loyalty. Boards and commissions composed of members of different political convictions have, in many ways and places, functioned most efficiently. On the contrary, the dissection of bipartisan rule usually reveals unholy alliances and sordid personal and business intrigues. Often it leaves its slimy trail as a reminder of misused confidence and power. It destroys political loyalty, invites treachery, and decreases respect for those who administer government. The party in power should have all the responsibility, and it deserves whatever honor and credit is due its administration. Where bipartisan government reigns, as a rule, whatever good that is done is claimed by both parties. The mistakes and wrongs are denied by each party and laid on the other.

The taxpayers—the public—lose, and no member of either party knows definitely where anybody stands or what will happen. Public servants removed from direct accountability, as a rule, are less efficient generally. Under the despicable bipartisan system that holds some States in its clutches millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money has been manipulated to influence and intimidate individuals and communities in efforts to confer political favors at public expense or to destroy honest men who have declined to stultify their consciences by contributing to schemes of wholesale political perfidy. Thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money has gone for salaries and traveling expenses of supposed public servants and their underlings, who sometimes operate from their offices, but more often parade the State to consummate undercover political trades and trickery instead of performing their real duties. Thus spending taxpayers' own money against them, often fighting members of their own party, means stabbing men in the back without notice with their own dirks; it means crucifying faithful public servants because of doing their duty; it means shamefully misusing positions of public trust and official power to crush individuals with whom the political boss differs; it means the triumph of political tyranny, intolerance, and personal venom; and, finally, it means that true democracy and true republicanism must choke off these politically irresponsible despotic "fixers" of the existing bipartisan supergovernment.

THE PENDING BILL

When it was finally determined that a bill was necessary, as my colleague Hon. M. H. THATCHER and I had been working together, we contemplated introducing a joint measure. Fearing that the bill might not be gotten through this short session, he being an influential member of the majority party, and as I was going out in March and knowing that he was to remain in Congress I wrote to Mr. THATCHER as follows:

Like yourself, I was very much disappointed when we discovered the rule prohibiting you and me jointly introducing the Lincoln memorial bill. As you are aware, I have done a great deal of work in connection with the matter. My interest is the accomplishment of that which is desired. I appreciate your offer to let me introduce the bill in my name; but I feel that you can come nearer getting it through, under existing conditions, than I can, and I gladly yield you the privilege for this reason. I trust that the matter may be started at once.

I will appear before the committee, as suggested by you, and will continue to render any and every assistance possible that I can, just the same as if I had introduced the bill. Any time that I can be of service, outside of what we have discussed, command me.

Following this Governor THATCHER introduced H. R. 15657, a bill to provide for the improvement and preservation of the land and buildings of "Abraham Lincoln National Park or Reservation," among other things providing:

There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

A similar bill, S. 5228, was later introduced in the Senate by Senator SACKETT.

The War Department submitted a report and estimate of $80,000 to General Lord, Director of the Bureau of the Budget, on December 21, 1928. My idea is that the execution of the plans and recommendations for these necessary improvements is fully authorized under the present law, but we will push the bill anyway. Due to the amount involved and the uncertainty of the situation the bill was introduced. A hearing was had on January 9, 1929, before a Military Affairs subcommittee, Governor THATCHER, Col. W. R. Gibson, and myself testifying. The whole committee heard us to-day and approved a favorable subcommittee report. I am making this speech to present the existing situation to all interested in my district, here, and over the Nation.

CONCLUSION

To my mind, forgetting the thousands of other wise and noble things said and done by Abraham Lincoln, the following single statement of his proves his worthiness of all that has been said and done by the whole world to honor his memory, viz:

I want the people of the South to come back to the old home, to sit down at the old fireside, to sleep under the old roof, and to labor and rest and worship under the same flag. For four years I have seen the flag of our Nation riddled with bullets and torn with shell and trailed in the dust before the eyes of all the nations, and now I am hoping that it will please God to let me live until I shall see that same flag unsullied and untorn waving over the greatest and most powerful Nation on the earth—over a nation of freemen—over no master and over no slave.

Coupling the contractual obligations of the United States to suitably maintain this shrine with the merit and sentiment that the proposal should command without it, I can not see why this bill should not be passed with the same unanimity that characterized the action of Congress when it accepted the gift. The Kentucky delegation is very much interested in the matter and approved a resolution offered by me urging the prompt passage of the bill. Anyway, I will be grateful for the bill's consideration and support by my colleagues, to each of whom I am sending a copy hereof, as well as to the Senators. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

COTTON TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen of the committee, I want to talk just a little while upon the subject of the cotton textile industry and some of its troubles at the present date; also some of the troubles proposed to be injected into it. I represent a district, probably the second in South Carolina in number of spindles, millions of dollars invested in the cotton-manufacturing business, thousands of people making their living operating those mills, and other thousands of farmers who rely on the market which these mill populations furnish to enable them to so diversify their agriculture that they may solve the problem which Congress has in a very futile way endeavored to solve for a great many years for the farmers.

But for the last year or two there has been a great depression in that business. The mills all last summer were running short time. Many operatives stayed there because they had good homes. Mills in that country have provided the best of homes with light, water, and sewerage and everything conducive for the comfort and the health of the operatives; and consequently they do not like to quit that and hunt other employment. They have had a hard time. They are industrious and an exceedingly high-class lot of folks. Many people talk of cotton-mill operatives, but there is not a more loyal or more patriotic set of people in the Piedmont section of the Carolinas than the people who actually handle the machines in the mills. Now, I have noticed and read with a great deal of interest that our friends in New England are also having a great deal of trouble.

It seems they held a discussion a very short time ago in which they proposed a good many things, but seem not to have reached a positive agreement on anything except on the high-class goods that they make they wanted a higher tariff. Here is one thing, however, they seem to have agreed upon; it is taken hold of in a resolution which has been introduced in this Congress by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] to amend the Constitution of the United States to the following effect:

That the Congress shall have power to adopt uniform hours and conditions of labor throughout the United States.

That proposition is now before this Congress, and I take it it will be until some action is taken on it. Now, if you will consider for a minute the conditions out of which all of this has grown you will see that our friends in New England for a long time made their industry prosperous by levying a tariff on imports so that it gave them a control of the American market and enabled the manufacturer to charge a profitable price, and frequently we down South, who bought a lot of stuff in those days, paid exorbitant prices for their goods. That promoted prosperity in the industry as long as it worked. The people down South, after working to the advantage of the manufacturer, concluded we would quit paying New England, and so we established manufacturing down there. In other words, our folks took Massachusetts' dog and made him bite the "Bay State," and that is what he is biting now, and so we are having this proposition to interfere with labor. They want conditions in the mills in the South changed.

Now, the proposition is to make a higher labor cost against goods that are made at least expense and therefore more profitably in the South than in the New England part of this country. They can not impose a tariff against one section of the country in favor of another. But they want now to increase the cost of our products by endeavoring to increase the cost of our labor, and, incidentally, to deny to a man who works in the mills in South Carolina the right to work the number of hours they have been accustomed and against which they have never made complaint; but it is the purpose to cut down the number of hours they may work, deny them that privilege in order, forsooth, that the gentlemen up here who have let the State legislatures get away with them and put on a 48-hour schedule in the manufacture of cotton goods can compete with us. I submit that they can not take away from us that which we have developed as the result of legislation fostered by them to our disadvantage.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY. How many hours a week do your mill people work?

Mr. STEVENSON. About 55 hours a week. They can work 60 hours, but as a rule they work 10 hours a day for 5 days and 5 hours on Saturday. That is the rule now. There are only two States that have a 48-hour law. Those are Massachusetts and New York.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Does the gentleman find that in the States where 48 hours are fixed there are worse conditions in the homes and worse economic standards of life for the employees?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have not investigated the 48-hour States, but I can tell the gentleman that in the Carolinas we have the best conditions affecting labor of any States I know of anywhere. Of course, my distinguished friends from Massachusetts should not now undertake to invade South Carolina with that kind of a proposition. It is all right for them to get after North Carolina, because that State went back on Massachusetts in the last election, but the State of South Carolina stood nobly by Massachusetts and voted for Al Smith, and I think it is unreasonable for Massachusetts to come down to South Carolina and try to interfere with our affairs in order to get after North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Certainly.

Mr. WASON. Does South Carolina feel lonesome at this moment? [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, she thinks she is in good company when she has Massachusetts with her, and we are standing nobly by her.

There were two things advocated principally at this meeting in New Bedford, Mass. One was the 48-hour law. Only two States have a 48-hour law and 46 States have other laws. Now, the 48-hour States want to undertake to say to the other States that Congress shall either enact a 48-hour law applying to the other States or else enable them otherwise to compete with other States having the 48-hour law or raise their hours to 54 a week. Our States regulate the hours of labor within our own borders, and we do not need congressional help in the matter.

Mr. BOWLES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BOWLES. The 48-hour law applies only to women and children.

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not get that information from this splendid symposium of the conditions that were brought out at this Massachusetts meeting. I have a copy of it, and I filed it, and I find a great deal of useful information in it. But nothing was said in it about the Massachusetts 48-hour law applying only to women and children. My State has a pretty rigid law about women working in mills more than a certain number of hours, and another law prohibiting the work of children under 14 years in factories at all.

They had one Mr. Binn before them, speaking as to the condition of labor in reference to the tariff. Mr. Binn said it had been dinned into his ears—and he is a leader of that element in Massachusetts—that the tariff was passed for the benefit of the American laborer; that was what it was for. The tariff was designed, we are told, chiefly to protect the workers; and that being the case, it ought at least to give American workers conditions equal to those in competing foreign countries. That is what the present act was designed for, he contends. We were told here when we were passing the Fordney-McCumber Act that it was in the interest of labor. Mr. Binn, I understand, was for it, and he was down here lobbying for it. He says the tariff does not give them better conditions than those under which the pauper labor of Europe is living. It was stated by the committee that that was what it was for.

Mr. Binn says some other things. He speaks of "the benighted States in the South," and refers to the fact that in some of the other New England States the employees run sometimes from 54 hours to 60 hours a week. He says these mills are a greater menace to the American standard of living than any competition from foreign countries where pauper labor is employed. That is the statement we get from the standpoint of the labor of Massachusetts.

They say this competition, if continued indefinitely, can end only in disaster to any industry. They say that American goods are produced under worse conditions than those prevailing in any other country. I understood we did not want our labor to sink to the level of the pauper nations of Europe. This man says we are producing goods now under worse conditions than those prevailing in Europe.

I am concerned about labor conditions just as much as the gentleman from Massachusetts is, because it is a live question in my country, and it is the salvation of that agricultural country down there that its industries be diversified with these textile manufactures which have been languishing for a year very seriously. But that does not drive me to the point of agreeing to this increase of tariff as proposed. Why? Because it is brought out here that the finest grades of goods are principally concerned.

One of the several questions debated here is the question of taxation of the textile manufacturing establishments. That is a serious question. It is one, however, in which we have an advantage over the people of New England, and that is one of the things that has enabled our manufacturers to succeed in addition to the superior amount of output that one operative will get out as compared with the amount that one operative will get out in New England. That is one of the things that give us an advantage. Some of the handicaps we encountered we had to cure by legislation.

Prior to 1900 the cotton-mill stocks were largely held in New England, even in the factories of my State. What were they paying? We were taxing the property of the cotton mills, while in New England they were taxing the stock held by gentlemen up there, and they were not doing that in any other place. Well, we worked out a plan—and I was one of the coauthors of it—in which we declared by statute that all stocks in cotton mills located in South Carolina under corporations organized in South Carolina, should be considered real estate for purposes of taxation. We made that the law, and what happened?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentlemen up in Massachusetts who owned those stocks immediately got out from under; because the stock was the creature of South Carolina and the property located in South Carolina the stock was taxable as real estate. Therefore we went along and taxed the property and left the stock off, because it was taxes on the property it represented. We have never taxed that, and that is one of the ways we solved some of their troubles.

Now you want to go ahead and legislate on the question of the hours of labor. I say it comes with poor grace for the gentlemen from Massachusetts to undertake to do that when they have had that protection for all this time; when we have grown up in the industry right along with them and have now reached a point where we can compete with them. I say it is poor grace for them to come along now and attempt to increase the cost of our production by another method of Federal legislation.

I want to direct the attention of this House to the fact that we are to have tariff legislation next year, and it was stated by the chairman of that great meeting that they hoped to insert into that tariff bill a provision which will protect only those that are limited to a 48-hour week; that they are only going to protect the products of those factories where labor is limited to 48 hours a week. I do not think they will get away with that. The gentleman who introduced this constitutional amendment decided that was the only way it could be done, but I will say to that gentleman that I do not think he will get anywhere with this amendment, but it is just as well to call attention to the fact that the war has been started and that the gentlemen up there are persistent, insistent, and ingenious. Nobody has ever accused any Massachusetts delegation of not having sense enough to know what they wanted and to keep on after it until they got it if they could. That is what they are starting to do; that is their proposition, and we need to consider this mighty carefully before we allow that door to be opened.

But I find there is some doubt about whether or not Massachusetts would be in favor of this. As you know, some years ago we passed the child-labor amendment, which was to be inserted in the Constitution for the purpose of enabling this Congress to deal with the child-labor conditions in every corner of this great country. I think three States have ratified it, but up in Massachusetts, where they want to regulate all these things, they submitted it to a referendum of the people and it was defeated by a 200,000 majority, and New Bedford, the very place where this agitation is coming from, went overwhelmingly against it in the referendum. So I apprehend we will have some trouble before we get that in the Constitution; but the fight is on, it is well recognized, and, as I said a while ago, I think it comes with very poor grace for Massachusetts to now attempt to interfere with South Carolina, when South Carolina stands right with her nationally. She wants to do this just because she wants to get back at North Carolina, which has gone back on her and gone Republican.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Do all of you Republican States stand together?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know. I want to see what North Carolina, Texas, Florida, and Virginia have to say about that as well as the gentleman's State, Maryland.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. The gentleman might be interested in knowing that one of the committees of Congress will have a hearing to-morrow at which representatives of the employees of the Government Printing Office will ask for a 44-hour week instead of a 48-hour week.

Mr. STEVENSON. I happen to be a member of the committee before which that hearing is to be held. There is no law against anybody coming up and asking for anything they want, but I am from Missouri when it comes to giving it to them if it is not the right thing to do; but the Government Printing Office is not a competitive business and not in a class with manufacturing plants selling their products to the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON].

FARM RELIEF

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I asked the chairman of the committee who now has charge of the bill before us for time to bring before you some observations on farm relief that have been made by the former president of our Michigan State College, Dr. Kenyon L. Butterfield, who is to sail in February under the Carnegie Corporation, for survey work in the rural British colonies of Africa; and in bringing before you some of these observations in this paper which he has presented I shall ask permission, as a revision of my remarks, to extend the manuscript in full in the RECORD.

The report of the Business Men's Commission on Agriculture, made in 1927, said that the agricultural question "constitutes a challenge to modern statesmanship."

Now that the tumult and the shouting of the political campaign are over and the captains, if not the kings, of the fray have left the stage, public opinion should, if possible, be keyed to those fundamental issues that led the commission to use the words "challenge" and "statesmanship"; and to the constructive task of mapping and applying the basic remedy suggested by the commission: "The adoption of a comprehensive agriculfural policy."

The task is both supremely important and immensely difficult. We are yet in the dawn of a just consideration of this complicated rural question. There is available no unity of even current thinking on the subject as a great whole. History gives us meager aid. The practical jobs of making a policy and of making it work are nothing less than stupendous. It is probable indeed that a policy can not be "made" in the sense of formulating a plan that will at once satisfy the full need of American agriculture and country life, secure the approval of the major elements of our population, and serve as a guide to legislation and the action of voluntary associations. A realistic policy will have to grow out of much discussion and experience as well as out of scientific research and constructive planning. These difficulties should by no means deter us from seeking and adopting a comprehensive policy.

I have felt that in this short session of Congress we would not have time to consider in its important details the policy of farm relief that must be the essential policy, and so I have stood as one of those who has advocated the calling of a special session in order that this question might find adequate and immediate solution.

But the agricultural situation will not admit of delaying action until a complete permanent policy is worked out. In a sense it is unfair to the farmers to use the word "relief" in discussing the needs of American farming; our farmers are not begging a gift from the rest of their fellow citizens. Their experiences for the past eight years, however, have impressed upon them the almost desperate need of finding a way out from under an acutely real burden. "Farm relief" has therefore come to stand even among farm leaders for measures that should be taken as speedily as possible for the purpose of bringing agriculture nearer "to an economic equality with other industries." It is to be hoped that all measures that may be passed will be in harmony with the principles that should underlie that comprehensive rural policy which all agree is imperative. But early action there must be.

That there will be early action is assured. It is idle to speculate as to the program of farm relief which would have issued from the group which Governor Smith promised to assemble, if he were elected, to consider the farm problem, or as to the effect upon that program of his adherence to the principles of the McNary-Haugen bill. It is equally futile to wonder what would have happened if Mr. Coolidge had not vetoed the McNary-Haugen bill and if it were now operating.

So there is no criticism implied in the statement that for the time being we should scrap all the proposals for farm relief that have been discussed in the sense that we now have before us a set of proposals that for all practical purposes constitute the program that should have the right of way. This is not to say that no suggestions as to the details or even the fundamental implications of this program should be made. On the contrary, it is highly important that Congress shall have the benefit of every available point of view both as to the principles and the details of proposed legislation. But there is only one practical course, and that is to follow the leadership of the President elect, who has promised the earliest possible action on this subject—at least "before the next harvest."

The reason for such a procedure is obvious. We have at hand the formula for action—the leader, his program, and the mandate placed upon him.

Mr. Hoover has repeatedly signified his belief that the need of farm relief is our most pressing economic question. He has reiterated his promises that it shall have immediate attention. All the sincerity of his convictions, the integrity of his thinking, the prestige of his method of attaining his ends, even his continued leadership, are at stake. He can not fail to use all his powers and all his power to secure from Congress and from voluntary organizations the enactment of his program and the backing of his farm constituency.

And Mr. Hoover has a program. He has set forth a very definite and comprehensive program of farm progress. To say this is not to assume that Mr. Hoover's announced program is sufficient for all agricultural ills nor even a certain cure for the particular difficulties it seeks to meet. Many will disagree with him as to its adequacy; but it is a specific, reasoned program, an engineer's blue print for a project of economic rehabilitation of a great industry still in a period of stress and strain.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is the gentleman going to outline what that program is?

Mr. HUDSON. If the gentleman will just give me time.

Moreover, Mr. Hoover has a mandate to "make good" his proposals. We may think whatsoever we choose about the extent to which the so-called "drys" and religious "bigots" made themselves felt in the election over great areas of our country, but it is plain beyond controversy that the farmers of America have evidenced by the majorities for Mr. Hoover in great agricultural States and the rural vote in great industrial States their willingness to let Mr. Hoover develop his program. It is more than possible that the attitude of hosts of farmers on the farm aspect of Mr. Hoover's positions taken during the campaign constitutes quite as much a vote of challenge to him as a vote of confidence in him. The result of the elections becomes not merely an indorsement of Mr. Hoover's program but even more a significant, compelling call to him and to all the political leaders to clear the way for a trial of Mr. Hoover's prescription for maladjustments in our rural economy.

Now as to Mr. Hoover's program, about which my colleague from Maryland has asked:

Mr. Hoover's program is set forth both in its main principles and in some of its details in his St. Louis speech of November 2, 1928. He proposes to—

First. Secure cheaper transportation of goods to market.

Second. Provide a tariff sufficient to reserve to the American farmer the American market.

Third. Maintain the purchasing power of consumers.

Fourth. Eliminate wastes in distribution.

Fifth. Stabilize farm prices.

Sixth. Study each farm commodity as a problem and plan aid to meet its particular difficulties.

He expects to attain these objectives by three laws or groups of laws:

First. He would complete as soon as practicable a system of inland waterways some 12,000 miles in length, which would traverse the Mississippi Valley north and south, east and west, as well as give the upper valley and the Northwest ship-canal access to the Atlantic. He believes that this great system would substantially reduce freight rates on farm products, as well as encourage the building of new industries in the valley and thus aid in absorbing locally a large farm production in that region.

Second. He would place marked increases of tariff upon those imports of soil-grown products which we can grow in America, and which now come in, he says, to the extent of some $800,000,000 a year. Thus the farmer would diversify his production, secure for himself the American market, and relieve existing exportable surpluses. The tariff on manufactured products, Mr. Hoover contends, makes it possible for our industries to pay such wages as provide a standard of living for workers "which permits them to purchase all the food they can eat." America is the only country in the world, he says, where this is true.

Third. Mr. Hoover's third and his most far-reaching method of farm relief is to create a Federal farm board with wide powers of investigation into all farm questions, and in addition broad authority to act, power to assist, and funds necessary to support all its activities and powers, with reference to the development of cooperative marketing, clearing houses for agricultural products, and adequate warehousing facilities.

In particular the board is to build up with initial advances of capital from the Government, farmer-owned and farmer-controlled stabilization corporations which will protect the farmer from depressions and the demoralization of summer and periodic surpluses.

In this way he would expect to gain the other three objectives in his program; that is, to stabilize farm prices, eliminate waste in distribution, and meet the particular needs of different products.

This entire program of Mr. Hoover's should be enacted as speedily as possible and adopted in all its aspects. It is both a pledge and an experiment—a pledge to give due attention to what Mr. Hoover himself says is "the most difficult of economic problems presented to our people," and an experiment in the sense that only by trial can we be sure of the adequacy of even a well-reasoned and "economically sound" program of farm relief.

Comments upon the program are, however, in order, first, because some of its implications should not be overlooked, and, secondly, because there are other important phases of a farm-relief program than those mentioned by Mr. Hoover that should be fully considered while this legislation is being hammered into form. Moreover, there are exceedingly significant steps in farm relief lying outside the province of government that should be taken as soon as practicable. I wish, therefore, to make a few comments and suggestions on Mr. Hoover's program.

Whatever beneficial results may accrue from the completion of the great inland-waterways project outlined by Mr. Hoover, the question of rail rates on agricultural products still remains.

It is universally acknowledged that railway-traffic rates present a stubborn, complex, some think an unsolvable, problem. It is almost impossible to apply the scientific method to rate making, and if the task were left to the interested farmers alone, it would still be difficult to resolve the conflicting claims of farmers in different regions.

Nevertheless the question is a basic one, and there should be an adequate study of existing transportation rates as affecting American soil-grown products, both for domestic and overseas transportation, and the possible revision of these rates, on the principle of granting lowest possible rates between growing and marketing points, having in mind, however, both the normal market for and the most promising regions for the production of various commodities.

It would be worth while to investigate also the auto-truck problem as it affects the production and marketing of those products that can economically be grown within the trading areas surrounding such cities as may afford an important market to locally grown products.

In this connection may I call to your mind the fact that probably the fruit region of western Michigan to-day is in its present state of prosperity because it can transport its soil-grown products direct to the markets of the great cities adjacent to it without the intervening delay of time and the expense of refrigeration that it formerly had in steam-moved transportation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Michigan five additional minutes.

Mr. HUDSON. The current studies of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the field of traffic rates on farm products should be concluded as soon as practicable, and it should be made certain that they are inclusive of the main elements of the rate question as it affects American farmers.

Mr. Hoover in his speech of acceptance put the tariff first in his list of remedies for the farm depression, and in his St. Louis speech he says:

> Adequate tariff is essential if we would assure relief to the farm. The first and most complete necessity is that the American farmer has the American market. That can be assured to him solely through the protective tariff.

So it seems to me we have wisely made provision whereby the Ways and Means Committee is in session working constantly on the development of a tariff revision.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Would the gentleman object to a question at this point?

Mr. HUDSON. No.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not hear anything about the equalization fee. That is not in the program as I understand it?

Mr. HUDSON. That is touched on a little later, if the gentleman please, and if I have the time I will cover that.

Mr. Hoover's recommendations should be adopted as soon as proper schedules can be formulated. We should have a fair trial of a full farm tariff. It is imperative to apply to agriculture, and to the full, the accepted tariff protection given to industry. Whether there will be retaliatory tariffs in foreign countries either on our manufactured or agricultural products must be left to the future. Whether encouraging our farmers by means of the tariff to transfer some of their energies to growing products thus to be protected will reduce the present exportable surplus of staples can be determined only by experience.

These recommendations for increasing the tariff on agricultural products are made in the light of the evident tariff psychology of the American people at the present time, and in harmony with the old slogan of the farmers of "a tariff for all or a tariff for none." If America desires to participate fully in the world trade of the future, she may be obliged to make radical reductions in her tariff, and perhaps even concede an entirely new principle in tariff legislation. But before that is done it is clear that we must first follow the present type of tariff to its full conclusion. We must have more tariff before we can have less tariff.

The phrase, "Government encouragement of agricultural cooperation," is hardly expressive of the full scope of the group of proposals by which the Federal farm board would have authority to stimulate and guide the development of organizations and facilities for marketing farm products, secure proper credit for handling temporary surpluses, reduce distribution costs, and, in fact, authority to try to meet the whole range of knotty problems that ensue in the process of getting the products of the farms to the consumers on fair terms to both. To attempt detailed comment on these proposals would be to write a book. But once more emphasis is placed upon the desirability of the earliest possible legislation by which the plans suggested by Mr. Hoover may get under way.

It is, however, important to point out some considerations that should have ample discussion during the process of framing the measures and putting them on the statute book.

Then there is the matter of exportable surplus. In the discussions of farm relief, the crux of the economic difficulty, it has been argued by the proponents of Federal legislation, lies in the fact that we produce more than we need of certain great staples, and that the price of this exportable surplus in the world market tends to fix a lower price for the entire product in the American market than would otherwise be the case, and a price too low for profitable production. Mr. Hoover is obviously opposed to such proposals as were embodied in the McNary-Haugen bill for taking this surplus off the domestic market by direct means, and particularly by means involving the Government itself. He evidently relies upon the stimulus that higher tariffs will give to the production of commodities not now receiving adequate protection, upon the processes of orderly marketing, the handling of temporary surpluses, the provision of warehousing facilities, the savings of costs of distribution of food products, and upon other similar gains from his general program, to reduce this exportable surplus to manageable proportions, at least to eliminate it as a serious factor in the farm problem.

The problem of farm prices is, of course, fundamental not only as it concerns the industry itself but in the business relations of the farm group to other groups. We need to know the relation of prices to cost of production; the relation between prices received by the farmers and the prices for the same products in the wholesale market; the relation between farm prices and wholesale prices to retail prices of soil-grown products, whether raw or processed; the relation between prices and both quantity and quality production; farm prices as affected by foreign trade; and then, finally and in general, the relation between farm prices and the value of gold.

Moreover, the Federal Reserve Board has large powers. Its operations should be widely known, especially as they may affect farmers, who are suspicious of bankers. Enlightenment on this question is not a political but an economic matter.

It is possible that the proposed Federal farm board is the appropriate body to make such studies. The question, however, is more inclusive than farm interests alone, and recommendations based on these studies would affect several departments of Government and all aspects of business. Might it not be well, therefore, to authorize an existing commission or department of the Government—or, if necessary, to appoint a new commission—to make an immediate but thorough study of the forces that govern the relation between farm prices and general prices, the relation of both to systems of banking and credit, and how these forces and agencies may be controlled in the interest of stabilizing general prices, and particularly in the interest of equivalent prices to farmers?

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include as an extension by printing in the RECORD the complete manuscript of President Butterfield.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The complete article by Doctor Butterfield is as follows:

FARM RELIEF

By Kenyon L. Butterfield

The report of the Business Men's Commission on Agriculture, made in 1927, said that the agricultural question "constitutes a challenge to modern statesmanship."

Now that the tumult and the shouting of the political campaign are over and the captains, if not the kings, of the fray have left the stage, public opinion should, if possible, be keyed to those fundamental issues that led the commission to use the words "challenge" and "statesmanship"; and to the constructive task of mapping and applying the basic remedy suggested by the commission: "The adoption of a comprehensive agricultural policy."

The task is both supremely important and immensely difficult. We are yet in the dawn of a just consideration of this complicated rural question. There is available no unity of even current thinking on the subject as a great whole. History gives us meager aid. The practical jobs of making a policy and of making it work are nothing less than stupendous. It is probable indeed that a policy can not be "made" in the sense of formulating a plan that will at once satisfy the full need of American agriculture and country life, secure the approval of the major elements of our population, and serve as guide to legislation and the action of voluntary associations. A realistic policy will have to grow out of much discussion and experience as well as out of scientific research and constructive planning. These difficulties should by no means deter us from seeking and adopting a comprehensive policy.

ASSURANCE OF EARLY RELIEF

But the agricultural situation will not admit of delaying action until a complete permanent policy is worked out. In a sense it is unfair to the farmers to use the word "relief" in discussing the needs of American farming; our farmers are not begging a gift from the rest of their fellow citizens. Their experiences for the past eight years, however, have impressed upon them the almost desperate need of finding a way out from under an acutely real burden. "Farm relief" has therefore come to stand even among farm leaders for measures that should be taken as speedily as possible for the purpose of bringing agriculture nearer "to an economic equality with other industries." It is to be hoped that all measures that may be passed will be in harmony with the principles that should underlie that comprehensive rural policy which all agree is imperative. But early action there must be.

EARLY ACTION ASSURED

That there will be early action is assured. It is idle to speculate as to the program of farm relief which would have issued from the group which Governor Smith promised to assemble, if he were elected, to consider the farm problem, or as to the effect upon that program of his adherence to the principles of the McNary-Haugen bill. It is equally futile to wonder what would have happened if Mr. Coolidge had not vetoed the McNary-Haugen bill and if it were now operating.

So there is no criticism implied in the statement that for the time being we should scrap all the proposals for farm relief that have been discussed in the sense that we now have before us a set of proposals that for all practical purposes constitute the program that should have the right of way. This is not to say that no suggestions as to the details or even the fundamental implications of this program should be made. On the contrary, it is highly important that Congress shall have the benefit of every available point of view, both as to the principles and the details of proposed legislation. But there is only one practical course, and that is to follow the leadership of the President elect, who has promised the earliest possible action on this subject—at least "before the next harvest."

THE MAN, THE PROGRAM, THE MANDATE

The reason for such a procedure is obvious. We have at hand the formula for action—the leader, his program, and the mandate placed upon him.

Mr. Hoover has repeatedly signified his belief that the need of farm relief is our most pressing economic question. He has reiterated his promises that it shall have immediate attention. All the sincerity of his convictions, the integrity of his thinking, the prestige of his method of attaining his ends, even his continued leadership, are at stake. He can not fail to use all his powers and all his power to secure from Congress and from voluntary organizations the enactment of his program and the backing of his farm constituency.

And Mr. Hoover has a program. He has set forth a very definite and comprehensive program of farm progress. To say this is not to assume that Mr. Hoover's announced program is sufficient for all agricultural ills nor even a certain cure for the particular difficulties it seeks to meet. Many will disagree with him as to its adequancy; but it is a specific, reasoned program, an engineer's blue print for a project of economic rehabilitation of a great industry still in a period of stress and strain.

Moreover, Mr. Hoover has a mandate to "make good" his proposals. We may think whatsoever we choose about the extent to which the so-called "drys" and religious "bigots" made themselves felt in the election over great areas of our country, but it is plain beyond controversy that the farmers of America have evidenced by the majorities for Mr. Hoover in great agricultural States and the rural vote in great industrial States their willingness to let Mr. Hoover develop his program. It is more than possible that the attitude of hosts of farmers on the farm aspect of Mr. Hoover's positions taken during the campaign constitutes quite as much a vote of challenge to him as a vote of confidence in him. The result of the elections becomes not merely an indorsement of Mr. Hoover's program but even more a significant, compelling call to him and to all the political leaders to clear the way for a trial of Mr. Hoover's prescription for maladjustments in our rural economy.

MR. HOOVER'S PROGRAM

Mr. Hoover's program is set forth both in its main principles and in some of its details in his St. Louis speech of November 2, 1928. He proposes to—

First. Secure cheaper transportation of goods to market.

Second. Provide a tariff sufficient to reserve to the American farmer the American market.

Third. Maintain the purchasing power of consumers.

Fourth. Eliminate wastes in distribution.

Fifth. Stabilize farm prices.

Sixth. Study each farm commodity as a problem and plan aid to meet its particular difficulties.

He expects to attain these objectives by three laws or groups of laws:

First. He would complete as soon as practicable a system of inland waterways some 12,000 miles in length, which would traverse the Mississippi Valley north and south, east and west, as well as give the upper valley and the Northwest ship-canal access to the Atlantic. He believes that this great system would substantially reduce freight rates on farm products, as well as encourage the building of new industries in the valley and thus aid in absorbing locally a large farm production in that region.

Second. He would place marked increases of tariff upon those imports of soil-grown products which we can grow in America, and which now come in, he says, to the extent of some $800,000,000 a year. Thus the farmer would diversify his production, secure for himself the American market, and relieve existing exportable surpluses. The tariff on manufactured products, Mr. Hoover contends, makes it possible for our industries to pay such wages as provide a standard of living for workers "which permits them to purchase all the food they can eat." America is the only country in the world, he says, where this is true.

Third. Mr. Hoover's third and most far-reaching method of farm relief is to create a Federal farm board with wide powers of investigation into all farm questions, and in addition broad authority to act, power to assist, and funds necessary to support all its activities and powers, with reference to the development of cooperative marketing, clearing houses for agricultural products, and adequate warehousing facilities.

"In particular the board is to build up with initial advances of capital from the Government, farmer-owned and farmer-controlled stabilization corporations which will protect the farmer from depressions and the demoralization of summer and periodic surpluses."

In this way he would expect to gain the other three objectives in his program; that is, to stabilize farm prices, eliminate waste in distribution, and meet the particular needs of different products.

This entire program of Mr. Hoover's should be enacted as speedily as possible and adopted in all its aspects. It is both a pledge and an experiment—a pledge to give due attention to what Mr. Hoover himself says is "the most difficult of economic problems presented to our people," and an experiment in the sense that only by trial can we be sure of the adequacy of even a well-reasoned and "economically sound" program of farm relief.

COMMENTS UPON THE PROGRAM

Comments upon the program are, however, in order, first, because some of its implications should not be overlooked, and, secondly, because there are other important phases of a farm-relief program than those mentioned by Mr. Hoover that should be fully considered while this legislation is being hammered into form. Moreover, there are exceedingly significant steps in farm relief lying outside the province of government that should be taken as soon as practicable. I wish, therefore, to make a few comments and suggestions on Mr. Hoover's program.

Whatever beneficial results may accrue from the completion of the great inland-waterways project outlined by Mr. Hoover, the question of rail rates on agricultural products still remains.

It is universally acknowledged that railway-traffic rates present a stubborn, complex, some think an unsolvable, problem. It is almost impossible to apply the scientific method to rate making, and if the task were left to the interested farmers alone it would still be difficult to resolve the conflicting claims of farmers in different regions.

Nevertheless the question is a basic one, and there should be an adequate study of existing transportation rates as affecting American soil-grown products, both for domestic and overseas transportation, and the possible revision of these rates, on the principle of granting lowest possible rates between growing and marketing points, having in mind, however, both the normal market for and the most promising regions for the production of various commodities.

It would be worth while to investigate also the auto-truck problem as it affects the production and marketing of those products that can economically be grown within the trading areas surrounding such cities as may afford an important market to locally grown products.

Mr. Hoover's recommendations should be adopted as soon as proper schedules can be formulated. We should have a fair trial of a full farm tariff. It is imperative to apply to agriculture, and to the full, the accepted tariff protection given to industry. Whether there will be retaliatory tariffs in foreign countries either on our manufactured or agricultural products must be left to the future. Whether encouraging our farmers by means of the tariff to transfer some of their energies to growing products thus to be protected, will reduce the present exportable surplus of staples can be determined only by experience.

These recommendations for increasing the tariff on agricultural products are made in the light of the evident tariff psychology of the American people at the present time, and in harmony with the old slogan of the farmers of "a tariff for all or a tariff for none." If America desires to participate fully in the world trade of the future, she may be obliged to make radical reductions in her tariff, and perhaps even concede an entirely new principle in tariff legislation. But before that is done it is clear that we must first follow the present type of tariff to its full conclusion. We must have more tariff before we can have less tariff.

The phrase, "Government encouragement of agricultural cooperation," is hardly expressive of the full scope of the group of proposals by which the Federal Farm Board would have authority to stimulate and guide the development of organizations and facilities for marketing farm products, secure proper credit for handling temporary surpluses, reduce distribution costs, and, in fact, authority to try to meet the whole range of knotty problems that ensue in the process of getting the products of the farms to the consumers on fair terms to both. To attempt detailed comment on these proposals would be to write a book. But once more emphasis is placed upon the desirability of the earliest possible legislation by which the plans suggested by Mr. Hoover may get under way.

It is, however, important to point out some considerations that should have ample discussion during the process of framing the measures and putting them on the statute book.

There is the matter of exportable surplus. In the discussions of farm relief, the crux of the economic difficulty, it has been argued by the proponents of Federal legislation, lies in the fact that we produce more than we need of certain great staples, and that the price of this exportable surplus in the world market tends to fix a lower price for the entire product in the American market than would otherwise be the case, and a price too low for profitable production. Mr. Hoover is obviously opposed to such proposals as were embodied in the McNary-Haugen bill for taking this surplus off the domestic market by direct means, and particularly by means involving the Government itself. He evidently relies upon the stimulus that higher tariffs will give to the production of commodities not now receiving adequate protection, upon the processes of orderly marketing, the handling of temporary surpluses, the provision of warehousing facilities, the savings of costs of distribution of food products, and upon other similar gains from his general program, to reduce this exportable surplus to manageable proportions, at least to eliminate it as a serious factor in the farm problem.

There are apparently those who are not so sanguine as Mr. Hoover that this solution of the surplus problem will eventuate. The newspapers report that Senator MCNARY will reintroduce the McNary-Haugen bill minus the equalization fee; while Mr. Taber, the master of the National Grange, is reported as declaring that the McNary-Haugen bill has no chance to become a law, but that as a part of needed tariff legislation the export debenture plan of the grange is still the most workable and logical form of readjusting tariff inequalities. There may be in these pronouncements a gesture of vindication of a position taken; but there is probably a dominant measure of conviction as to issues. However, these doubts on the surplus question hardly afford an argument against Mr. Hoover's far-flung plan of handling our domestic farm production. Time only will reveal the extent to which his constructive measures will eliminate that aspect of farm relief which has thus far controlled the thinking of our farmers and impressed the majority of Congress. We may find after all that the "surplus problem" will not down.

The problem of farm prices is, of course, fundamental not only as it concerns the industry itself but in the business relations of the farm group to other groups. We need to know the relation of prices to cost of production; the relation between prices received by the farmers and the prices for the same products in the wholesale market; the relation between farm prices and wholesale prices to retail prices of soil-grown products, whether raw or processed; the relation between prices and both quantity and quality production; farm prices as affected by foreign trade; and then, finally and in general, the relation between farm prices and the value of gold.

Moreover, the Federal Reserve Board has large powers. Its operations should be widely known, especially as they may affect farmers, who are suspicious of bankers. Enlightenment on this question is not a political but an economic matter.

It is possible that the proposed Federal farm board is the appropriate body to make such studies. The question, however, is more inclusive than farm interests alone, and recommendations based on these studies would affect several departments of Government and all aspects of business. Might it not be well, therefore, to authorize an existing commission or department of the Government—or, if necessary, to appoint a new commission—to make an immediate but thorough study of the forces that govern the relation between farm prices and general prices, the relation of both to systems of banking and credit, and how these forces and agencies may be controlled in the interest of stabilizing general prices, and particularly in the interest of equivalent prices to farmers?

A COMPREHENSIVE STUDY OF FARM TAXES

Taxation as it affects the farm is a function of the State rather than of the Federal Government. The cost of schools and of highways is the biggest charge on the farmer's direct tax bill. It is desirable, however, to have more nearly uniform State laws on this subject. The item of taxes is now so prominent a factor in farm expense as not only to constitute an important problem in itself, but to call for the fullest possible measure of uniformity in the different States.

It is also highly important to consider the relation of Federal and State taxation as affecting the farmer, epecially as this relationship is exhibited in the Federal income tax and in the Federal inheritance tax.

Here again arises the query whether the Federal Farm Board should, in addition to its other duties, be charged with this important investigation. Perhaps it may be wiser to have a special commission on this subject. Or again, inasmuch as the United States Department of Agriculture has already carried investigations in this general field, it might be well to empower that department to extend its study of farm taxation. From the writer's point of view it is desirable at an early date to assemble sufficient data on which to formulate recommendations for uniform State tax laws which recognize the necessity of minimizing the general property tax and substituting forms of taxation based upon the principle that taxes should be assessed not only upon individuals, corporations, and other business groups, but also upon municipalities and local communities, in accordance with ability to pay.

As a special phase of this study, consideration should be given to the desirability and feasibility of increasing the Federal income tax but returning a part of this tax to the States.

LAND UTILIZATION

The business men's commission wisely stressed the significance of trying to readjust the utilization of the land by putting each acre to its best use, recognizing that vast areas of land are now cropped that should have some other use. The commission suggested the organization of a "National Agricultural Foundation," privately endowed, which should, among other functions, secure an expert classification of the land resources of the Nation, including an economic survey of land, and then try to get this land put to its best uses. There would be information service to landholders, experiments in transplanting scattered farmers from poor lands to colonies on better lands, and perhaps some guidance of population movements.

It may be doubtful wisdom to assign this work of mapping the best utilization of farm land to a body that has other functions. It is in itself a task of tremendous proportions. It involves not merely the allocation of Federal lands or of large tracts of State or privately owned lands within the State but in most parts of the country it involves also discrimination in use of land in local communities and even on individual farms. It is also pertinent to inquire whether much of this work is not clearly a governmental function. However, the main observation to be made is that the program of farm relief should include machinery for securing a wiser utilization of our land. It is not a minor but a very important element in the farm problem.

CONTINUED RESEARCH

The importance of continuous and thoroughgoing research into every part of the rural problem becomes more obvious with every discussion of farm problems and every proposal for their solution. Fortunately, Mr. Hoover's bent of mind is that of one who wants bottom facts as the background for action, and he clearly sees the special need for this procedure in the case of rural questions. For he proposes that the Federal farm board shall be a fact-finding agency, and shall also set itself to discover both causes and remedies.

In planning for research of this character it is however highly important to remember that the United States Department of Agriculture, together with the agricultural experiment stations in all the States, form the most extensive and effective agency of rural research in the world. A recent act of Congress adds substantially to the research facilities of the State experiment stations, particularly in the field of economic and social studies. Is there not an advantage in providing still larger funds by which the United States Department of Agriculture can greatly expand its studies of this rural problem? It would seem wise to provide immediately for substantially increased appropriations for investigations by the United States Department of Agriculture, in cooperation with the State experiment stations, of a wide range of problems which American agriculture as a whole has to face, particularly in the fields of world demand and supply of soil-grown products, and the more obvious economic difficulties that have already been revealed, as well as the social implications of these economic tendencies. The department should be required particularly to expand its studies in the social aspects of farming, a field it has barely touched thus far.

Moreover, there is need of getting the results of these investigations directly to the farmers as well as to Congress. Here again the United States Department of Agriculture, cooperating with the agricultural colleges, one in each State, provides the largest and most effective machinery for rural adult education in the world. The need for continued education in the field of cooperative endeavor is especially needed. It would be the part of wisdom, therefore, to develop still more fully the educational activities of the United States Department of Agriculture and the various agricultural colleges, by increased Federal appropriations in order to further rural popular education, especially in the field of cooperative buying and selling, and in other forms of collective business activity of the farming interests.

THE FEDERAL FARM BOARD

In outlining the functions of the proposed Federal farm board Mr. Hoover well says that it will be "an institution which will be one of the most important institutions in our Government." For he would give this board "power to determine the facts, the causes, the remedies which should be applied to each and every one of the multitude of problems which we mass under the general term, 'the agricultural problem.'" This board would also have a wide range of executive tasks of great importance and difficulty, not to mention the pioneering character and the financial significance of the machinery the board would be expected to install. Would a group designed to guide the destinies of this new and intricate business mechanism be the best group to administer the details of scientific research?

There is the further question of policy making. The business men's commission wisely said:

"A sound national agricultural policy conceived in this way can not rest upon governmental action alone, but requires the active participation and cooperation of farmers and their organizations, of the other great economic groups, and of the local, State, and Federal Governments as the guardians of the interests of the community. The formulation of such a policy and the building up of agencies and methods by which it may be expressed in concrete terms will require a long period of time, for it must be the product of gradual accumulation of experience and knowledge and can not be expected to spring complete and perfect from the brain of any individual or group."

A national chamber of agriculture and country life might be, therefore, of decided advantage. Many suggestions have been made for an organization of such a chamber ever since it was first proposed for the United States by Mr. David Lubin, 15 years ago. Mr. Lubin borrowed the idea from Germany, but it is doubtful if any European plan for this sort of thing could be transplanted. The idea, however, is entirely sound. We do need some kind of thoroughly representative body with ramifications into the smaller units of rural society and with interests inclusive of every aspect of the farm question in order to provide a forum for discussing and formulating a rural policy and program.

Still another matter of real importance is that the Federal farm board shall have at least one member whose particular interest lies in the area of rural welfare of human relations. Mr. Hoover well said at St. Louis:

"And the problem is not wholly an economic problem. It is partly a social problem, because the farm is more than a place of business—it is a place of living and a home. So that in addition to finding the particular difficulty in that particular branch of the business we must have regard for important social problems involved."

A PROPOSED DIVISION OF LABOR

In view of the considerations just discussed, it is suggested that the Federal farm board have as its primary executive duty the great task of directing the organizations of all those agencies which Mr. Hoover lists in his category of essential machinery for farm relief on its economic side.

Then let the board be linked with the United States Department of Agriculture in such fashion that the department and the cooperating State agricultural colleges and experiment stations shall carry on the main features at least of the research necessary to a full understanding of our farm problems, and also greatly enlarge their educational activities known officially as the "cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics." Nothing should be done to limit the independence or the initiative of the Department of Agriculture. On the contrary, its work should be greatly expanded, especially in research.

It might be well for the Federal farm board to call into being a body with some such title as "The National Council of Agriculture and Country Life," which will be representative of all rural organizations and interests of every type, but to an extent also representative of industry, business, labor; in fact, while dominantly agricultural in its make-up, a group which will attempt to secure the cooperation of all parts of our population in developing a wise and sane and permanent agricultural policy. At any rate, steps should be taken to insure continued considerations of such a policy.

The Federal farm board would thus part with none of the power or prestige with which Mr. Hoover would clothe it, and would in addition ally with itself and deeply influence all the agencies and forces in the United States which, through research and education, discussion and cooperation, could contribute to the solution of the rural problem.

All the above measures require Federal legislation. The following suggestions embody plans that may well be stimulated by Government, but must depend chiefly upon voluntary organization and support.

A RURAL FOUNDATION

Twenty years ago, when the Roosevelt Country Life Commission was at work, it became evident to some of its members that there ought to be some sort of rural foundation, privately endowed, which could study and interpret independently both of Government and of organizations the trends and needs of American agriculture and country life.

From time to time various suggestions have been made for such a foundation, and with the rise of many research agencies during the past 20 years have come on the part of many of them special types of research in this field, and notable and statesmanlike contributions have thereby been made.

It has remained for Columbia University to propose a plan for an "institute of rural affairs," the aim of which would be "to make original researches in the field of rural affairs and to interpret and give publicity to the best available knowledge concerning the fundamental probems of agriculture and country life, the most promising methods of their solution, the relationships of the urban and rural groups, and the international aspects of the farm question."

The need for this sort of thing has been well set forth by President Butler, of Columbia, in these words:

"Some solution for the problems of the land and its relationship to human life should and must be found. * * * The modern democratic state must find a way to keep the needful proportion of the population upon the land, to maintain the quality of the rural population in comparison with the other groups, and to provide that population with the resources and satisfactions of modern civilization. * * * What is needed is an institute to integrate, to correlate, and to guide this vast undertaking, with a view to establishing and interpreting the facts for the information of public opinion and for the guidance of governments."

The committee which President Butler invited to report on a plan for such an institute closes its report by saying that this institute of rural affairs should have essentially a clearing-house function, quite in addition to any original pieces of research which it may undertake. Its greatest value and real genius will lie in the possibilities for correlating knowledge and opinion in terms of the statesmanship of rural affairs and stating these so clearly that their opinions may become valid for action on the part of all groups interested.

An institute of this sort should be liberally endowed. It has vast possibilities. If it had been in operation during the last decade it could have contributed immeasurably to the solution of the agricultural situation which has developed since the war.

Government agencies have their limitations in dealing with problems that involve social and political issues. A privately endowed institute of rural affairs would admirably supplement a Federal farm board. It would be particularly helpful in informing and influencing urban interests and points of view and in helping to indicate and correlate those international aspects of the farm question that must inevitably command the attention of statesmen and other leaders.

AN AGGRESSIVE COUNTRY-LIFE PROGRAM

It is a truism that agriculture is a mode of life as well as a means of making a living. To repeat Mr. Hoover's phrase, "We must have regard for important social problems involved."

While Government should recognize these problems and foster both research and action in the field of rural social problems, just as is the case with the business and economic problems of the farmers the working out of these social problems must in practice be left almost wholly to associations of farmers, to their schools, and to the other social agencies that function in the countryside. The local government, especially country government, can do more than is now done.

This whole field of "country life," embodying as it does questions of health, recreation, local government, social welfare, education, character building, and community organization, must receive far larger attention. These questions are significant, whether we have economic prosperity or depression. They deal with people in terms of their deepest welfare and their personal development.

As a concrete suggestion I know of nothing which would help this country-life program more than finding a way by which the American Country Life Association could assume more aggressive leadership in this field. For over 10 years the association has served as clearing house and conference center for a group of not less than 30 private and public agencies having a direct interest in the social problems of agriculture. It is capable of becoming a tower of strength in the operation of a wise, inclusive, American farm policy.

A COMPLETE REHABILITATION OF THE COUNTRY CHURCH

Probably the country church has suffered more than any other rural agency. This fact is due to a number of reasons, such as the agricultural depression itself, a vast amount of overchurching chargeable in part to denominational rivalry, the advent of automobiles and good roads, the lack of aggressive church programs, and a general letting up of church attendance in both city and country.

Such steps as the following are suggested:

(1) Organize a national commission on the country church large enough and representative enough to stand for the entire rural church problem.

(2) Organize a layman's country church association which will bring together representative farmers from all parts of the country who have a keen and an abiding interest in a revival of the country church.

(3) Provide for a continuation of surveys which will determine both overchurched and underchurched rural communities.

(4) Encourage the larger parish plan.

These are merely a few of the items in a plan that involves perhaps the most vital of all the needs in a program of farm relief—the spiritual element. For as Mr. Hoover himself said at St. Louis, "You can not divide those things that are seen from those that are unseen. The things that we call material are the foundation stones upon which we build the temple of those things we call spiritual."

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] such time as he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for one hour.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, since the November election much has been said concerning the future of the Democratic Party. Some shallow-brained, shortsighted, and emotional editors, superficial students of public affairs, and poorly informed partisan politicians have boldly proclaimed the imminent and inevitable eclipse, dissolution, and destruction of the party of Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Cleveland, Bryan, and Wilson, and a host of other masters of statecraft. Not a few of its traditional enemies have sung melancholy dirges over its untimely fate, pronounced mock-heroic eulogies over what they considered its mangled and mutilated remains, and unceremoniously consigned it to the somber and echoless charnel-house of oblivion. [Laughter.] Others have assumed the task of formulating the platform, principles, and policies of the new political party which, they say, will rise from the shattered ruins and emberless ashes of Democracy. [Laughter.]

I am neither alarmed, annoyed, nor embarrassed by the anvil chorus of these amateur makers of political medicine, these self-constituted political grave diggers, these gruesome political morticians, these croaking birds of evil omen, these partisan professional mourners who habitually go about the streets and up and down the political highways and byways of the Nation, gleefully spreading the dismal tidings to the effect that the Democratic Party, if not already in a state of rigor mortis, is dying and no longer a potential factor in the political affairs of the American people.

Despite the exuberant exultation of our Republican friends, I assert that the Democratic Party is not dead and will not die. [Applause.] While I do not envy these lugubrious political prognosticators the supreme satisfaction they seem to be getting out of the recent political upheaval, I modestly venture the suggestion that rejoicing based on election returns is obviously fleeting and exceedingly transitory; and, judging the future by the past, it is not unreasonable to assume, borrowing an expression from St. James, that their laughter will soon be turned to mourning and their joy to heaviness. To them I commend the proverb—

Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall.

Those who are ordering flowers for the funeral of the Democratic Party are living in a fool's paradise and feasting on apples of Sodom, which, though attractive to the eye and seemingly luscious, are nevertheless filled with the bitter ashes of disappointment.

Real Democrats look not of course with satisfaction, but with equanimity on the result of the recent elections and with indifference on the vain and extravagant boasting of their political adversaries. Just as surely as night follows day, just as surely as the seasons come and go, just as surely as the restless tides alternately flow and ebb, just as certainly will the principles and policies of the Democratic Party ultimately triumph and win the approval of the American electorate. [Applause.] In the past, times without number, even under exceedingly adverse conditions, the fortunes of politics brought success to the Democratic hosts; and if we are loyal to its traditional principles, policies, and ideals, victory will again take up her habitation in our tents, fight around our party standard, and crown our cause with success. [Applause.]

The true test of a man's character is his ability and willingness to resist temptation and hold fast to his integrity when overtaken by adversity [applause], and the true test of the right of a political party to live is its ability and determination in adversity to hold tenaciously to the principles and policies on which it was founded and to meet discouraging conditions and defeat with courage and fortitude.

Those who flippantly pronounce the Democratic Party dead and who are busy formulating plans for its burial have not been richly endowed by Providence with an oversupply of far-seeing comprehension, and are evidently ignorant of American political history, unable to accurately appraise political events and incapable of correctly measuring the ebb and flow of public opinion. Our Republican friends have difficulty in understanding how a great political party can survive successive defeats and continue as a militant fighting force without political "pap," patronage, and the spoils of office. These things mean much to the average Republican, and they mean everything to many Republican politicians. Political patronage and the spoils of office appeal but lightly to the rank and file of the Democratic Party and are not the things that control the average Democrat, influence his party alignment, and inspire him with party zeal and loyalty.

Mr. SCHAFER rose.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield until I finish my statement. The gentleman probably heard my statement at the beginning.

Mr. SCHAFER. I did not.

Mr. LOZIER. I decline to yield until I finish my statement.

The normal Republican machine politician, from his materialistic standpoint, can not understand or appreciate the eternal verities that underlie, permeate, and vitalize the Democratic Party. They see only the shifting shadow, not the underlying principles and vital forces that influence Democrats and give life and virility to their party. Republicans have signally failed to comprehend the fealty and unselfish devotion of the individual Democrat to the fundamental principles of his party. They have overlooked the public problems and national needs that called the Democratic Party into existence and which give it such a tremendous power over the minds and conscience of men.

I, therefore, pity the benighted Democrat and Republican partisans whose prejudice impairs their vision, distorts their judgment, and incapacitates them from seeing in their proper perspective existing conditions and important events that are not only rapidly approaching but inevitable. I look with extreme tolerance on the utterances and activities of those short-sighted Democrats and Republicans whose chief duty seems to be to hang crêpe on the doors of the temple of democracy, and who after each election insist on ordering the hearse and writing an epitaph for the Democratic Party. Sooner or later these unhappy victims of political astigmatism will amble out of their delirium and experience a rude awakening.

From my knowledge of present conditions and from a diligent and lifelong study of the political history of the United States I have reached the obvious and inescapable conclusion that the Democratic Party is not dead, dying, disintegrating, or hopelessly disorganized. Notwithstanding its defeat in the recent elections it is still a going concern with 15,000,000 active and loyal stockholders which justifies the conclusion that it will continue to be an important factor in the political affairs of the American people.

There is a need and a place in our national life for the Democratic Party and though severely chastened it will survive and be an effective instrument by which great multitudes of our people may speak and work their sovereign will. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Instead of consigning the Democratic Party to a political Carian cave to join Endymion in his age-long slumber, millions of upstanding, forward-looking citizens will rally around its standard, millions of tongues will eloquently acclaim its virtues, and millions of vibrant lips will break forth in pæans of triumphant exultation over its outstanding accomplishments in constructive statesmanship. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In the future, as in the past, it will stand for certain definite national policies, the enactment and efficient administration of which will promote the public welfare and ultimately establish social and economic justice for all vocational groups.

These principles are older than our Republic, but there is a constant need for their application to our ever-changing conditions. These principles inspired our forefathers when they courageously severed their relations with Great Britain, fought the Revolutionary War, and at the point of crude anvil-forged bayonets compelled that opulent, arrogant, proud, and powerful nation to recognize our independence.

It is significant that a large majority, yes, an overwhelming majority, of those who won our war for independence and founded our Republic actively cooperated in founding the Democratic Party which in turn perfected our scheme of government and nurtured our free institutions. It first demonstrated to a skeptical world the capacity of the American people for self-government. It developed our latent and almost limitless natural resources. By wise statesmanship it transformed 13 rival colonies, envious of each other's power and influence, into a compact, cohesive, and progressive nation. It fostered our social, agricultural, industrial, and commercial life. It encouraged culture and learning by establishing systems of free schools unsurpassed and unexampled in either ancient or modern times. It stimulated liberal and fine arts. It raised our standards of living to unprecedented levels. It created a national spirit and largely eradicated provincialism. By wholesome policies and liberal laws it sent first into the trans-Appalachian area and then into the trans-Mississippi region a mighty race of pioneers who felled the forests, subdued the desert, stirred the soil into generous productivity, laid out highways, tunneled mighty mountains, bridged torrential streams, reared homes and churches, established schools, built cities, and transformed the uninviting wilderness into a delightful and amazingly productive habitation which has made a wonderful contribution to our national life and tremendously augmented our stock of national wealth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

During the first 75 or 80 years of our national existence the Democratic Party, practically alone and unaided, guided and guarded the destinies of our Republic, and protected it from internal strife and shielded it from the envious, avaricious, and greedy grasp of older and more powerful nations that looked contemptuously on our form of government and coveted our rich possessions. By wise and far-seeing statesmanship it extended our territorial boundaries to the Pacific Ocean, adding to our public domain a far-flung empire with diversified resources, the extent and value of which surpass the dreams of avarice and stagger human comprehension. In every decade of its long and eventful history, the Democratic Party has made an exceedingly valuable contribution to the forces that promote the public weal. Its history is the record of our Nation's birth, development, and greatness. In constructive statesmanship it has not been surpassed or even approached by any political party that has appeared in our national life. Appreciating the wisdom embodied in Lord Chatham's maxim, "Where law ends tyranny begins," the Democratic Party has always been a party of law and order and has stood for the sanctity and inviolability of our Federal Constitution and for the supremacy of our laws. "To no one will we sell, to no one will we deny or delay right and justice." This rule of national conduct was first embodied in the Magna Charta wrestled from John Plantagenet by the English barons at Runnymede in 1215. It announces a principle and policy of government the Democratic Party has always sought to apply in the administration of public affairs.

Great political parties founded on age-lasting principles and with records for useful service and constructive statesmanship do not die or disintegrate as a result of severe defeats or long-continued denial of public favor. Some short-sighted Democrats and Republicans looked upon the election results in 1912 as a death blow to the Republican Party. Seemingly it was hopelessly divided with no reasonable probability of the party schism ever being tranquilized.

But contrary to expectations, the breach was soon healed, the bloody chasm between the discordant elements quickly bridged, angry passions soon subsided, and factional hatreds disappeared almost as quickly as a fog lifts from a valley after the radiant beams of a summer sunrise dip over the mountain summits and bathe the landscape with warmth and beauty. Though strongly intrenched in power as a result of the unhappy events that precipitated and followed the Civil War, the Republican Party went down in defeat before the disorganized and seemingly impotent Democracy in the presidential elections in 1876, 1884, 1892, 1912, and 1916. Some of these reverses were sufficiently acute to seriously threaten its existence, or at least its influence as an effective political organization, and in 1912 the rout was so decisive that many of its most loyal members foresaw its probable overthrow and destruction.

As the Republican Party survived these crushing reverses, so the Democratic Party will weather the storm, ride out of the tempest, survive the severe drubbing it received in 1928, and continue to serve the American people. Its decimated ranks will be filled and closed, its morale restored, its confidence renewed, its courage quickened, and its organization perfected so as to function efficiently. The tides of popular favor that ebbed in 1928 will flow with irresistible force toward Democracy in 1930 and 1932. The pendulum of public opinion will inevitably swing back toward the Democratic Party and crown its policies with public approval. Those who expected and hoped for its early dissolution will be quickly and completely disillusioned and in future elections will stand face to face with a united, militant, and rehabilitated Democratic Party.

I am reluctant to believe that the American people have abandoned or will abandon the principles, policies, and fundamental concepts of government that called the Democratic Party into existence, and which for nearly a century and a half that party has aggressively championed and successfully applied in the administration of our National and State affairs.

There is the same great need for the Democratic Party now as when Jefferson vigorously opposed the monarchial tendencies and centralizing influence sponsored by Hamilton and his associates in the Federalist Party; as much need now for the Democratic Party as when Jefferson advocated a Government that would insure equal rights to all, special privileges to none; as much need for the Democratic Party now as when Jefferson forced a recognition of the principle that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people"; as much need now for the Democratic Party as when it formulated and successfully applied our wise foreign policy, including the so-called Monroe doctrine, first advanced by Jefferson while Secretary of State under Washington, and which was afterwards elaborated and announced as a national policy by President Monroe, another Democrat; as much need now for the Democratic Party as when it blazed the old paths and established the old landmarks for the future guidance of the American people; as much need now for a militant democracy as when Andrew Jackson, with cloudless vision and unexampled courage, strangled the United States Bank and ended the autocratic power it exerted over the Government and the unconscionable monopoly it enjoyed over the financial affairs of the Nation; as much need now for the Democratic Party as when our Democratic Presidents and Democratic Congresses were adding to our public domain, extending our national boundaries and carrying our flag from the Father of Waters to the placid, sun-kissed Pacific and from the far-flung Canadian frontier to the sluggish Rio Grande; as much need now for the Democratic Party as when it was developing our rich natural resources and amazing wealth of farm, field, forest, factory, mountain, mine, and plain; as much need now for the Democratic Party as when Cleveland established the principle that "a public office is a public trust," ruthlessly stamped out corruption and extravagance and restored honesty, efficiency, and economy in the administration of Federal affairs [applause]; as much need now for the Democratic Party as when Woodrow Wilson inaugurated far-reaching governmental reforms, secured the enactment of laws to establish social justice, and in eight years placed on our statute books more beneficent and outstanding constructive legislation than had been enacted by the Republican Party in the previous 50 years [applause]; as much need now for the Democratic Party as when President Wilson carried to a successful consummation our stupendous military operations in the World War, the most sanguinary, appalling, and destructive conflict that has ever ravaged the earth, scourged humanity, or chastised nations since the morning stars sang together and the curtain went up on human history.

Gentlemen, it is not probable that either the Democratic or Republican Parties will die for generations. Though differing widely, each is founded on principles that vitally affect our social, political, industrial, and economic life, and which will probably be the subject of honest disagreement and uppermost in the minds of the American people for several decades. Each represents a definite and distinct theory as to the functions of government, but they differ radically in the application of the fundamental principles on which our free institutions are founded. It is ridiculous to assert that either party has a monopoly on wisdom, statecraft, and patriotism, or to assume that one party will live forever and the other quickly perish. In both of the great political parties much may be found to commend and much to condemn. Obviously each party had and has a mission. Each has contributed to our national prestige, progress, peace, and prosperity. Each has often been mismanaged and suffered from selfish and unwise leadership. Each has occasionally worshiped false political gods and now and then sold its birthright for a short lease of power or for a mess of political pottage. Each has made many mistakes and at times embezzled power, misused official positions, and sacrificed the interests of the people. In platform declarations and in the enactment of legislation each political party has frequently abandoned fixed principles for expediency in an effort to win election and secure temporary advantages.

But by reason of the principles on which it is founded and because of its more than a century-long battle for the rights of the masses or so-called common people, the Democratic Party has seldom departed far from its traditional policies, turned aside from its well-marked path of duty or surrendered to the selfish and sordid interests that infest our national Capitol and greedily demand special privileges, undeserved favors, and unearned bounties.

As great political parties do not spring up overnight neither do they perish suddenly. They are called into being in answer to a nation-wide public demand. They are organized and maintained to reflect and emphasize the will and demands of large groups of people. They are endowed with life, virility, and influence because they represent and advocate the opinions, convictions, and fundamental conceptions of large bodies of citizens in relation to governmental matters.

Political parties are the agencies and instrumentalities by which the American voters work their will and express their approval or disapproval of legislative and economic policies. A political party is composed of millions of men and women who are in complete or substantial agreement as to governmental policies and methods by which social and economic justice may be promoted. And political parties are organized and maintained to curb, restrain, and rebuke individuals and parties who make merchandise of patriotism and use the agencies and instrumentalities of the Government to promote their selfish and sordid ends.

Parties are created to safeguard our institutions, promote the general welfare, expose corruption and graft, rebuke prodigality and extravagance in the expenditure of public funds, define the subjects, objects, and limits of taxation, and to prevent an unreasonable exercise or an abuse of the taxing power. In short, political parties will exist as long as we cherish our free institutions. Without great political parties a Republic such as ours can not function efficiently, work the will of its citizens, obtain the maximum benefits and blessings incident to our unique form of government, attain the highest ends and ideals of statecraft, insure the reign of social justice, and equitably balance the scales of opportunity between conflicting interests and rival vocational groups.

A political party stands for certain well-defined theories of government; champions principles and policies that in the opinion of the rank and file of the party will best promote the public good. A political party is the voice of millions of men and women in the expression of their views on public problems. The average citizen aligns himself with the party that stands for the things he stands for; that advocates principles in harmony with his convictions; that champions the policies he believes will best promote the welfare of the Nation; and in choosing his party he is not materially influenced by the success or failure of this or that party at the polls; and ordinarily the American people do not abandon their honest opinions and well-considered political convictions because the party that champions these policies is defeated at the ballot box.

As a rule men hold firmly to their political convictions, although a majority of people may entertain different views and advocate different policies. When a man aligns himself with a certain political party it is reasonable to assume that he believes in the principles and policies advocated by that party and that he will not abandon his party simply because it has lost the election. If a voter before the election honestly believes his party's policies are right, his faith in the justice of these policies will continue after the election. No election ever changed right to wrong or wrong to right. No election ever made a sound policy unsound or an unsound policy sound. Whatever is right before the election is right after the election, although a majority may be on the other side. Majorities do not determine what party principles are right and what party policies are wrong. Principles never change; they are eternal.

A political party may be in a hopeless minority, yet its principles and policies may be sound, wholesome, and such as will best promote the welfare of the Nation. A conception of government that is fundamentally right does not lose its virtue because a majority of the people reject that policy at the ballot box.

These observations lead me to the conclusion that the foundation of a great political party is laid too deep in the mind, heart, conscience, affection, and judgment of men to be undermined or destroyed by the defeat or a succession of defeats of that party. Political parties may be defined as self-created corporations or joint-stock companies organized by voters to speak for them, advocate their principles, champion their policies, and work their will. In union and cooperation there is strength, and voters realize that what they can not do as individuals they may be able to accomplish collectively by uniting and cooperating as a party. As long as a voter holds fast to his political convictions he will not abandon the party that champions his theories of government. Why should any man withdraw from the association of those with whom he is in full or substantial accord and join those whose views are in striking conflict with his own convictions?

For the reasons to which I have referred major political parties seldom die or disintegrate. They may change their names and pass under new leadership, but the instances are exceedingly rare when a great political party dies or crumbles to pieces.

Even superficial students of our political history know that ever since we have had a Government we have had a Democratic Party, although it was originally known as the Anti-Federalist or Democratic-Republican Party, and since the time of President Jackson it has been known as the Democratic Party. During the first administration of President Washington, although classed as a Federalist, the executive department was not conducted on a partisan basis; there were no political parties as we now understand that term, although conflicting views were held by rival groups or blocs that developed into the Federalist Party and the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party has an unbroken line of succession from the first Washington administration. The Federalist Party after a brief career was merged in the Whig Party, and from the loins of the Whig Party the Republican Party sprung.

Crediting the administrations of Presidents Washington and John Adams to the Federalist Party, though the former was not essentially partisan, the executive department of our Government since 1789 has been controlled by political parties as follows:

Federalist Party, 12 years.
Whig Party, 4 years 1 month.
Republican Party, 52 years.
Democratic Party, 71 years 11 months.

It is a noteworthy fact that for more than one-half of the hundred and forty years of our national existence the Democratic Party has been in complete control of the executive branch of our Government. And in the period during which the Democratic Party dominated this Nation our institutions were nurtured and established on a stable and enduring basis, our resources developed, our territorial boundaries tremendously enlarged, our national wealth enormously augmented, and our Republic elevated to a preeminent position among the self-governing States of the world.

And to the end that the American people might not become too self-centered and materialistic, through the warp of our national fabric the Democratic Party has shot the woof of exalted ideals, ethical aspirations, and transcendant humanitarianism. When we consider its long and eventful career, its outstanding accomplishments in constructive statesmanship, its wholesome influence, its unselfish service to the American people, its success when encompassed by seemingly insurmountable obstacles, its resourcefulness and fortitude in adversity, and its sublime courage when beset by appalling vicissitudes, the Democratic Party stands preeminent among the political parties in the United States and may well be acclaimed the Colossus of political organizations of modern times, and its feet are not of clay or stubble.

Every intelligent Republican knows the Democratic Party will live because it deserves to live. Only those Democrats and Republicans who are fit subjects for a psychopathic hospital prattle about the Democratic Party dying or disintegrating.

Though decisively routed in the recent election, the Democratic Party, 15,000,000 strong, still carries on. It is rapidly recovering from the shock of disappointed hopes and shattered ambitions. Phœnixlike it emerges from the ashes of defeat. It renews its strength like the young eagles in their upward flight. Its gaping wounds bear mute but eloquent testimony of its valor and fortitude. While its livery is somewhat tattered, its spirit is undaunted, its arm strong, its shield still capable of turning aside every javelin thrust, its armor unshattered and unpierced though red with rust from sanguinary encounters. Its sword is still unbroken and unbent, sharp as a Toledo blade, and with the temper of a rapier forged in the hot furnaces of Damascus. Though its banner is disheveled, it has not dipped to the enemy or trailed in the dust.

Out of the quicksands of defeat, out of the deep pit of disaster, out of the wilderness of indecision, out of the cross-currents and riptides of dissension, and out from the vortex of fractricidal conflict and intestine strife, the Democratic Party comes forth, stands erect, moves forward, grimy with the smoke of innumerable battles, bearing the scars of countless combats, and with confidence and unflinching courage faces the future, its head bloody but unbowed, its soul unafraid and unconquerable.

Where is the man of intelligence who has the temerity to pronounce sentence of death on the Democratic Party? [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LOZIER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Democratic Party having been in power for 71 years and the Republican Party for only 50 years, I presume the gentleman is reconciled to our having the power for the next 20 years so as to even up the score?

Mr. LOZIER. The Republican Party has had a longer lease of power than it deserved in view of its record as the aggressive and outspoken champion of special privilege and class legislation. However, if the American people, in the exercise of their judgment—which frequently is hasty, biased, and poorly considered—determine that they want the Republican Party to continue in power, then we will, of course, abide their decision. But I modestly suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that his party leaders have too often misused, embezzled, and abused the powers committed to them to justify the conclusion that his party will long be anchored in the confidence of the people.

There will come a time when the beneficiaries of special privilege will not be able to fool the American people any longer or to put over their vicious and discriminatory legislative program. The day will come when the American people will realize that the present leaders of the Republican Party have betrayed the rank and file of their own party and have made it the agent, attorney in fact, and the supine servant of the special-privilege classes of this Nation, and when that time comes an awakened and outraged constituency will hurl his party from power, drive the corrupt money changers out of the temple of government, and remove from places of responsibility those who use the agencies of government to "feather their own nests" and accomplish their selfish and sinister purposes.

The Democratic Party has suffered severe defeats in the past, but it has always quickly recovered and fought its way to victory in coming elections. Even now it is recovering from its recent defeat, its forces are being united, and all indications point to its complete rehabilitation. At this good time the tide of public opinion is flowing toward the Democratic Party, and well-informed Republicans realize that they are facing a stubborn battle in the 1930 and 1932 elections. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the gentleman who has just addressed the committee is still with us, and I desire to take these few minutes to ask him a question. I listened with a great deal of interest to his remarks on the merits of the Democratic Party and its return to power in the future, although I do not agree with most of them.

In his Milwaukee speech during the last campaign the Democratic standard bearer, Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York, practically confined his entire address to a discussion of his views in favor of modifying the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act. He told the people of Milwaukee, who were overwhelmingly in favor of changing the existing prohibition law, that if they desired to have the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act modified, they should by their votes in the November election return the Democratic Party to power. Now, can the gentleman advise me and the people of Milwaukee, if the day ever comes when the Democratic Party is returned to power, whether in his judgment we will have a modification of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment, as promised by Governor Smith in his Milwaukee speech. I now yield for any member of the Democratic Party who is present to advise me and the people of Milwaukee whether or not they believe that when the day comes that the Democratic Party is returned to power we will have a modification of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment, as Governor Smith stated in his Milwaukee speech prior to the November election. I hear no response, and I am now more fully convinced that Governor Smith was wrong, as I indicated during the course of the campaign, in stating that if the Democratic Party were returned to power we would have a modification of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

CRUISER CONSTRUCTION

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, as I was listening to the eloquent words of the gentleman from Missouri I thought for a moment that I was not in the House of Representatives but in the Democratic National Convention at Houston. [Applause.] I am perfectly willing to admit that like death and taxes the Democratic Party is always with us. [Applause.] But I do not intend to indulge in any political controversy, nor shall I attempt to reply to my dear friend and colleague from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], who had something to say about an amendment which bears my name. He spoke so beautifully about the friendship of Massachusetts and South Carolina that I have not the heart to reply to his remarks at this time.

However, I do want to speak very briefly about another amendment that bears my name, which has seemed to create a great deal of disturbance throughout the country, the so-called Dallinger amendment to the cruiser bill, which was adopted by the House.

I wish to say, in the first place, for the benefit of those friends on both sides of the Chamber who supported me in that fight, and in which we were successful, that the fruits of that victory have been stolen, and that we will probably never have a chance by direct vote to regain them under our rules. The Naval Committee of the Senate in reporting the cruiser bill to the Senate modified my amendment by adding an amendment to it, which means that that part of the bill will go to conference where the conferees will have authority to rewrite the amendment, and as all the conferees will be hostile to the purpose of the amendment, they will take all the teeth out of it by leaving the matter to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, and we know what that means. For in spite of the fact that Congress in its wisdom has seen fit to put into permanent statute law a provision that the arsenals and navy yards of the country, in which the people of this country have an enormous capital investment, shall be utilized for the manufacture of articles needed for the national defense "when time and facilities permit," as a rule, time and facilities do not permit.

Now, we have a vast amount of the taxpayers' money invested in these plants all over the country and they are not being used to the extent to which they should be used. I have made the statement of the facts repeatedly before bodies of business men and have never yet failed to get their approval of the contention that this policy is wrong—that this great Government of ours either ought to sell the plants, in which the people of the country have invested more than two thousand millions of dollars, and put the money in the Treasury for the relief of the taxpayers, or else they ought to use them for the purpose for which they were intended.

Now, the Secretary of the Navy has recently written a letter to a member of the United States Senate in which, to my mind, as one to whom has been intrusted one of the great departments of our national defense, he has made a most pitiful admission. He makes the statement that most, if not all, of our navy yards are not equipped to build one of these cruisers without the expenditure of a considerable sum of money. Mr. Chairman, this is a most pitiful admission, because in 1916, just before we entered the war, this Congress appropriated vast sums of money for the purpose of enabling the Navy Department to put these establishments in first-class condition, and if they have not been kept in condition, then it seems to me the Navy Department is subject to severe criticism.

Now, what is the practice of the other great powers? It was the practice of all the nations of the earth until comparatively recent times to manufacture all their munitions of war in time of peace in government establishments, because it was recognized that this was a government function. Of recent years, however, it has been the policy of our administrative officials to use the navy yards less and less and to rely more and more upon private establishments. Moreover, there has been a lot of false propaganda that has gone forth to the country from the private shipbuilding interests to the effect that most of the vessels built by the Governments of the other great powers are being built in private yards.

Now, what are the facts? I have made some inquiries of the British Government and I find that of the last 13 cruisers—these modern, up-to-date cruisers—7 have been built in the three navy yards that Great Britain maintains. The British Isles are small. They have not much more coast line than some of our States. There are 3 navy yards and 10 large private yards. Great Britain has built 7 of these last 13 cruisers in the government navy yards and only 6 in the 10 private yards. In other words, the British Government constructed all the cruisers it could in the government-owned yards.

The Republic of France has built all of its cruisers in government navy yards, the smaller vessels being built in the private yards, which is just the reverse of the policy of the United States. The policy of this country is to build most of the large vessels, the vessels upon which so much depends, in private yards under private contract.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSON. How much would we have to increase the personnel of our navy yards if we enlarged their scope for building these vessels in them?

Mr. DALLINGER. Comparatively little.

Mr. HUDSON. Are we not now using all we can?

Mr. DALLINGER. No. Most of the navy yards are practically not being used, except for repair work and for the construction of some of the smaller vessels.

Mr. HUDSON. I suppose that is true so far as equipment is concerned, but I am talking about the men to do the work. Would we not have to increase the number of them?

Mr. DALLINGER. No; we have been discharging skilled mechanics right along because there was no work for them to do.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is it the gentleman's position that the private shipyards, where we also have hundreds of millions of dollars invested as a result of individual initiative, should not be permitted to bid upon this work at all?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly not. Private shipyards ought to be used where necessary, and my amendment was a perfectly fair amendment. I recognize the importance of both the private shipyards and the Government yards, and my amendment, which has been grossly misrepresented throughout the country, provided that every alternate cruiser should be built in a Government yard, which is exactly what Great Britain has done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for one question purely for information?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman stated that the Secretary had asserted that these government navy yards were not adequate for the construction of 10,000-ton cruisers. As a matter of fact, are they capable of that character of construction, either the one in the gentleman's district or any other of the navy-yard establishments?

Mr. DALLINGER. My point, Mr. Chairman, was that the navy yards ought to be capable of constructing these cruisers. If they are not in a condition to do the work for which they were established, then we are in a sad way so far as our national defense is concerned, especially when we consider that our navy yards were brought up to the highest point of efficiency at the time of the war. Inasmuch as the other great powers of the world are keeping their navy yards up to the highest point of efficiency we should have kept ours up and should have seen to it that they were capable of building these large vessels.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But is it true we would have to spend large sums of money to make the navy yards capable for this character of construction?

Mr. DALLINGER. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the amount necessary to make these navy yards capable of building these cruisers, and even the largest battleships, is very much exaggerated, and I want to say here that I have talked with some of the officers at some of these yards and they had told me in confidence that the amount required to put these navy yards in condition to build these cruisers is not large, and in some cases no larger than the amount that will have to be spent by some of the private yards to do the same thing.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the conditions complained of in the navy yards apply to the arsenal in my district. I have an arsenal in my district that contains stock, machinery, and equipment, totaling over $400,000,000, and they are begging and pleading for work to hold together the organization in that great plant, and they only get a gesture now and then.

Mr. DALLINGER. When I was interrupted by numerous questions I was about to give the figures with relation to Japan. In Japan 60 per cent of the war vessels of that great empire are manufactured in government navy yards. My point is this: We have 12 navy yards, but we have not as many in proportion to our coast line and size as the other great powers.

What I desire to emphasize is that in spite of the figures given out by the private shipbuilding interests, the three great nations with whom we are compared in the matter of national defense use their navy yards to the fullest possible extent. They keep their navy yards and arsenals up to the greatest possible efficiency. We are neglecting to do that, and some day we may have cause to regret it.

Now, I want to ask a question and answer it. Why do the other great powers except the United States prefer to build their war vessels in their own navy yards when they can? There are two reasons that occur to me and will occur to you. In the first place, the safety of the men on those vessels is most important. The best piece of work ought to be done, the best possible steel ought to be used, and the greatest accuracy ought to be had, so as to protect the men on the vessels against accident. I do not care how good your private shipyards are, the fact is that when a vessel is let out to a private corporation, organized primarily for profit, you will not get as good a job as you will in a Government shipyard. There is not a man in this House who, if he wanted to build a home, would not prefer, if he could afford it, to build it himself and see the material and labor that went into it. Those of us who can not afford to build a home in that way are obliged to buy a house from a contractor, and the chances are that we do not get such a well-built house.

In the second place, in the navy yards the work is done by citizens of the country and is planned and supervised by officers of the Navy, capable, qualified men upon whose education the Government has spent large sums of money. Vessels constructed in the Government navy yards are built on honor by officers and men whose sole desire is to turn out the best possible work, and they are not actuated by any selfish motives. On the other hand, in private yards some at least of the workmen may not be citizens of this country; and not only that, but some may be communists or even anarchists and some of these fanatical men, if they had the opportunity, might do something to impair the safety of the vessel.

I make the statement without fear of contradiction that in spite of the best Government inspection it is not reasonable to expect that the work done on a Government vessel in a private yard will be as good and as satisfactory as that done by the Government itself in a Government yard.

The other day the distinguished gentleman from Tennesse, the majority leader, called my attention to the fact that he had been reading the diary and correspondence of that great Democratic President, James K. Polk; and back in those days when it was proposed that one of our Government frigates should be built in a private shipyard, President Polk wrote a very strong letter protesting against such a policy.

Those are the two reasons why the Government for three-quarters of a century and why the other great powers, excepting the United States, to-day build all the vessels they can in Government shipyards. Those in charge of the navies of these great powers feel that in their own Government yards the work will be done by their own citizens and their own officers, and they know that it will be the best possible work that can be obtained.

I want now to call the attention of the House to an interesting situation. When I offered my amendment here in the House the Committee on Naval Affairs was lined up solidly against us, and also the Committee on Appropriations. The late lamented Congressman Butler from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Naval Committee, stated to the House on information furnished him by naval officials, that these cruisers would cost a million dollars a piece more if built in Government yards; and the same statement was made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

I have been fighting this question for 14 years and I never yet have been able to get the figures from the Navy Department showing the extra cost to the Treasury of the United States of having one of these vessels built in a Government yard over and above the cost of these items carried in the regular naval appropriation bill if the vessel was not so constructed. The trouble is that when the officials of the Navy Department receive a bid from a navy yard as against a private shipyard the instructions are given to the officials in the navy yard to include in the bid of the Government yard certain items of its overhead, and the result is that it is impossible to tell what the extra cost of building one of these vessels in a Government yard is. In other words, the cost, when it is finally arrived at by charging up everything to that vessel which goes into it, disregards the fact that a lot of this material may have been bought years ago by the Government, and that the salaries of all of the officers and a large proportion of the machinists are carried in the regular naval appropriation act, and gives an entirely false impression. I have always believed and am convinced that, taking into account the capital investment of the Government in plant, equipment, materials, and the salaries and wages already carried in the regular appropriation acts, these vessels could be built in the Government navy yards for a million dollars, or possibly two million dollars, less than they can be built for in private yards. It is interesting, in view of the statements made on the floor of this House, that when this matter was before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs and I was sent for, when I reached the committee room a representative of one of the private shipbuilding plants was arguing to that committee that it was not fair to subject the private plants to competition with the navy yards, because they had to figure interest on the capital invested in their land, buildings, machinery, and equipment, and their overhead, while in the case of the navy yards all of these things were carried in the regular Navy appropriation bill.

They said that it was not a square deal for them; that it was not fair competition. In other words, they were using just the opposite argument from what was used on the floor of the House. The guardians of the Treasury here were telling you that it was going to cost more to build them in a Government yard, but over there the private shipyard interests were arguing to the committee that they could not compete with the Government navy yards and that it was not fair competition.

My colleagues, as a believer in national defense, it has grieved me to hear some of the things that were said when my amendment was adopted. Among other things, it was said that the bill was ruined, showing that on the part of the people who made such a statement that the real motive, the real reason why they were interested in this cruiser bill, was because of the private profits which would accrue to some of these great manufacturing establishments. I do not believe that our War Department or our Navy Department are maintained in order that great corporations may reap profits at the expense of the taxpayers of the country. I believe that the War Department and the Navy Department, which have constructed these great manufacturing establishments in which the taxpayers of the country have invested over $2,000,000,000, should be compelled to use them, or else, in justice to the taxpayers, we ought to sell them and put the money back into the Treasury. If we were wrong for three-quarters of a century—if all of these other great nations of the earth are wrong now in believing that the manufacture of munitions of war is a government function—then we ought to sell all of our navy yards and arsenals and purchase all our vessels and all our munitions of war from private corporations. Many of these great Government establishments to-day are almost idle, and these trained machinists who have been taught to do this accurate work have been thrown out of employment. We ought, in justice to the taxpayers, to sell these plants and have all of our work done by private establishments if we do not intend to use them.

However, Mr. Chairman, when the people of this country come to understand the real truth of this whole matter, I believe that they will say that that amendment which I offered and which this House adopted was right, and that I was right in offering it, and that the membership of this House that supported me in this amendment were right in voting for it.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KETCHAM. The gentleman has not made it quite clear to me why we should not have another opportunity to vote upon this proposition. In what form is the legislation now so that we will be prevented from having an opportunity to vote upon it, if they have changed fundamentally a proposition that the House put into the bill?

Mr. DALLINGER. Because, ordinarily, the only chance we have to vote on a Senate amendment is where an amendment is put on in the Senate that would be out of order under the rules of the House, and then the conferees have to bring that matter before the House for a vote. This is not that case. This is a case where the House adopted an amendment and the Senate makes a little alteration in it. That amendment later will go to conference, and it has been repeatedly held that the conferees, inasmuch as there is a disagreement between the two Houses as to a particular paragraph, can rewrite that paragraph, and we have either got to vote to accept or to reject the conference report as a whole.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I am like the gentleman from Michigan. I think under the statement of the parliamentary situation suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts the House will have an opportunity under appropriate motion to consider that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS].

OFFICIAL PAPERS OF THE TERRITORIES

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to a situation which developed on Monday of this week when the House had under consideration bills on the Consent Calendar. The bill to which I refer is S. 1168, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the collection and editing of official papers of the Territories of the United States now in the national archives." When this bill came before the House objection was raised and finally the bill was passed over, I think, without prejudice. I am very much interested in this matter, because I have had communications from the State historical societies of Iowa and from various men at the university of my State explaining this as a very important matter and one of much interest to historians and librarians and to others who are making a collection of old papers and of historical records.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman will permit, is that the bill which was pending before the Printing Committee? We did report out that bill. There was a bill of that kind before the Printing Committee, an exceedingly important bill.

Mr. LETTS. This bill was referred to the Committee on Printing; yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. And reported out?

Mr. LETTS. I think so. I will say the bill passed the Senate on February 6, 1928, and my particular interest in the situation at this time is that if it now goes over it will be necessary to start anew in the next Congress. Upon noting the objections raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], I undertook to call upon the Department of State for certain data with respect to this bill and I now have that. It is convincing as to the merits of the bill and persuasive also as to the form in which the bill was drawn as being more satisfactory than the form in which the gentleman from Michigan would leave it. I feel, since a great many historical societies have expressed interest in this matter and many librarians likewise, that it would be of interest to a great many Members to have the data and the information which came to me from the State Department, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks the information which I have so obtained.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Memorandum in regard to Mr. CRAMTON's objection to the Territorial Papers bill, S. 1168 (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 7, p. 1348, second column)

The pending bill is in fact an authorization for further appropriations for the completing of the editing and the publication through the Government Printing Office of the official correspondence in the archives in Washington which passed between the Federal and the Territorial Governments. Forty thousand dollars has already been spent on this project and the copying of the papers has been nearly completed. Some further authorization is required before further appropriations can be made.

Section 4 of S. 1168 enables the department to make its regular editorial office a kind of "pool," following the system which has been found so economical in the handling of stenographic help.

Help for Territorial Papers is regarded as temporary by the Civil Service Commission. When the appropriation stops the work ceases. The uncertainty of the work makes it difficult and even impossible to secure the best grade of editors and proof readers. No experienced proof reader, for example, would care to give up a steady job in another Government office and come to the department for work on the Territorial Papers, knowing that after a limited period the work would cease and the editor would be without a position. The work already done on the Territorial Papers clearly shows that first-grade help is not assured or, where obtainable, demands a premium price because of the uncertainty of the continuation of the project.

In any large project of editing like this there are at least four different grades of proof readers and editors employed, the highest being classified in CAF–9 at a minimum salary of $3,200.

The work in various stages has to pass over the desks of all of these people and can not be finally approved for the printer until it has been finally examined by a very competent and responsible editor.

Section 4 will permit the department to enlarge its regular editorial staff in the lower grades and then for the higher grades of work to transfer from time to time other parts of the regular staff and then to charge their services for the time they are detailed to Territorial Papers against the appropriation for the editing of Territorial Papers. Some economy and much flexibility of administration will be accomplished, because otherwise it will be necessary to maintain a complete quota of editors for the Territorial Papers, notwithstanding the fact that, due to irregularities in the receipt of proof from the Government Printing Office, there may be periods of days or even weeks during which this staff will be insufficiently employed.

It is far simpler and considerably less expensive to treat the editing of Territorial Papers very much as the service station treats the repair of a car. A mechanic is assigned who is competent to do the part of the work required at the moment. When the job gets beyond the lower mechanic the higher mechanic is detailed to finish it up. The service station charges only for the amount of time spent by each mechanic on the job.

Possibly the size of the task is not realized. It involves the publication of about 15 volumes of the size of Foreign Relations. It means, in fact, more than doubling the output per year of the department. It is quite impossible for the department to do this additional work with its regular staff.

It will be observed that the effect of section 4 has no relation whatever to the rates of salaries paid to the editorial staff of the department. Those salaries are fixed by the classification act and are not changed. What is contemplated is merely a system of bookkeeping by which there shall be charged against the Territorial Papers appropriation the editorial copy reading, proof reading, and index making which is done on the papers.

S. 1168, together with the additions to the editorial staff authorized under the current appropriation bill, represent such large additions to the staff that the work can be managed economically in no other way than as provided in section 4. If that section is stricken out a separate editorial office will have to be created. This office will be staffed with people relatively inferior to the standards maintained by the department for its regular staff. The responsibility for the copy reading, proof reading, and index making, etc., will be so divided that it will be difficult if not impossible to maintain a uniform style for departmental publications. The cost to the Government due to the necessity of employing higher grade help than would otherwise be furnished is likely to amount to as much as $10,000.

If section 4 were to be struck out it is strongly recommended that the authorization be increased (p. 2, line 24, of the bill) to $135,000.

As for the provisions in section 3 for the distribution of publications it should be understood that under the printing act of 1895 the Superintendent of Documents will distribute copies to all depository libraries.

As for the demand for these publications, information can be obtained by reference to the chairman of the House Committee on Printing or by reference to the Senate Committee on Printing. It is understood that action with reference to this bill has been taken not only by a large number of historical societies but also by some one or more conferences of public libraries. The department, of course, has no interest whatever in how many copies are distributed to Senators and Representatives. It believes that there will be a considerable demand upon the Superintendent of Documents who will have the publication for sale and that this demand, while never large in any one year, will continue indefinitely.

Mr. LETTS. I trust this memorandum will come to the attention of the gentleman from Michigan and also the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], so that when the matter is again reached upon the calendar it may be better understood and may receive the favorable action of this House.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

M STREET BRIDGE

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMMONS. Gentlemen, in the hearing on this bill on page 73 is a report of the testimony of Mr. Charles Moore, chairman of the Fine Arts Commission. The statement is an unfair and unwarranted criticism of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the highway department of the District. I desire to read into the RECORD the statement there made by Mr. Moore so that the entire matter will appear in the RECORD.

This statement is made in answer to a question by Mr. WASON, the chairman of the committee:

Is there anything else you want to tell us?

Mr. Moore proceeded to say:

Mr. MOORE. There is one matter. On two or three occasions, notably the M Street Bridge and the Kitty Hawk Memorial to the Wrights, and some other things of that kind, it has been the endeavor of the commission to carry out the expressed purpose of Congress; and we have had to reject some submissions because we thought they were not in accordance with what Congress had intended. For instance, it was proposed to recondition or to build a life-saving station at Kitty Hawk and call it a monument, and that was not what Congress intended. And Congress intended (and it was specific so far as the hearings were concerned as to the M Street Bridge) a park bridge; but the District engineer of bridges does not know what a park bridge is. The architect of the District does; we have a very good District architect.

Then follow some other questions, and this statement by Mr. Moore:

Mr. MOORE. * * * It is not a park bridge; it is an ugly service bridge of a type unfitted for park purposes.

Mr. SUMMERS. Where is that bridge?

Mr. MOORE. On M Street, the bridge they are rebuilding. And they are doing the same thing in Rock Creek Park right along. Where the District gets a chance to cross Rock Creek Park, where their roads go through, they are putting in ugly bridges which are out of all keeping with the other park bridges.

Mr. VINSON. What sort of bridge is actually under construction on M Street?

Mr. MOORE. It is a steel-girder bridge.

Mr. VINSON. Is that in accordance with the views of the commission?

Mr. MOORE. It is not in accordance with the views of the commission; it is not in accordance with the views of Congress.

Then he states in another place:

I wish to make it clear that the commission is not responsible, in these cases, when the will of Congress is not carried out.

The facts of the case, gentlemen, are that that bridge is being constructed in strict accordance with an act of Congress. If Mr. Moore had read the act he would have known it. The highway department produced plans for a steel-girder bridge; a bill was introduced in Congress providing for the erection of a steel-girder bridge, it was reported to the House of Representatives by the legislative committee of the District of Columbia, and considered and passed in this body; the bill was sent to the Senate, there studied, and there reported and there passed, providing for a steel-girder bridge. At a later time the District Commissioners came before the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate and asked for money to build that bridge. The authorization limited the committee to $250,000 for that purpose. The House Committee on Appropriations carried the appropriation of $250,000 and the Senate concurred in that appropriation. So there were four distinct times in the proceedings attending the passage of the bill and the appropriation of the money by Congress—twice in the House and twice in the Senate—where Mr. Moore had an opportunity to protest the building of the type of bridge that is now being built at that point. He either did not protest—and so far as I can discover the records do not show that he did—or else Congress ignored his advice.

In any event, the record is clear that the commissioners are building exactly the type of bridge at M Street that Congress ordered there to be built.

The type of bridge that Mr. Moore wants built is an arch-type bridge. The commissioners had no authority to build it. The Committee on Appropriations had no authority to appropriate for such a bridge. When Mr. Moore went over the heads of the commissioners and asked the municipal architect to prepare plans for an arch bridge instead of a steel-girder bridge he was asking for plans to be drawn which could not be installed there under the act of Congress. Had he read the law he would have known that that was true. When he comes before the Committee on Appropriations and attempts to make it appear that the commissioners and the highway department of the District are not carrying out the will of Congress, and that he is the only man who wants to carry out the will of Congress, I think the facts should be known.

His attitude is not only unjust and unfair but it is based upon an easily ascertainable false premise. Mr. Moore has no right to claim that there is lack of cooperation on the part of the commissioners in this matter. To my personal knowledge they gave him every consideration and cooperated just so far as the law permitted. What he complains about is that he has been unable to dictate to the commissioners and unable to compel them to proceed at his request in violation of a clear provision of law. The position taken by the commissioners is correct. If there is any blame attaching to anyone, it attaches to Mr. Moore for neglecting to make his views known prior to and not after Congress had acted. I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement that has been prepared at my request by the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, dated January 17, 1929, pointing out that the bridge which Mr. Moore asked for could not have been built under the act of Congress; that it would have cost $160,000 more to build his type of bridge than the type of bridge now being built there; that Congress had not authorized that expense; and that it would have created considerable disturbance in the water system of the District if his wishes had been carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to follows:

ENGINEER COMMISSIONER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 17, 1929.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. SIMMONS

In compliance with your request, I give you below a brief history of the M Street Bridge case.

In the spring of 1925 the old bridge crossing Rock Creek on the line of M Street NW. was found to have deteriorated with time to such a point as to imperil the safety of the structure, and it became necessary to close the bridge to vehicular traffic. Consideration was first given to the proposition of repairing the bridge, the cost of the necessary work being estimated at about $15,000. It was found, however, that the old bridge if repaired along the lines of the existing structure would interfere with the plans of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission, which contemplate carrying a park boulevard along the banks of Rock Creek underneath the bridge. In order to make room for such a parkway it was found that it would be necessary to move the old west abutment and make other changes in the structure. For this reason it was decided that it would be better to replace the old bridge with a new structure adequate for modern traffic needs and adapted to the requirements of the parkway plan.

Plans for the new bridge were prepared in the office of the engineer of bridges during the fall and winter of 1925–26. Consideration was given to various types of construction. The old bridge carried a 48-inch trunk water main, which is an essential part of the water supply and distribution system, and also a 30-inch cast-iron sewer, both of which had to be cared for in the plans for the new structure.

Two types of bridge were considered—the arch type and the steel-girder type. It was found that the foundation conditions were such that the cost of a concrete arch bridge would be greatly in excess of a steel-girder bridge, and that the headroom required for the park roadway could not be provided in the arch type without increasing the length of the span, which again would operate to increase the cost. For these reasons the steel-girder type was selected, with the provision that the steel girders should be incased in concrete, thus giving the effect of a concrete girder construction. Either type of bridge required the removal of the sewer to another location under Rock Creek, but provision for the carrying of the water main was made in the plans for the steel-girder bridge, it being found that this could be done without diminishing the headroom below that required for the park driveway.

For these reasons the steel-girder type with the girders incased in concrete was adopted, the estimated cost being as follows:

Bridge	$170,000
Changes in trunk water main	15,000
Sewer reconstruction	33,500
Engineering, contingencies, etc	31,500
Total	250,000

A bill authorizing the construction of a steel-girder bridge was prepared by the commissioners, approved by the Director of the Budget, and submitted to Congress with request for its enactment. While the bill was under consideration the engineer of bridges appeared before the committees in Congress and displayed the plans prepared in his office and adopted by the commissioners. Thereafter the bill was passed by Congress and approved by the President on July 3, 1926. The language of the bill is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide sufficient clearance for the proposed park drive in the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway, and to enable traffic to use M Street NW., between Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Streets, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to construct a new steel-girder bridge to replace the bridge in the line of M Street over Rock Creek, which bridge shall have a roadway 40 feet wide and two footways each nine feet wide, and shall include proper facilities for carrying and supporting water main and other underground construction: Provided, That the Commission of Fine Arts shall be consulted as to the architectural design of the proposed bridge and its approaches.

"SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, payable in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia, the sum of $250,000, and the said commissioners are authorized to expend therefrom such sum or sums as may be necessary for personal services, engineering, and incidental expenses.

"Approved July 3, 1926."

It will be noted that by this act Congress definitely approved and adopted the steel-girder type of bridge, with the provision that the Commission of Fine Arts shall be consulted as to the architectural design of the proposed bridge and its approaches.

The District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, approved March 2, 1927, carried an item as follows:

"For construction of a bridge to replace the M Street Bridge over Rock Creek, including necessary changes in sewer and water mains and including also such sum or sums as may be necessary for personal services, engineering, and incidental expenses, $250,000."

When this item was under consideration by the Appropriations Committee of the House the question of the design of the bridge was raised. The following extract from the hearings shows what was said at that time:

[From the House hearings, District of Columbia appropriation bill, 1928, pp. 276–278]

CONSTRUCTION TO REPLACE M STREET BRIDGE

"Mr. SIMMONS. The second item on page 101 is for construction of a bridge to replace the M Street Bridge over Rock Creek, including necessary changes in sewer and water mains and including, also, such sum or sums as may be necessary for personal services, engineering, and incidental expenses, $250,000.

"Mr. HUNT. This bridge was constructed in 1872. An examination made in May, 1925, disclosed defects of such serious character that it was necessary to close the bridge to traffic. The plans for the Rock Creek Parkway require the removal of the existing bridge and the proposed girder bridge is designated to conform with the roadways of the Rock Creek Parkway. The bridge is a part of an important run of the fire department as well as a part of an important highway.

"Mr. COLLINS. What is this going to cost?

"Mr. ROBERTSON. It is estimated at $250,000.

"Mr. COLLINS. Do you not estimate the contract cost at $177,000?

"Mr. HOWSER. Yes, sir; but $250,000 includes all the work necessary for the construction of the bridge, water mains, sewer mains, and approaches. We have to shift one 48-inch water main across the old bridge. We also have to shift the sewer.

"Mr. COLLINS. Are you going to put two driveways on the lower part of the bridge?

"Mr. HOWSER. No, sir; there will be one driveway on one side. I have a sketch here showing the type of structure.

"Mr. COLLINS. Has it been approved by the Fine Arts Commission?

"Mr. HOWSER. It has not as yet reached that stage.

"Mr. SIMMONS. Your proposal is to build a bridge there in keeping with the other bridges of the District?

"Mr. HOWSER. Yes, sir.

"Mr. COLLINS. How are you going to have the driveways?

"Mr. HOWSER. One driveway here [indicating on sketch] at an elevation of 15 feet.

"Mr. COLLINS. How wide is that?

"Mr. HOWSER. Fifty-foot driveway.

"Mr. COLLINS. There is one on the other side?

"Mr. HOWSER. On this side [indicating]. The driveway is elevated. This connects up with the upper level of the bridge [indicating]. There will be a bridle path here.

"Mr. COLLINS. How much is the bridle path going to cost?

"Mr. HOWSER. That will not come under our jurisdiction. All we do is to make provision for the roadway; see that the surface is graded properly.

"Mr. COLLINS. I thought that you had a driveway on either side of Rock Creek.

"Mr. HOWSER. At this point [indicating] there will be one driveway underneath and one on top on the other side, to give a high-level road.

"Mr. HUNT. On the east side is the high-level road and on the west side the low-level road at that particular point. That is in accordance with the park development plan. It fits in with that.

"Mr. COLLINS. They have not made any progress, in other words. That is just a tentative plan.

"Mr. HUNT. It is an approved plan, but not an executed plan. This plan fits their plan.

"Colonel BELL. Changes are still made in that plan.

"Mr. COLLINS. That was my understanding. Personally, it seems to me that this bridge could very well wait until their plans are formulated, because, as I understand, they have done nothing except make tentative plans.

"Colonel BELL. There will be a driveway under this bridge. It will be an important driveway.

"Mr. COLLINS. The last time I discussed this with anyone it was the understanding that there was to be a driveway on either side of Rock Creek and underneath that bridge.

"Mr. HUNT. They could still do that, with this plan.

"Mr. COLLINS. I am very well acquainted with that territory and I do not see how you could manage the driveway in any other way.

"Mr. ROBERTSON. I think that the bridge was designed so that you could have the same width roadway on the west as on the east.

"Mr. COLLINS. You may have to adopt another plan. You may have to have another plan for this kind of bridge. It seems to me that we can very well have this wait.

"Colonel BELL. The bill specifies its construction, a new steel girder bridge. You would have to change the act of Congress to construct any other type of bridge.

"Mr. COLLINS. At any rate, they have done nothing toward connecting that roadway as yet.

"Colonel BELL. Practically nothing, but I believe you gentlemen should bear in mind that the existing bridge has been closed for a year or two because of its condition and that the new bridge should be erected soon in order to give direct access to and from Virginia by way of M Street. This is an important traffic artery and also an important fire run."

Under the provisions of this appropriation the preliminary plans for the new bridge were submitted to the Fine Arts Commission. The Fine Arts Commission objected to the design and requested the municipal architect to prepare a preliminary design for an arch bridge to meet the situation. The municipal architect prepared such a design, consisting of three arches resting on concrete piers, and submitted it to the Fine Arts Commission as requested by that body.

In order to give the necessary clearance and to meet architectural considerations the crown of the arch had to be made too thin to permit of carrying the 48-inch water main on the structure, and the design therefore contemplated the relocation of the water main under Rock Creek. As already stated, all designs contemplated the removal of the sewer from the bridge structure and its relocation elsewhere, so that the arch type and the steel-girder type did not differ in this respect. The Fine Arts Commission indicated their strong preference for the arch type of design and requested the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to prepare and submit plans for this type of structure. At the same time they made certain suggestions as to treatment of the approaches and other architectural details.

The commissioners gave very careful and prolonged consideration to the recommendations of the Fine Arts Commission. It was recognized that solely from an architectural point of view, other things being equal, the arch type is perhaps preferable. In this case, however, there are other practical considerations to be balanced against the architectural advantages. A careful estimate of the cost of the arch type of structure showed that a bridge of this type, with the necessary relocation of the 48-inch water main under Rock Creek, would require an additional appropriation of approximately $160,000, as well as an amendment to the authorization act of July 3, 1926, changing the designation of the type of bridge to be built and increasing the authorization by the amount stated.

After full consideration of these matters the commissioners decided to proceed with the girder type of structure in the hope that the Fine Arts Commission would approve the design in its final form. Detailed plans were prepared, with due regard to the suggestions as to approaches and other architectural details that had been made by the Fine Arts Commission, and these detailed plans were submitted to the commission for final approval on March 9, 1928. On March 10, 1928, the Fine Arts Commission returned the plans with their definite and final disapproval for the reasons stated in their letter, which is as follows:

"MY DEAR MR. DOUGHERTY: The Commission of Fine Arts, having considered the plans submitted by the District engineer of bridges for a bridge over Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway at M Street, are returning the same with their disapproval of the plans as submitted. In the opinion of the commission the bridge, if constructed according to these plans, would be a perpetual eyesore, conspicuous not only from the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge but especially so from the driveway extending from the Lincoln Memorial to Rock Creek Park, a driveway which forms an essential portion of the park system of the District of Columbia.

"The District of Columbia has set a pace in the construction of the Q Street Bridge, which should be maintained in the construction of all bridges across the Rock Creek Parkway. If the proposed design were simply inconspicuous, the commission might approve it reluctantly; but inasmuch as the design is conspicuously bad the commission can not give their approval.

"The hearings show conclusively that Congress intended this bridge to be so designed as to secure the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts, and it is with great reluctance that we have to report our disapproval.

"For the Commission of Fine Arts.

"Very respectfully yours,

"CHARLES MOORE, Chairman.

"Hon. PROCTOR L. DOUGHERTY,

"President Board of Commisisoners of the District of Columbia, Washington, D. C."

The commissioners then gave careful consideration to the question of the advisability of requesting Congress to enact the necessary legislation authorizing the construction of an arch bridge and providing the additional funds required, and decided that in their judgment the advantages of the arch type were not sufficient to justify the increased cost to the District of Columbia. The bridge is essentially a service structure carrying an important street and water main over the parkway, and the commissioners felt and still feel that a utilitarian design, properly adjusted to give the necessary widths and clearances for the park roads that are to pass underneath is entirely appropriate to the situation.

Accordingly the plan of requesting legislation was dropped and bids for the construction of the bridge were invited on the plans of the bridge department; changed, however, in the architectural details to conform as closely as possible with the suggestions made by the Fine Arts Commission in its consideration of the various plans before it. These bids were opened on September 20, 1928, and a satisfactory bid being received, contract was entered into by the commissioners with the Farris Engineering Co. under date of December 4, 1928, to construct a bridge in accordance with the plans for the sum of $167,314.31. Work under this contract has already been commenced.

While this matter was under discussion in the fall of 1927 and the spring of 1928, the necessary change in the relocation of the sewer was carried out by the sewer department at a total cost of $31,314.04. The bridge contract includes the adjustment of the 48-inch water main to the new structure.

W. B. LADUE,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers, United States Army,
Engineer Commissioner, District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is now settled that there will be an extra session of Congress, meeting some time in April of this year, for the consideration of farm relief and tariff legislation. It is my purpose to enter fully into the debates as to both these subjects when they come up at the extra session. For the present I shall make only a very few observations.

As to the tariff question, let me say that I have always urged and voted for a high tariff on every farm product that can be helped by a protective tariff. The only way that the tariff on manufactured articles can be offset, in so far as the farmer is concerned, is by putting a tariff on peanuts, cottonseed meal, cottonseed oil, vegetable oils, cowhides, naval-store products, and, in fact, on all products which come into our country in competition with what is produced by our own farm people and other citizens. Generally I am opposed to a high tariff, but when there is a high tariff on practically all my people buy, I then want a high tariff on what they sell to enable them to get a better price for their products.

I know that many many thousands of dollars have been realized by the people of my district from the tariff on peanuts alone during the last few years. I do not wish to say more now except to suggest that the great fight in the extra session will be to help the farmer not only get more for his products but also to enable him to keep what he gets.

Tariff and so-called farm relief legislation which puts money into one pocket of the farmer and provides a method for it to be stolen out of another pocket is not only a deception but an outrageous crime. This is the kind of legislation the farmer has been getting these many years.

My prayer is for a square deal now and forever for those who live on the farm by their own toil. May the extra session of Congress soon to be called by President-elect Hoover be the beginning of a much better era for the farmers of our Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication:

JANUARY 16, 1929.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby resign from the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives.

Very respectfully yours,

WILLIS G. SEARS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following members of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy for this year: Messrs. GUY U. HARDY, of Colorado; A. PLATT ANDREW, of Massachusetts; ROBERT L. BACON, of New York; MORGAN G. SANDERS, of Texas, and SOL BLOOM, of New York.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BERGER, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, on the 11th of January I submitted a report on the fiscal relations between the District of Columbia and the United States and asked unanimous consent that it be printed as a House document, which consent was granted. At the suggestion of the clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing I have introduced a resolution authorizing that printing in the regular way, and I now ask unanimous consent that the other proceedings be vacated and that the manuscript be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the first proceedings be vacated in the matter to which he refers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MISSOURI MILITIA

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by direction of that committee, presented a privileged report on House Joint Resolution 379, extending the benefits of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 1, 1920, the act of Congress approved July 3, 1926, and the act of Congress approved May 23, 1928, to the Missouri Militia who served during the Civil War, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the resolution was reported as privileged?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Committee on Invalid Pensions has that privilege under the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It may have as to general pension bills, but I doubt the privileged character of this resolution. However, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair observes this rule, section 724:

The term "general pension bills" is construed to mean bills or legislation general in character, such as extending the provisions of the pension laws to an additional class, as distinguished from bills of a private character.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions has that power in general.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. Con. Res. 31. Concurrent resolution to print the briefs of counsel and transcript of record filed with the Supreme Court of the United States in the St. Louis & O'Fallon Railway case as a Senate document, and for extra copies thereof; to the Committee on Printing.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on January 16, 1929, present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

SENATE

FRIDAY, January 18, 1929

(Legislative day of Thursday, January 17, 1929)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 4, and 30 to the bill and concurred therein; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 41 and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 20, 39, and 40 and requested a further conference with the Senate on said amendments, and that Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. MURPHY, and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

VISITORS TO THE NAVAL ACADEMY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, pursuant to law, appoints as members on the part of the Senate of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy for the year 1929 the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. METCALF; the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. SCHALL; the Senator from Florida, Mr. TRAMMELL; and the Senator from Washington, Mr. DILL.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER (S. DOC. NO. 168)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Public Printer, transmitting, in compliance with law, his report of the operations of the Government Printing Office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1928, and the calendar year 1928, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEASING OF CUMBERLAND FALLS FOR POWER PURPOSES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Federal Power Commission, transmitting protests against the leasing of Cumberland Falls for power purposes, requested by Senate Resolution 297, which will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION,
Washington, January 17, 1929.

Cumberland Hydroelectric Power Co.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In accordance with Senate Resolution 297, directing the Federal Power Commission to transmit to the Senate all protests of individuals, organizations, and public officials which it may have received in opposition to the leasing of Cumberland Falls for power development or to the participation of the Hon. Roy O. West in the consideration of this and other leases, I have the honor to forward herewith the original records of the commission pertaining to the subject matter of the resolution.

It has been necessary to furnish the documents in their original form, and they constitute the only record that the commission has of the receipt of these communications. It is, therefore, necessary to request that they be returned when the purposes of the resolution have been served. These protests are bound in six parts, arranged chronologically.

Respectfully,

GLEN E. EDGERTON,
Chief Engineer, in the absence of the Executive Secretary.

SENATOR FROM MISSOURI

Mr. HAWES presented the credentials of ROSCOE C. PATTERSON, chosen a Senator from the State of Missouri for the term commencing March 4, 1929, which was read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

STATE OF MISSOURI,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 6th day of November, 1928, ROSCOE C. PATTERSON was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Missouri a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1929.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of the State of Missouri. Done at the city of Jefferson this 8th day of January, A. D. 1929.

SAM A. BAKER.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

CHARLES U. BECKER,
Secretary of State.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is detained by illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is to-day and has been for the past several days detained from the Senate by illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. My colleague the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following action of the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
January 17, 1929.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 4, and 30 to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 41, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

Before the period at the end of the Senate amendment insert: ", pending determination by the Personnel Classification Board, in accordance with said act."

That the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 20, 39, and 40.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are three motions that I desire to make in relation to the action of the House. First, I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 41. Amendment No. 41 reads as follows:

Provided further, That the practice of allowing quarters, heat, light, household equipment, subsistence, and laundry service to the superintendent and other employees who are required to live at St. Elizabeths Hospital may be continued without deduction from their salary, notwithstanding the act of March 5, 1928 (45 Stat. 193).

The amendment offered on the floor of the House and agreed to yesterday is an amendment to that amendment, reading as follows:

Pending determination by the Personnel Classification Board, in accordance with said act.

In other words, pending a determination by the Personnel Classification Board as to whether the provisions of the act of March 5, 1928, shall apply to the employees there as in all cases of Government employees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments Nos. 20, 39, and 40.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate accede to the request of the House for a further conference on amendments Nos. 20, 39, and 40, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South

Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 8

Whereas a deplorable situation exists in 25 or more counties in South Carolina as the result of the West Indian hurricane which struck these counties in September, 1928; and

Whereas agriculture in these 25 counties is facing a crisis which can only be met by the extension immediately of large amounts of Federal and State aid to agriculture, especially in supplying seeds, fertilizers, and supplies for the making of the 1929 crop; and

Whereas after a careful investigation it has been determined that a large percentage of farmers in the storm-affected area will be unable, without Federal and State assistance, to carry on their farming operations during the year 1929; and

Whereas a bill is now in course of preparation, to be introduced at an early date in the South Carolina General Assembly, providing in some measure for State assistance; and

Whereas the large deficits in the management of the State's financial policies in past years make it impossible for the State to appropriate sufficient funds to restore agriculture in the storm-affected area; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill extending Federal aid to agriculture in the storm-affected area of the Southeast, which bill is economically sound, and which will in a large measure tend, if it becomes law, to provide a remedy for the agricultural problem in the Southeast: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), (1) That we recognize the seriousness of the crisis now confronting the agricultural population of the majority of the counties of the State of South Carolina.

(2) That we commend most heartily our Senators and Representatives in Congress for their interest in, and their work for, the passage of the bill to extend aid to agriculture in the storm-affected area of the Southeast.

(3) That the South Carolina General Assembly hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact legislation at the earliest possible date for the greatly needed relief which can most effectively come only by act of Congress.

(4) That authenticated copies of this resolution be sent at once to both branches of the National Congress and to the Representatives and Senators from South Carolina in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present, in the nature of a petition, a resolution adopted at a gathering of New England farmers in Springfield, Mass., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TARIFF RESOLUTIONS UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED

Whereas American agriculture does not suitably participate in the protective-tariff system given other industries through national legislation; and

Whereas our Nation can not reach maximum prosperity by denying so basic an industry as agriculture the opportunity to enjoy the American standard of living; and

Whereas the rates of duties on foreign-grown farm commodities seeking markets in competition with American farm products constitute so vital a factor in the so-called farm relief problem now before Congress and to the solution of which the incoming administration is irrevocably pledged: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this mass meeting of New England farmers and their organizations assembled at Springfield, Mass., January 14, 1929, hereby petitions favorable action by Congress on agricultural tariff schedules along the following fundamental principles:

(a) That in all tariff legislation agriculture be given protection equal to any other American industry—no more, no less.

(b) That rates of duty on foreign-grown farm products seeking our markets be made adequate to allow our farmers to enjoy profits which will permit the American standard of living.

(c) That various foreign farm commodities which are directly or indirectly competitive with our domestic farm crops be made to carry rates of duty based on the value of farm crops to American producers thereof and should be so adjusted that as the value increases the rate of duty will automatically increase.

(d) That in the agricultural tariff schedule flexibility be provided so that rates can be changed to meet changing economic conditions without unreasonable delay.

Mr. BLAINE presented resolutions adopted by Stevens Point Chapter of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States, Department of Wisconsin, favoring increased appropriations, fiscal year 1930, for reserve officers' active training, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COLUMBIA LAND BANK

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD the article from the Greenville (S. C.) News of January 17, 1929, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objections, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FARLEY RESIGNS FROM COLUMBIA LAND BANKS

COLUMBIA, January 16.—L. I. Guion, vice president of the Federal Land Bank of Columbia and the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia and acting as president of both institutions since January 1, to-day announced the resignation of W. Scott Farley, active vice president of these banks. Mr. Farley's resignation became effective Monday of this week, he said.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7010) to amend the organic act of Porto Rico, approved March 2, 1917, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1454) thereon.

AMENDMENTS TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COPELAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15712, the War Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 26, line 9, insert the following:

"For repair, restoration, and rehabilitation of the two block houses, the bake house, the magazine, and the French barracks, at Old Fort Niagara, N. Y., including construction of a rest room adjacent to the 'Castle' and the restoration and construction of the old French drawbridge, $45,000. In addition to this amount, the Secretary of War is authorized to expend such sums as may be contributed from private sources for such work."

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for pay of property and disbursing officers for the United States (Militia Bureau—National Guard) from $79,500 to $122,200, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15712, the War Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—NOTICE OF SUSPENSION OF RULE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 1 of Rule XVI, for the purpose of proposing to the bill, H. R. 15848, the first deficiency appropriation bill, the following amendment, namely: On page 16, after line 4, insert the following:

TREASURER OF UNITED STATES

For payment of salary of H. Theodore Tate for acting as Treasurer of the United States from June 1, 1928, to January 1, 1929, $5,044.45.

PETER H. FRANKFORT—WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

On motion of Mr. NEELY, it was—

Ordered, That the papers filed with the bill (S. 4955) for the relief of Peter H. Frankfort be withdrawn from the files of the Senate Committee on Pensions, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on January 17, 1929, the President approved and signed the following acts:

S. 1275. An act to create an additional judge for the southern district of Florida; and

S. 1976. An act for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that we may proceed with the further consideration of House bill 15848, the first deficiency appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is the prohibition amendment. It involves the question as to whether we should increase the appropriation already made. As I understand it, under appropriations previously made and now existing, in the neighborhood of $13,000,000 is available for the purpose of enforcing the eighteenth amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] would grant an additional $24,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that of the $13,000,000 appropriated less than $9,000,000 is for field work in actual enforcement. The remainder is for employees in the offices.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that to be the case.

Mr. President, there are questions involved in the enforcement of prohibition that are not before us, as I understand the pending amendment, and I am not going to discuss those questions. For a few moments I desire the attention of the Senate in the discussion of the general question involved in prohibition. I doubt the wisdom of increasing this appropriation, although I for one would not hesitate to vote for it if I thought it were necessary and would be used by the enforcing officers in a fair and honest attempt to enforce the law.

I know that men and women do not agree, first, upon the fundamental question of whether or not we should have a prohibition law, but it seems to me that question has been settled. We have the law; we have the constitutional amendment; and as I look at the matter we ought, regardless of what we may think about the wisdom of it, to make an attempt to enforce the law in good faith. Personally I believe that such an attempt would eventually result in a fair enforcement of the law and would give satisfaction to the country at large.

As the law has been enforced during the past eight years, I confess it has been more or less a mockery. I believe a fair consideration of the subject will lead to the conclusion that the law has not been fairly enforced and that a fair attempt at enforcement has not as yet been made.

Before we talk about the modification or repeal of the prohibition law—speaking as one who believes in prohibition, and who, I think, consistently has voted for the enforcement of all laws along that line—I want to say that in my judgment all of us ought to unite in the proposition that there should be a fair attempt made at the enforcement of the prohibition law. If after that shall have taken place and a sufficient length of time has elapsed we are able to determine whether or not the law should be amended or changed, then we ought not to hesitate to make whatever amendment or change experience may show shall be necessary.

I think that prohibition enforcement has fallen down more on account of partisanship than for any other one reason. The prohibition law is a difficult law to enforce, I think we must all admit. There is so much money to be made in the violation of the law that the inducement to people who want to make money out of it, and who go into the business exclusively for the purpose of making money, to attempt to control the enforcement officers, to attempt to secure the appointment of officers favorable to winking at the violation of the law so that special favors and permits may be given to a favored class is greater than in the case of any other kind of law. Partisanship, indeed, as I look at it, at least, is detrimental to the enforcement of any law, but its ill effect operates with a thousandfold greater force in the case of the enforcement of the prohibition law.

The Secretary of the Treasury has written a letter in which he states that he does not want this additional appropriation. He may be right about that. He has also stated in his letter that he wants to have made a country-wide survey of the subject. To my mind, the head of the enforcement department, after having held that office for eight years, ought now to know what a survey would bring forth; in other words, it seems to me that if after trying to enforce the prohibition law for eight years he has only reached the point where he wants to have a survey made we could fairly say that he has been a failure in the administration of that law.

Of course, Secretary Mellon was not a prohibitionist. I am not finding fault with him for that, but it is said that a law ought to be enforced by its friends. As a general proposition, I think that is correct, and yet we ought not to condemn a man in a position of authority in the enforcement of the law because he was originally opposed to the law itself, although, generally speaking, it would probably be unwise in selecting enforcement officers to select men who did not believe in the law. Whatever objection that may be, and whatever force it may have, depends, I think, a great deal upon what is done by such an official after he shall have had actual experience in the enforcement of the law. I confess that the results of eight years of enforcement under the present head of the Treasury Department have rather indicated to me that he ought not to be at the head of the enforcement bureau.

Mr. President, I admit it would be difficult to keep politics out of the enforcement of prohibition. A great many enforcement officers must be appointed, and nobody will claim that the appointing power could always make those selections without occasionally being mistaken. However, I want to read to the Senate some extracts from several articles that have appeared in Collier's Weekly, written by Mr. Chester P. Mills, who was one of the enforcing officers. He tells in those articles plainly, giving dates and names, exactly what happened to him in his attempts to enforce the prohibition law. He shows, by giving dates and places and names, how an honest enforcement of the law was interfered with, always on account of partisan politics, almost invariably because the politicians insisted that they should name the enforcing officers. On yesterday I called attention to a letter which was written a couple of years ago by a Member of this body, in which he plainly stated that he wanted to name the enforcement officers of his State because he needed their help in the campaign for reelection, in which he was then engaged. I am not charging any dishonesty to that Senator; I am not even charging bad faith. I concede that prominent politicians or candidates for important offices might be just as honest and as faithful in the selection of these men as would anybody else, but everyone knows if appointments are made on account of partisan political service politics will be the main criterion, and the appointee, however honest and conscientious he may be, will be deceived oftener than otherwise. Men who have been active in the support of their party or in support of an individual candidate for office naturally would be favored; that is human nature; that would be the prime reason for making the appointment; and the men who want to make millions out of the violation of the law would make contributions and act in support of the party or the candidate when their real purpose would be to secure appointments of this kind and to coin money by "playing favorites" in the enforcement of the law.

At the beginning of the first article which appeared in Collier's on September 17, 1927, Mr. Chester P. Mills said:

> Within a year after Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews engaged me as Federal prohibition administrator on the solemn agreement that there would be no political interference, he warned me by telephone from Washington that I was hopelessly in bad with the politicians and that something must be done about it.
> The only explicit instructions I received from my superior officer on being sworn in were to enforce the law to the limit of my ability and the resources of the department and to cooperate to the utmost in securing evidence on which the two Federal district attorneys in my territory could prosecute successfully.

Further on he says:

> Gradually, orders to exclude politics were modified. I was told to advise with the local party leaders regarding appointments to the force of 240 men working under me.

I am not reading all of the article and I am not going to read all of any of the articles—there are three of them along the same line—but I am going to read a sufficient number of extracts to show that during the entire attempt by this official to enforce the law he was interfered with everywhere by men high in official life, members of his party, demanding that they be allowed to name the appointees under him.

Further he says:

> In scores of cases involving useless and venal agents, suspected alcohol permittees, and outlaw breweries I felt the working of the political machine, whose wheels do not grind slowly although they grind exceeding fine. Through weeks and months contests with the politicians multiplied. Bickering increased until finally action taken against the worst agents I have ever encountered provoked the politicians into open enmity. They charged in the press that my methods were high handed, bombarded Andrews with demands for my removal, and when I challenged them for a bill of particulars their reply was that out of 240 men in my district—nearly one-tenth of the entire Federal dry forces—103 were Democrats. The full roster was submitted to the bosses for inspection.

Just think of that! When he wanted to appoint men or when he wanted to keep men in his service the pressure of partisan politics was so great that he was required to submit to the bosses a list of the men.

> The full roster was submitted to the bosses for inspection. There were only 12 Democrats on the force, and that dozen among the nucleus of reliable workers. This reply availed little. General Andrews ordered me to consult Charles D. Hilles, former secretary to President Taft and national committeeman of the Republican Party from New York State.
> Mr. Hilles and I had a conference lasting two and a half hours. He seemed a suave and reasonable person. He analyzed the number of agents I had to appoint and apportioned them by counties in a pencilled memorandum that I retain. I told him that while I was willing to receive recommendations, I must be the sole judge of the efficiency of my staff. He pointed out that the patronage system prevailed in every prohibition district throughout the country and that my territory would not be an exception. But he was affable enough to agree that as mine was the responsibility mine should be the final choice.
> Later I learned that it was through Mr. Hilles the clashes with local politicians were given national magnitude, so that the dismissal of knaves in the service caused rumblings that reached even to the ears of the President of the United States.
> The four worst cases that came to my knowledge caused the greatest political turmoil.

Then he goes on to tell about those cases, giving their names, where they came from, and who they were.

Further on in this same article he says:

> He urged me—

He is referring to Mr. Andrews himself. He came on from Washington to New York to have a conference with Mr. Mills about the difficulties he was in on account of these appointments—

> He urged me to make peace with the politicians by reinstating both the crooks and the bunglers. Pressure, he said, was being brought in the highest quarters. Hilles had complained to the President about me, and the prohibition national investigation service, under Major Hamblin, had been put to work to find out if my charges against the men were true.
> It amazed me to learn that Washington had a special espionage to investigate regional administrators and their aides, but I learned later that the entire service was honeycombed with spies and counterspies and that administrators who used their discretion, as defined by the United States Supreme Court, in employing or granting alcohol permits to "those persons considered trustworthy by the Government" and weeding out all others had their acts subjected to secret investigation—

And so he goes on. I am not going to read any more of the article; but I should like to call attention, if Senators or others want to read them, to the fact that the charges made by Mr. Mills, an official of the Government, are contained in several numbers of Collier's Weekly. The first article appeared in Collier's Weekly for September 17, 1927. The next one was in Collier's Weekly for October 1, 1927. The last one, which he heads "Bribery," was printed in Collier's Weekly for November 5, 1927. That article is an interesting tale of how attempts were made by rich men—men supposed to be respectable—to bribe Mr. Mills to appoint this man or that man or to wink at this or wink at that; and he says, probably very truly, that if he had been so disposed he himself could have made millions out of the business. It would be interesting, if I had time, to read all of the article, because every sentence bears on the question that we are now discussing.

As bearing on the same question, I want to read the testimony, taken before a committee of the Senate known as the Couzens committee, of Mrs. Willebrandt, an Assistant Attorney General of the United States. It seems that the prohibition officers up in Pennsylvania had succeeded in getting what they believed to be rather a cinch on some violators of the law very high up, with millions of money involved, doing a wholesale business. When it came to the trial, at the request, Mrs. Willebrandt says, of Mr. Mellon himself, an attorney from the Treasury Department was detailed to try the cases. But let us read her testimony.

The first question was asked by Mr. Manson, an attorney, as I understand, employed by this committee in making that investigation. I am not going to read all of her testimony. It is quite lengthy, and a good deal of it refers to other things not directly involved in the particular question now before the Senate.

Mr. MANSON. Do the law officers of the Prohibition Unit or of the Treasury Department ever take over the handling of prohibition cases in court?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. They assist United States attorneys sometimes.

Mr. MANSON. Do they ever actually conduct the trial of the cases?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Not to my personal knowledge.

Mr. MANSON. Do you have any knowledge of some prohibition cases tried in western Pennsylvania by a man by the name of Littleton?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Yes; but before he tried them he was made special assistant to the Attorney General.

Mr. MANSON. At whose suggestion was he made special assistant to the Attorney General?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. At the request of Secretary Mellon.

Mr. MANSON. What was involved in those cases?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Bribery, violation of the national prohibition law.

Mr. MANSON. Those cases involved bribery of Prohibition Unit employees, did they not?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. So far as I know, that was the report of them.

Mr. MANSON. Was the appointment of this man Littleton as the prosecuting officer made with your approval?

Here is the Assistant Attorney General having charge of the enforcement of prohibition. This question goes right to the point. I will repeat it:

Was the appointment of this man Littleton as the prosecuting officer made with your approval?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. It was not.

Mr. MANSON. What was the outcome of those cases?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. One case was tried. The Friedman case was tried and lost, and the rest of them, at Mr. Littleton's request, were nol-prossed. The request was made to nol-pros the cases, and when the motion to nol-pros was presented to the judge he refused to grant it.

Mr. MANSON. Upon what ground did he refuse to nol-pros the cases? Is it not a fact the judge refused to nol-pros those cases upon the ground that the case that was tried had not been properly presented?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. It was so reported to me; yes, sir.

Mr. MANSON. Did you not then try one of those cases?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. I?

Mr. MANSON. Yes.

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Not any that Mr. Littleton had anything to do with.

Mr. MANSON. Was a conviction had in some of those cases involving that same matter?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Not any that Mr. Littleton had anything to do with.

Mr. MANSON. I am not referring specifically to the cases Mr. Littleton had to do with, but I am referring to the group of cases arising in western Pennsylvania involving bribery.

Senator ERNST. If you have the title of the cases why not suggest them to Mrs. Willebrandt?

Mr. MANSON. I do not think I have them.

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Answering your question, no, I do not think so.

I had better read the question again because of this interruption, so that everybody can understand it. I will read the question and answer without the interrupting question:

I am not referring specifically to the cases Mr. Littleton had to do with, but I am referring to the group of cases arising in western Pennsylvania involving bribery.

The question before that was this:

Was a conviction had in some of those cases involving that same matter?

Answering your question, no, I do not think so.

Senator KING. Were there several groups of cases tried there in western Pennsylvania for bribery and violations of the national prohibition law about the time that Mr. Littleton was aiding in the prosecution of some of them?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. No. The only bribery cases were those that Mr. Littleton took over.

Mr. HENDERSON. There were one or two bribery cases of minor importance.

Mr. MANSON. Who tried the Guckenheimer case?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Mr. Henderson and Mr. Simonton and Mr. Moore, assistant United States attorney at Pittsburgh, and I.

Mr. MANSON. There was a conviction in that case, was there not?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANSON. Wasn't that part of this same group of cases?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. The only way in which I can say that it was a part of the same group of cases is that in Mr. Littleton's authority appears the name of "Louis Brown and others." Brown was a very wealthy member of the Guckenheimer Distillery Corporation and was one of the defendants in the group of Guckenheimer cases which the United States attorney's office regularly handled and successfully prosecuted. Mr. Henderson prosecuted those cases.

The CHAIRMAN. I am interested to know why this man Littleton was appointed since counsel has raised the question. Just why was he appointed for the specific cases?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the regular staff of the Department of Justice unable to handle the cases?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. I do not think they were; no. I do not know of any disqualification.

The CHAIRMAN. They had the time?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. They always found the time. Mr. Henderson and Mr. Moore did it in Pittsburgh.

The CHAIRMAN. So you know of no reason for having Mr. Littleton in this particular case specially appointed?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. I know of none.

Mr. MANSON. Did you not protest against the appointment of Mr. Littleton?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. I did.

Senator KING. Is Mr. Littleton one of the employees of the Prohibition Unit?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. I do not know. He is employed in the Treasury Department. Whether it is in the Prohibition Unit or some other part of it I do not know.

Mr. BRITT. May I answer that question?

Senator KING. Is he a lawyer?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Yes, sir.

Senator KING. Do you know anything about his standing as a lawyer—whether he is a lawyer of years of standing?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. He was reported to me as a very good one.

Mr. BRITT. He is not and never has been an employee of the Prohibition Unit.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he an employee of the Treasury Department?

Mr. BRITT. I understand that he is or was employed in the office of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, but of that I am not sure even. He has no connection with the Prohibition Unit.

That testimony was taken before a committee of the Senate in public. As far as I know, the accuracy of the testimony of Mrs. Willebrandt on that occasion has never been questioned; and assuming that her testimony is true, which I do, it seems to me it follows that was a case where very wealthy, influential men had been indicted by the efforts of the prohibition-enforcement officers, and when it came to trial the attorneys who knew about the cases, the attorneys who represented the Prohibition Unit, who secured the indictment, were thrust aside, and some unknown man, who was not even an official of the Prohibition Unit, was appointed as a special assistant to try these particular bribery cases, and never was appointed to try anything else; and every one of those cases failed. He was appointed over the protest of Mrs. Willebrandt, the Assistant Attorney General in charge of prohibition enforcement, and appointed at the request of Secretary Mellon.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Did the attorney who secured the indictment cooperate with the attorneys trying the case or participate in the trial, or was he, as the Senator has said, thrust aside or given other assignment? I merely want to know the fact.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say in answer to the Senator from California, I know nothing about the case except what I learn from testimony. I have no personal knowledge outside of this testimony, and I draw my conclusions from it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I listened to the reading of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Whether there was anybody else in the case or not, Mr. Littleton was given absolute charge of it, and when he first moved to nol-pros the cases that were left, which he had not finished, the judge refused to permit that to be done. Senators who are lawyers will appreciate that the very fact that the judge refused to permit the cases to be nol-prossed was almost conclusive proof that the judge, who had heard the other cases, was convinced that these people ought to be tried, and were guilty. Otherwise, he certainly would not have interfered by an objection from the bench.

Mr. President, I have offered the evidence which I have read, all of it public, all of it evidence that has been before the public for quite a long time, and never, so far as I know, contradicted, the testimony of the head of the prohibition enforcement officers, and it demonstrates, if it demonstrates anything, that where there had been an indictment of wealthy, influential people, Mr. Mellon gave advice that was followed, over Mrs. Willebrandt's protest, and had an attorney from his department put in charge. Nobody seems to know just exactly who that attorney was, except that he was not an official of the Prohibition Unit, and had not anything to do with it.

This all shows, it seems to me, that there has not been a fair attempt to enforce prohibition. It all shows that the money we have already appropriated has not been properly and honestly used to ferret out the criminals who violate this law.

I might add that, in my judgment, almost dray loads of testimony could be brought to bear out this testimony in another direction, particularly with regard to the granting of fraudulent permits. In my judgment, one of the greatest loopholes in the prohibition law, by which men have been enabled to flout the law, and to violate it to their profit of many millions of dollars, has been through the fraudulent permits which have been granted. I am not going into that now, but if any student of the subject wants to look into it, he will find a world of information easily from various sources, showing in some cases where permits have been denied, where a favored, powerful attorney, or influential politician, afterwards secured the permits, without any difficulty, and almost as a matter of form.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, from the testimony the Senator has read, and the facts he has stated to the Senate, it appears that there has not only not been an honest attempt to enforce the law but that really the violation of it has been encouraged.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. A great many men have talked to me about these permits, not under oath. Some of them I did not know very well, some of them I knew very well, and in some I had the utmost confidence. Still, I would not want to repeat what they have said, for fear they might have been mistaken. But I have reached the conclusion that one of the great loopholes is through the granting of permits to favored men.

I am not saying that the people who grant them are bribed and get any money out of it. It is a matter of politics. The politician, with his influence, can bear down on the officials of the Government, as this article of Mr. Mills shows that Mr. Hilles, the chairman of a political committee, took the matter even to the President of the United States, and the head of the enforcement bureau, Lincoln Andrews, even went to the city of New York to consult with him, and advised him that he had better let up, and let the politicians have their way. May we expect to get prohibition through that kind of enforcement?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. In other words, they are filling up the law-enforcement service with men who do not believe in enforcing the law.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. Undoubtedly in a great many cases men are recommended by politicians entirely for political reasons, without the person recommending the appointment perhaps knowing the reason why the man wants the job, that he wants it in order to make money out of violations of the law. If you will think of it for only a moment, you can see that these violations, if people were going into it, and had the power, for financial reasons, would make a millionaire out of a man the first 30 days.

I do not like to tell my own experience, but it is so apt that I am going to relate an incident which came to my personal knowledge. My colleague, Senator HOWELL, and I, when there was a vacancy in the prohibition enforcement bureau for our State, recommended a man for appointment. As far as I was concerned, I admit that my recommendation would not have had much weight. I would not have been asked, and I was not asked, to make any recommendation; but my colleague, Senator HOWELL, occupied a more advantageous position, and I joined with him in making a recommendation. In fact, the man we selected was suggested by me, and agreed upon at once by my colleague, because we both knew him to be a man who in our State was an outstanding prohibitionist, and always had been. Before we had prohibition, and had a local option law, when municipalities, under the law, were allowed to grant licenses to saloons, and when in many cases there were objections to the granting of a license and the law provided for a hearing, this man always, all over the State, appeared on behalf of the prohibitionists. He was a specialist in that line. In addition to that, he was a lawyer of more than ordinary ability, and was respected in the profession. Everybody, whether he agreed with him or not, looked up to him as an honest, able man, a good citizen in every respect.

It so happened that this man was a Democrat, but his name occurred to me, and when I suggested it to my colleague, he said, "He is the best man in the State for the job. Everybody will have absolute confidence in him. He will not be a crank. He will not go out and try to ferret out little things. He will try to get the big fellows. He will try to enforce the law honestly and fairly."

This man was a conscientious citizen, and everybody in the State knew him, at least by reputation; so we joined in recommending him. In a day or two word of the matter got out in our State, and in less than a week a representative of the bureau here in Washington called at my office in the Senate Office Building and said "Senator, there are some awful objections to that appointment you and your colleague have recommended." I said, "What is the matter with the man? Everybody knows him." He said, "Why, he is a Democrat. Did you not know that?" I said, "Yes." He said, "Did Senator HOWELL know that?" I said, "Yes; Senator HOWELL has known it for years. He lives in the same town with him. We knew he was a Democrat. We recommended him in spite of the fact that he is a Democrat. Has anybody said he would not enforce the law? Has anybody said that he would not do it conscientiously and with ability and fairly?" "Oh, no. The objection is from the leading Republicans of your State; that he is a Democrat and that he will appoint subordinates who will be Democrats. They insist on having something to say about the appointments."

I told him that, as far as I was concerned, I did not think anybody ought to have anything to say about the appointment of his subordinates, that I still stood on the recommendation, that my colleague undoubtedly would stand on it, and that I was not going to apologize or take it back. He tried his best to have me take it up with Senator HOWELL, to see if we could not recommend somebody else, and when I declined, he went away, saying, "Well, if you Senators insist on it, we will make the appointment."

The appointment was made, and within a very few days the same man came back and said, "There are a lot more protests from your State about this man. They say that he will appoint Democrats, and they want to have it understood that he will not be allowed to appoint his subordinates unless they are satisfactory to the leading Republicans, who want to pass on them."

I think he saw Senator HOWELL; Senator HOWELL can speak for himself, however, when he gets back, as to that, if he desires to do so. We both told him that within the limits of his authority we did not want anybody to interfere with this man's appointments. I told this gentleman distinctly that I did not want anything to say about it, and I did not want anybody else to have anything to say about it, that I did not care whether the men he appointed were Democrats or Republicans, and that I believed that what they ought to do was to hold this man responsible for the enforcement of the law, and within the limit of the law, let him appoint anybody he wanted to.

I remember distinctly that this representative of the Prohibition Unit in Washington said to me at that time—it being just before my campaign for reelection to the Senate came on—"They will make it hot for you out there in the campaign if you insist on this." I told him, of course, that they probably would; but that they would make it hot for me any way; that they had made it hot for me so many times that I rather enjoyed the sensation, and I still stood by my recommendation.

Mr. President, I have called attention to several instances. I could call attention to many more, but it seems to me they are outstanding. They show what has been attempted in the way of the enforcement of prohibition. No Senator and no Representative ought to be allowed to pick these subordinates. No politician and no representative of any political party ought to be allowed to do so. In fact, none of the officers ought to be appointed on account of political or partisan reasons.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I was very much interested in the Senator's recitation of the testimony which he just read. Has the Senator any evidence that there would be any improvement in the personnel of the prohibition enforcement unit?

Mr. NORRIS. When?

Mr. BLAINE. In the future.

Mr. NORRIS. How soon in the future?

Mr. BLAINE. I was inquiring whether the Senator has any evidence of any anticipation that there will be any improvement at any time?

Mr. NORRIS. I had hoped there might be. I am inclined to think that publicity with reference to these matters will help to bring about an improvement.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. May I ask the Senator whether it is a reasonable and comfortable hope such as the Scriptures speak of?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's question might make it embarrassing for me on account of recent history if I undertook to answer him directly. But I am going to cooperate with anybody who shows any signs of a desire or any inclination to enforce the law.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BLEASE. I would like to ask the Senator if he would mind giving us his opinion with reference to violations of the law such as I am about to mention. He has been speaking of certain people being exempt because of favoritism. What has he to say with reference to foreigners, ambassadors and others connected with foreign embassies, having all the liquor they want in their homes, driving up and down the street drinking it, driving around the city drunk, having the liquor brought in from Baltimore in large trucks which are guarded by United States soldiers, and then freely distributed around the city to outsiders?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have some information on that subject.

Mr. BLEASE. I have a lot of it myself.

Mr. NORRIS. I have some decided opinions on the subject, I will say to the Senator. I had not intended to discuss it, but I think one of the sad predicaments, applying only to the District of Columbia, that we get into the enforcement of the law is the very thing the Senator from South Carolina has suggested. I have never had anybody try to sell liquor to me, but I have talked to employees of the Government who have told me that employees of some of the foreign embassies make a business of selling liquor by the bottle.

Mr. BLEASE. Liquor brought here under the protection of United States soldiers.

Mr. NORRIS. Brought here under protection of their diplomatic relationship. I do not know that the heads of the embassies knew anything about it, but the employees are using this liquor and selling it illegally, and they ought not to be protected in any way. I am in favor of anything that will go to the eradication of that evil.

I remember two or three years ago when men claiming to be representatives of the Kerensky government in Russia were in possession of the Russian Embassy here. They represented a government that had been dead for two or three years. There was not any such government, but they kept up a fiction of occupying the beautiful embassy here, and the Government of the United States recognized them as Russians and they were living high upon money which as a matter of fact came from taxpayers of the United States. On one occasion the newspapers in Washington announced that a drayload of liquor—I have forgotten exactly how much, but as I remember now there were 11 barrels of whisky and a lot of other kinds of liquor—was taken in charge by the prohibition enforcement officers. The fake embassy of a dead foreign government called upon the Secretary of State of our Government and demanded protection. The Secretary of State came into the matter, and that liquor was sent back to those people because it was protected on account of being consigned to the Russian Embassy in the United States. I still have some interesting correspondence that I carried on with Secretary Hughes over that situation. Of course, such things make the enforcement of the law ridiculous. I do not believe any foreign government would for a moment, if they knew it, permit their officials to go into the bootlegging business. Those who are high up in officialdom undoubtedly do not, but that there is a whole lot of that sort of thing going on in this Capital City of ours there can be no doubt whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator a question to see if I understand his position correctly. The man to whom the Senator referred was not appointed and, as I understand it, the reason why he was not appointed was that he was too old to take the examination. He could not take the civil-service examination for that reason. I also understand that he was appointed as an attorney in the Prohibition Unit, and is to-day occupying that place.

Mr. NORRIS. To which man is the Senator referring?

Mr. SMOOT. To the man the Senator and his colleague recommended for appointment to the Prohibition Unit.

Mr. NORRIS. But the man we recommended was appointed and, until they circumscribed him by a lot of regulations and by placing a lot of men under him who were no good and refusing to put the men under him whom he wanted, he made the best record that had ever been made in our State in the enforcement of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. He was treated just exactly the same as the best men in Utah were treated, because of the fact that they could not take the civil-service examination. That is what happened with your man.

Mr. NORRIS. I know just what happened to my man, as the Senator calls him. He was appointed.

Mr. SMOOT. So was our man appointed.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know anything about the Senator's man, but I do know something about mine.

Mr. SMOOT. But he took the examination after he was appointed.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not suppose my man ever took the examination.

Mr. SMOOT. He did try to take it.

Mr. NORRIS. There was not any such thing as an examination then. The unit was not under the civil service law then.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it was not; but he could not take the examination, just the same as some serving in my own State could not take it.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps he could not. I do not know, and I do not care about that. There was not any such thing as an examination, and he never took any.

Mr. SMOOT. He was appointed just the same as many others were appointed in the service. After the law was enacted placing such appointees under the Civil Service Commission and requiring that they should take the examination, this man could not take the examination under the law, and the department, believing he was a splendid attorney, appointed him as an attorney in the department.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is talking about a last year's bird nest. It has not anything more to do with what I am saying here than "the flowers that bloom in the spring." [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. Why did the Senator refer to the man, then?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is a very wise man, and I dislike to ascribe to him a lack of knowledge or to intimate that he did not get the point I was trying to demonstrate. I was trying to show then—and I think I demonstrated it—that they were going to keep this man out because he was a Democrat. That was the point. That was the only objection made. This man was appointed according to the recommendation of my colleague and myself.

Mr. SMOOT. And they did not keep him out.

Mr. NORRIS. I never said they did keep him out. I never said anything about that. He is still in the business and is a success at it.

Mr. SMOOT. He is still an attorney in the department, and a good attorney. There is no doubt about that. The department, after he could not pass the civil-service examination, did not dispense with the man's services, like they had done in some other cases, but appointed him as an attorney in the service. He was a Democrat when he was first appointed; he was a Democrat at the time he could not pass the examination; and he was a Democrat at the time they appointed him again, and I have no objection to it at all.

Mr. GLASS. What business has the Senator from Utah to make an objection to an appointee from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever. I was simply answering what I thought was the impression the Senator from Nebraska left with the Senate in relation to this man.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator stated as a great concession that he had no objection to what the Prohibition Unit did in appointing him.

Mr. SMOOT. The question was as to his appointment. The reasons why he was taken out were not mentioned, and what the department did after he was out was never mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, and I did not tell anything about what the temperature of the weather was yesterday. It has not anything to do with this matter. I do not care what happened afterwards. I was giving an illustration; and if the Senator could not see it, I will repeat it. I was illustrating that in the appointment of prohibition enforcement officers politics was having an undue influence and effect, and I told that story to demonstrate it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does anybody imagine that the same rule does not apply now? Is anyone, whatever his age, race, or previous condition of servitude, so simple as to fancy that politics does not control largely in the selection of prohibition enforcement officers at the present time? Is it not well known that the Senator from Utah does make a concession when he has no objection to the appointment of a Democrat to this service? Is it not well known that the Senator from Utah has indorsed and recommended a large percentage of the employees in the Prohibition Service?

Mr. SMOOT. That I must admit, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly the Senator admits it. He would not deny it, because the record shows the fact.

The Senator from Nebraska has demonstrated that the controlling consideration at the time he spoke of in the selection of prohibition officers was political power; to get men in office who belonged to the administration, who would recognize the Republican Party as their first and dominating master. The same rule, perhaps in a different degree, applies to-day. The prohibition enforcement forces in large part were converted into political factors. In the last campaign they dictated the course that was pursued by the men who were engaged in the liquor business. In some instances they told them what to do, where to go, how to vote, and what influences to exert.

This subject goes far deeper than some Senators are content to recognize it as going. If anyone imagines that political influence has been eliminated and is no longer exerted or effective in the selection of these agents, he belongs in a class that is incapacitated for public service even in the United States Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield if he will ask me to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if he will yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Arkansas that since the passage of the act placing employees of the Prohibition Unit under the civil service law I have never recommended a man for appointment. They have all been examined. I have never looked into the examinations. I do not know what their politics may be.

I will say further to the Senator that I believe in the civil-service system and I think that it should be followed just as the law intended.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the Senator will extend his examination——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I myself wish to occupy the floor for a little time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think that would be appropriate.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for just one moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I send to the desk a proposed substitute for the pending amendments, so that further discussion may proceed with that in view.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia for that purpose. Does the Senator from Virginia desire to have his proposed substitute read?

Mr. GLASS. I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the substitute proposed by the Senator from Virginia, for the information of the Senate. It is not in order, however, for action at this time, as it would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. GLASS. It is proposed as a substitute for the pending amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, as requested.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 16, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

For the purposes of a thorough inquiry into the problem of prohibition under the provisions of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution and laws enacted in pursuance thereof, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be required, to be expended under authority and by direction of the President of the United States, who shall make report of the result of such investigation to the Congress, together with his recommendations with respect thereto, said sum to be available until June 30, 1930.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, just a few words in conclusion. I think I have made it plain that what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said has not anything to do with the evidence I have produced or the point I was making. It is immaterial whether the man who was appointed on the recommendation of my colleague and myself is still in the service or whether he is in the penitentiary or whether he is dead. That has not anything to do with the point. It is also immaterial how pure the Senator from Utah may be and how white the robe may be in which he is clothed so far as not making any recommendations for appointments is concerned. I have not said that he did so. I am willing to accept his word for all that he has stated. That, however, has not anything to do with the matter. Let us not get away from the question on which we are going to vote.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, what I tried to disclose a while ago was whether or not the Senator from Utah is charged with the function of supervising recommendations made by respective Senators within their own States. What has he to do with it?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, he does not have anything to do with it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Do not be so certain about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. The reason why I think he does not have anything to do with it was because the recommendation made by my colleague the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] and by myself was followed in that instance. I think that is a pretty good demonstration that the Senator from Utah did not have anything to do with the matter.

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. GEORGE rose.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Georgia desire to ask me a question?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I wish to speak very briefly on the pending amendment.

Mr. JONES. I shall not speak very long.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] needs no defense from me or from anyone else, but I have seen in some of the newspapers some question raised as to his sincerity in presenting this amendment. I wish to say that, in my judgment, there is no more earnest, sincere Member of the Senate than is the Senator from Georgia, and I myself am satisfied that there was no politics whatever in his mind or in his thought when he proposed this amendment.

There was, however, one suggestion that he made that I think was a little too broad, and the same suggestion substantially was made by my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], although not in exactly the same words; that is, that prohibition enforcement is a farce. I know it is not as effective as I would like to see it. Enforcement may be a farce in some sections of the country; it may be a farce in some States; but I am satisfied there are other States where enforcement is rather effective.

There are certain methods and procedure by which enforcement can be made very reasonably effective. In my State enforcement is not all that we would like to have it, but I think it is very reasonably effective there. We have, too, about as difficult a problem to enforce prohibition in that State as in any State in the Union. The State of Washington is on the border. Puget Sound waters connect with the waters touching another country as well as our own. Puget Sound has a coast line of practically 2,000 miles. There are inlets, bays, straits, narrow channels, islands, and all that sort of thing; so that it is extremely difficult to enforce the prohibition law in that territory; but, with the conditions such as they are, I think we have very reasonable enforcement. A number of the largest prohibition cases in the country have been prosecuted to a successful conclusion in that State.

Mr. President, I do not generally refer to personal matters, but I am going to take the liberty to speak of the method and the procedure I have followed in my State since we have had prohibition. I believe that if a similar course were followed in the various States of the country we would have generally pretty adequate enforcement. I am going to suggest for the administration, either present or incoming, a procedure to follow which, in my judgment, will very greatly aid in the enforcement of the prohibition law.

I agree with much that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has said on this subject. There should be no politics in prohibition and prohibition enforcement; and, in my judgment, it can not be charged that there is partisan politics on the question of prohibition in this country. I know that there are proportionately just as many Democrats who favor prohibition as there are Republicans throughout the country. It ought not to be a partisan issue; there should be no partisan politics about it. The eighteenth amendment is a part of the Constitution and laws have been passed for its enforcement, and, regardless of our personal views either of politics or as to the merits or demerits of prohibition, it seems to me that so long as the prohibition amendment is a part of the Constitution every good citizen should stand for its enforcement, at any rate, and should stand for adequate laws to see that it is enforced. That does not mean, in my judgment, that the man who does not favor prohibition should not express his sentiments; not at all. I have no fault to find with any man, no matter what his position may be, if he honestly does not believe in prohibition, who advocates a change and presents his reasons for it. One can do that, however, and at the same time stand behind the enforcement of law so long as it is the law of the land. I repeat, there ought to be no politics in the selection of the officers to enforce this law, and I know that in some States, at any rate, there has not been any politics in the selection of the agents to carry out the law.

As I have said, I am going to make a personal reference as to my attitude. When prohibition was adopted and there arose the matter of the appointment of marshals and United States attorneys and other officials in my State, I publicly announced that I would recommend no man for a Federal position as Federal attorney or marshal, or to any position that had to do with the enforcement of prohibition, until I had a written pledge from him that he would stand by the enforcement of the law. I have followed that practice, and I expect to continue to follow it in the future so far as I am called upon to do so. I think that accounts very largely for the earnest enforcement we have had in the State of Washington, although, as I have said, it is not as yet all that we might hope for.

In the selection of the State prohibition director the prime consideration that was insisted upon was that the man who was to be appointed to direct and carry out the enforcement of the law must himself believe in prohibition and be sincerely back of it. Such a man was selected, appointed, and placed in charge of the prohibition enforcement in the State, and he has been there from that day until this.

As to the selection of the deputies or agents under him, I told him that I would not interfere in their selection in any way, shape, or form. I told him that I would, so far as I could, hold him responsible for the administration of his office and for the enforcement of prohibition; and I said, "In the selection of the men for whom you are responsible you shall have full authority to select them, and no question of politics shall be asked or should be considered."

That policy has been followed from that day until this, and the same policy has been followed with reference to the United States district attorney. He was held responsible for the conduct of his office; he was held responsible for the enforcement of the law; and he was allowed an entirely free hand, without politics being considered one way or the other, to select the men for whose conduct he was to be held responsible.

In the attorney's office and the prohibition administrator's office in my State there has been no politics; and there has been a very reasonable enforcement of the law—an enforcement, in my judgment, as adequate as was possible with the force that they had at their command.

Instead of having had trouble with the administration from a political standpoint, we have had the backing of the administration. The greatest trouble we have had, I think I may say, has been from the intelligence unit of the Government seeking to discredit and to have removed men who are standing by the enforcement of the law. In one or two instances I was compelled to go to the President of the United States in order to protect men who were enforcing the law and standing by its enforcement from the machinations of the intelligence unit. I am glad to say that the President of the United States stood by me on that proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In what department and under what jurisdiction does the intelligence unit referred to by the Senator operate?

Mr. JONES. The Senator knows that as well as I do; it is in the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. JONES. I had no trouble with the Secretary of the Treasury. The trouble came from another source.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not seeking to discredit the Secretary of the Treasury or anybody else, I will say to the Senator; but it is interesting to know that there is any department of the Government whose intelligence unit is deliberately operating to forestall the enforcement and observance of a law of this kind.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator is right; and I say frankly—and I am speaking only from the experience in my own State; I do not know what their business has been in other States—that the principal work of the intelligence unit in the State of Washington has been to discredit the prohibition-enforcement officers. If there has been any serious interference with the enforcement of prohibition, it has been on the part of a unit that, in my judgment, should stand by the enforcement of the law instead of seeking to discredit men who are honestly and faithfully trying to enforce it.

I think it would be a wise policy for an administration to follow to see to it that the Attorney General of the United States, selected to head and direct the law-enforcement activities of the Government, should pledge himself to see to it so far as it is in his power that the law is enforced; and he should see to it that every man who is a candidate for United States district attorney, before he is appointed, in addition to his general oath, shall pledge himself specifically to see to it that the law, and especially the prohibition law, is enforced.

Why should there be any special pledge with reference to the prohibition law? This is the reason, as it appears to my mind: It is well and good, of course, to assume that every official is standing by the law and law enforcement; but there is a special fight being made on prohibition and against prohibition enforcement, and because of that specific and special fight there should also be specific action pledged by the officers of the law looking to the enforcement of the prohibition law.

So the Attorney General of the United States should see to it that United States marshals—who are also charged with the special duty of enforcing the law, and who have much to do with it—are not appointed who have not pledged themselves to stand by this law. With United States marshals and United States attorneys acting under the specific direction of an Attorney General of the United States for the enforcement of this law, we will have much more effective enforcement than we have had in the past.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. GLASS. What better pledge could be exacted from these officers than their oath of office? They swear to enforce the law. What better pledge than that could be exacted?

Mr. JONES. I tried to make plain why I take the attitude that I do. Because of the special and specific attacks made upon the prohibition law, special activity is required, in my judgment, in defense of it; and because of the various influences that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has pointed out that seek to have officials wink at the violation of the prohibition law, I believe that the Attorney General has the right to require a specific declaration, and should do it, with reference to that law. I admit that that ought not to be necessary; but I believe that it is highly essential.

Mr. GLASS. I think it would be perfectly futile, because any man who would disregard his solemn oath of office would disregard any other pledge that might be exacted from him by a politician, or a statesman in this particular case.

Mr. JONES. At any rate, I think the Attorney General of the United States should make every United States attorney and every United States marshal know and realize that he will be held especially responsible for the enforcement of this law. I think that would do more to nullify political pressure and political influence than anything else.

I want to say to the Senator that practically no efforts have been made to bring political influence to bear to influence the officials in my State, and they have not sought to influence me toward securing leniency or dismissal of prosecution or a cessation of prosecution against those who might be charged with the violation of this law. Of course, as long as certain politicians have hope of using their influence in behalf of men in whom they may be interested, they will do it; but when they know that that is hopeless, that they can accomplish nothing through such machinations, they will not seek to do it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington further yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the Senator really think that the Prohibition Unit should be transferred to the Department of Justice, where the law is supposed to be enforced? It has been the considered and avowed judgment of every Secretary of the Treasury in recent years, after a thorough review of the question, that this unit should be transferred from the Treasury Department, which ought to have nothing on earth to do with it. There is nothing associated with it that is pertinent to the proper functions of the Treasury Department. It ought to be transferred to the Department of Justice; and, notwithstanding every Secretary of the Treasury for the last 12 years has so recommended, it has not been done, simply because the Anti-Saloon League objects to it.

Senators get up here and criticize the present Secretary of the Treasury for the nonenforcement of this law. I want to say, from my own observation and experience, that the Secretary of the Treasury has nothing in the world to do with the failure of the enforcement of the law, nor has he anything whatsoever to do with the enforcement of the law. It does not come to his personal knowledge and review and supervision, except in the very rarest case on earth; and it is not fair to that official to charge him with the failure of prohibition when he practically has nothing to do with it. It ought not to be in his department. It ought to be in the Department of Justice, where laws are supposed to be vigorously enforced.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator has not heard me criticizing the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GLASS. Not the Senator from Washington; no.

Mr. JONES. I have a very high regard for the opinion of the Senator from Virginia. The Senator from Virginia speaks from personal knowledge and experience with reference to that situation. He was an honored and able Secretary of the Treasury for some time, so that he speaks from knowledge that I do not have. I will say frankly, however, that I am rather inclined—this is not by virtue of the Anti-Saloon League or any other organization—to oppose the transfer of the Prohibition Unit to the Department of Justice.

I will not say that I have an absolutely fixed opinion with reference to that matter, because, as I said, I have not the knowledge that the Senator from Virginia has; but I have been told, at any rate, that there are certain activities, especially with reference to the use of liquor for medicinal purposes and for various purposes, that are in charge of the Prohibition Unit and that are peculiarly matters connected with the Treasury; but if it should be shown that that is not the case, I might change my opinion. As I say, I have not a fixed opinion, although I am very strongly of the belief now that it would be unwise to transfer this activity to the Department of Justice.

I can see that if the Prohibition Unit as an organization, formed as it is now, should be transferred bodily to the Department of Justice, it might not have very serious consequences; but my impression at the present time is that it should be kept where it is, and that if any change is made it should be this: The Prohibition Unit has attorneys under practically every administrator. They are absolutely necessary and essential. If these attorneys were made ex-officio assistant United States attorneys, that, in my judgment, would serve very largely the purpose that is desired.

I know that in my State we have one of the ablest attorneys in the State as the attorney of the Prohibition Unit; a man who is sincerely and earnestly in favor of enforcement; a man who could act as an assistant United States attorney with very great efficiency; and a man who possibly more than any other man is engaged in the successful prosecution of many of the big cases in our State. That is my impression now. As I say, my opinion is not absolutely fixed; but I am satisfied that nothing that can be said on this floor now could lead me to a change. I think, however, that the matter should be gone into very carefully.

That calls to mind one phase of the question that I wanted to talk about a little, and that is the frequent changes that are made.

It has been suggested that we have not had adequate enforcement; and, taking it generally, I think we have not. I think one of the great reasons for that is the continued changes in the prohibition-enforcement system. The present system has been in operation now, I think, a little over a year, and I think it is probably getting down to a reasonably fair basis—a basis where it is working reasonably well, and the longer it is maintained the more efficient it will become. Before that, however, we had change after change in the head of the Prohibition Unit, and each man who was made the head of it seemed to want to change the system or change the principles that should govern him in his activities. That necessarily interfered with the efficient enforcement of the law, and I think it has had much to do with rendering it largely inefficient.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not a fact that under the present system the prosecution of those indicted for violating the prohibition act is entirely under the control of the Department of Justice?

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. And is there not very largely a duplication of work? The prohibition attorney has to be present, as well as the assistant attorney prosecuting the case. I will say that I agree with the Senator that the unit ought to be transferred. It ought not to be destroyed in the Treasury Department and then a new unit created in the Department of Justice; but I see no reason why the entire unit should not be by law transferred to the Department of Justice, and the whole matter put under the control of the Attorney General. It would prevent a duplication of work; it would decrease the enormous cost that we now have of enforcing this law; it would bring about a better enforcement of the law; and, to my mind, it ought to be done.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think it would work much reduction in the force. I know that in my State, if prohibition enforcement directly were turned over to the Department of Justice, there would have to be additional assistant United States attorneys.

Mr. McKELLAR. That might very well be; but I want to have the law enforced, as I know the Senator does. We want to have it enforced in the very best and most effective way possible. In order to get the very best results, it seems to me, the Prohibition Unit ought to be in one department and that department ought to be held strictly responsible for it. As the Senator from Virginia has well said, the Secretary of the Treasury can not give his individual time to the enforcement of this law, perhaps, but it could be better enforced if it were under the Department of Justice.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I say just one thing in reply to the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Tennessee? The Senator from Virginia takes the position that the Secretary of the Treasury does not know what is going on about this, does not have anything to do with it. Before the House committee his enforcement officers asked for ten times as much money as they are now getting. The only reason in the world why the pending amendment will be defeated, or can be defeated, is because the Secretary of the Treasury is using all the influence possible in this body to keep it from being adopted. Enough Members on the other side of the Chamber told me that they would vote for my amendment to insure its adoption until the Secretary of the Treasury came out with a statement urging that they not vote for it.

Mr. President, in the last two paragraphs of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury he states distinctly that he will not say that this money is not needed; but he has enough interest in this thing to try to defeat it, and I am afraid he may defeat it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator yield to me to refer to that? I am not here defending or criticizing the Secretary of the Treasury, but since the Senator from Georgia has brought the matter up, I want to say that I believe we will get an infinitely more effective enforcement of the act if we take it out of the hands of the Treasury Department and put it into the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the last four Secretaries of the Treasury, after a careful review of the whole problem, recommended that this very thing be done, and I think those officials know better than we whether it should or should not be done.

Now, just for a moment let me call the Senate's attention to the functions with which the Secretary of the Treasury is charged, and then ask if in plain, common sense it may be hoped that the Secretary of the Treasury can have much to do with the enforcement of the prohibition law. Of course, the Secretary of the Treasury takes note of a proposition to appropriate the tremendous sum of $25,000,000 for any purpose under the Government, but that is vastly different from following up in detail the enforcement of a law like this.

The Secretary of the Treasury, aside from being charged with the general financial policy of the Government, has under his jurisdiction all the banking institutions of the United States, the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the office of the United States Treasurer. He has charge of the enforcement of the national bank exemption law. He has under his charge the Bureau of Customs; the Bureau of Internal Revenue, with all of its ramifications; the Bureau of the Mint; the office of Register of the Treasury; the Federal farm loan system of the country; the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and the Bureau of the Public Health Service, which the Secretary of the Treasury has long ago recommended to Congress be taken from under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department. What has the Public Health Service to do with the functions of the Treasury Department? The Secretary of the Treasury has under his jurisdiction the Hygienic Laboratory; the Coast Guard, which is properly under the Treasury because it has to do with smuggling and customs collections; the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Government; the custom houses; the General Supply Committee; the Bureau of the Budget, which has now taken complete charge of the Government of the United States, not content with performing its function of estimating for appropriations, but actually interfering in the policies of this Government, against which I am going later to protest as vigorously as I can.

With all those functions, how can it be expected that the Secretary of the Treasury can be accurately and properly advised of the enforcement of a law like this? The enforcement of this law ought to go to the Department of Justice. That is where it belongs, and that is where it would have gone long ago except for the fact that the Anti-Saloon League, which has become nothing but a political adjunct, opposed it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say that I do not recall any member of the Anti-Saloon League ever having spoken to me in regard to the matter. My opinion, which I say is not absolutely fixed, but which I am inclined to, has been formed from my own observation and experience. The Senator from Virginia is more competent to speak, I will say, and his judgment is far better than mine on matters of this kind.

Mr. GLASS. Certainly the Senator knows that the Anti-Saloon League has openly avowed its opposition to the transfer repeatedly, every time it has been proposed by a Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES. That may be true, although I will say that if I saw any statement of the kind in the papers it did not impress itself on my mind particularly.

Mr. GLASS. As good a prohibitionist as the Senator from Washington should at least keep as well advised about those things as I.

Mr. JONES. The Senator has had an experience as Secretary of the Treasury that gives him a knowledge which a man could not get in any other way.

I will say this, that I do not see such serious objection if the Prohibition Unit, as a unit, is taken over and made a part of the Department of Justice, and placed under an Assistant Attorney General. It would go a long way with me if it were taken over there and put under Mrs. Willebrandt, who I think has made a most excellent Assistant Attorney General, and who I believe could be depended upon to enforce this law.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator mean by that suggestion to have me renounce my considered judgment in the matter?

Mr. JONES. No; I am not seeking to influence the Senator from Virginia. I am just expressing what might influence me. It might not have any influence with him.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment. At any rate, I would want to see an Assistant Attorney General who is a believer in the law and a believer in the principles of the law, and I take it that the Attorney General would place such an Assistant Attorney General in full charge of the enforcement of the law. Now I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. I would like to ask the Senator if, before he gave his certificate of good character to the estimable madam, he had observed that the Washington Post of to-day announced as follows:

> A House committee, appointed to investigate Federal prisons, is writing a report which will severely criticize Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, Assistant Attorney General, for putting an undercover agent of the Department of Justice in the Atlanta prison to "spy" on Warden John W. Snook. Members of the committee assert she overstepped the law.

Mr. JONES. I would have to be pretty clearly convinced of her overstepping the law, even though it may be submitted in a report of some other body than this. I have had considerable experience with Mrs. Willebrandt while she has been in office as assistant to the Attorney General with reference to the enforcement, especially of prohibition, and I have a very great deal of confidence in her and in her administration of the law, and in her ability and honesty and integrity.

Mr. President, I did not intend to take so much time on those matters, because they have not so much to do with the pending proposition; but in connection with enforcement, and a suggestion made yesterday as to an additional force, I ask to have printed in the RECORD Senate bill 1904, which I introduced in the Senate at the last session entitled "A bill to provide for the appointment of additional district judges to be known as associate district judges, and for other purposes." I ask that that may be printed in the RECORD.

I want to say that in brief the bill provides for the appointment of additional district judges to be known as associate district judges; it fixes their salaries at $6,000 a year and gives them original jurisdiction over violations of the prohibition law, the narcotic law, and certain misdemeanors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[S. 1904, 70th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill (S. 1904) to provide for the appointment of additional district judges to be known as associate district judges, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That for any judicial district in which the volume of Federal judicial business is, in the opinion of the President, sufficient to warrant the appointment of additional district judges the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not in excess of two district judges, in addition to those now authorized by law. Such additional judges shall be known as "associate district judges." Each associate district judge shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum payable in monthly installments, and shall reside in the district for which he is appointed.

SEC. 2. The associate district judge or judges appointed under the authority of this act for any judicial district shall hear and determine, to the exclusion of the other district judges in such judicial district, the following cases and proceedings, and no others: (1) All criminal cases and proceedings arising under the national prohibition act, as amended, or any other law relating to the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, or under the narcotic drug laws; (2) all cases and proceedings for the prosecution of misdemeanors as defined in section 335 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, as amended; and (3) all civil cases and proceedings where the amount in controversy does not exceed, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $10,000, of which the district courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by law, original, on removal or otherwise.

SEC. 3. If the hearing of any case or proceeding is begun before any associate district judge which should have been begun before another district judge, or if the hearing of any case or proceeding is begun before any other district judge which should have been begun before an associate district judge, such hearing shall be discontinued, but the case or proceeding shall be transferred for hearing and determination before the proper judge, who shall thereupon hear and determine such case or proceeding, in the same manner as if the hearing had been duly begun before him in the first instance; except that all testimony taken and all proceedings had before such transfer shall stand as taken or had in the case or proceeding with like effect as if the hearing had been originally begun before the proper judge.

SEC. 4. The appointment of any associate district judge under the provisions of this act shall not affect cases and proceedings pending at the time of such appointment, and all such cases and proceedings shall be continued and disposed of in the same manner and with the same effect as if such appointment had not been made.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, when this matter came up in the committee, I voted to adopt the amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000,000. I did so because I thought that we ought to have some more money for enforcement. That opinion was not based upon any special information I had secured from the department or from any of the officials of the department.

The committee directed the chairman to ask for a report from the department and recommendation with reference to this amendment. That report has been sent to the committee and has been placed in the RECORD. As I understand it—and I get this understanding from the press, and it is a very natural thing, I think—there was a conference over the matter by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Lowman, and the Prohibition Commissioner, Mr. Doran.

As I understand it—and this is substantially what the Senator from Virginia suggested a while ago—the matter of the enforcement of prohibition is left entirely to Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Lowman. It is absolutely impossible, as the Senator from Virginia has said, for the Secretary of the Treasury to give very much if any personal investigation to the matters in all the various branches of his department. So while there has been much criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury, I do not join in that criticism, and I do not join in it because of the general knowledge I have of the activities of the department, as referred to by the Senator from Virginia. I have been advised and have understood that the Secretary has left to his Assistant Secretary practically the entire control of the enforcement of prohibition.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may have covered the matter about which I am about to inquire, because I have not been in the Chamber for the last half hour, but in connection with what he has just said I want to ask him what he thinks of the facts brought out by the testimony of Mrs. Willebrandt, in which she stated that the Secretary himself interfered in the prosecution of certain violators of the prohibition law in western Pennsylvania.

Mr. JONES. I think while the Senator was out I referred to possible political influence in these matters. I can see how political influence may have been brought directly to bear upon the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to some particular matter like that, and I would have no excuse whatever to make for his yielding to any such influence. If he did it he should be condemned for it, especially if there was any general yielding along those lines. I could not stand for anything of that sort.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I would like to proceed, but I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask the Senator about a matter which seems to me to be of some consequence in connection with the enforcement of the prohibition law. We have all decried the custom of having law-enforcement agents and officers appointed purely for political reasons.

Mr. JONES. I would condemn that most vigorously.

Mr. BARKLEY. I admit, of course, as we all must, I suppose, that under any administration there is always a certain amount of political pressure for the rewarding of political friends. We enacted a law putting the Prohibition Enforcement Unit appointees under civil service in the hope that we would get away from that objection. Examinations were held, and the common knowledge or common rumor, at least, is that a very large percentage of the men who had been previously appointed failed to make the required grade to pass the civil-service examination. If that is the fact, then it indicates either that the examination was unusually severe or that the men who had been appointed were unusually incompetent. I have also heard that in spite of the fact that many of the previous appointees had failed in the examination, politics was still having its hand in the matter by bringing pressure to have some maneuver by which those who failed could have their papers regraded or take another examination in order that they might be put on the eligible list. If that is true, that would also be an indication that the matter is not so seriously considered by the Civil Service Commission as it ought to be. Has the Senator any information as to whether those rumors are correct, and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. JONES. I can not speak generally with reference to those rumors. I will say, however, that while I am generally in favor of the civil service, I doubted very much the wisdom of applying it to the prohibition agents. I had probably more in mind the condition in my own State than elsewhere. I felt that it would not conserve the best interests of prohibition in my State, under the conditions that we have there, to have these agents put under the civil service. But I hoped that it would tend, taking the country as a whole, to permanency in administration and to efficiency of administration of the law.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I give the Senator the information asked for by the Senator from Kentucky? I can give him that information.

Mr. JONES. Before the Senator does that let me say that this was a new proposition that we put up to the Civil Service Commission. There were, I suppose, thousands of applicants who took the examination. The examination papers had to be passed upon. That is bound to take considerable time. Furthermore, I have no doubt that the commission, in determining the process which should be followed in measuring the various applicants, made many mistakes, because they had no experience along those lines.

I have in my desk now the papers of a man who is vouched for in my State not only by the prohibition officials over him but by the temperance organizations, as being one of the most efficient and best enforcement officers in the service. He was in the prohibition enforcement service for quite a long while, but upon this examination he was rejected. I propose to take it up with the Civil Service Commission. I feel satisfied from information I have that the commission was imposed upon by the testimony which was gotten by its special agent going out into the field to investigate the character and efficiency and ability of this man. I am satisfied they were imposed upon. I am going to try to show it. But I do not necessarily blame the commission and, as we have this matter under the commission, I think we should give it at least a fair trial and not determine the results on just a few years' experience.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator about that, and I agree with him also that while it is true that every police officer and every law enforcement officer anywhere ought to be in favor of the enforcement of the law for the enforcement of which he was selected, still I think it is peculiarly important that men who are chosen to enforce the prohibition law ought to be in sympathy with it.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not deny that now and then a man, under some circumstances, who may have been at one time against the law might be converted into a very whole-hearted supporter and enforcer of it; but as a rule I think it is safer to entrust the enforcement of this particular law in the hands of its friends.

Mr. JONES. That is the very basis on which I am going to argue for civil service. It seems to me they have taken men who are opposed to prohibition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know whether any questions were propounded by the commission in this connection touching the attitude of the men toward the law itself?

Mr. JONES. I have been assured that that is done.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is conceivable that a very highly educated man might make a grade of 100 per cent on a technical intellectual examination. I have no doubt that Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler could pass a civil-service examination prescribed for the appointment of prohibition enforcement officers, but we all know that the good doctor is not in favor of the law and probably discourages its enforcement as much as anybody in the United States. The Civil Service Commission ought in some way to disclose whether the applicant believes the law ought to be enforced.

Mr. JONES. My recollection is now that the letter of rejection in the case to which I have referred shows that it is based upon inquiries of citizens of Seattle, for instance, and I am convinced that they have taken the preponderance of testimony of those who are against prohibition and who have pronounced themselves against this man, and therefore he was rejected. Of course, I appreciate that members of the commission can not examine personally all the papers, and that they have to take the report of some inspector; but there are on file with the Civil Service Commission statements made by practically every prominent prohibitionist and every prominent prohibition organization speaking in the very highest terms of this man and of their confidence in his faithful administration of the enforcement of the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it the policy of the commission to send a posse out into the settlement or community where the man works or lives to investigate his record?

Mr. JONES. No. I understand they send an inspector who gets or is supposed to get information from citizens who know the man, in addition to the written examination, and he submits a report with reference to him.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does that apply to the man already in the service as well as the new applicants?

Mr. JONES. It applies to all those who had not gotten in under civil service. They have not passed on all the original applicants to the Civil Service Commission yet. They have had so many they have not been able to do it. It takes much time, as we all understand.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to answer some of the questions the Senator from Kentucky asks. First of all, I would say that 75 per cent of all the old prohibition agents failed to stand successfully the civil-service examination. The effort to which the Senator alludes, nevertheless, to cover all the old prohibition agents into the service has passed out of the stage of rumor and is now evidenced by a bill actually pending in this body, introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], to keep the old prohibition agents in the service.

If the Senator will permit me further, so poor was the average grade of those who were prohibition agents that now I am informed the Civil Service Commission, taking a lesson from the past, takes the precaution of having all applicants for positions in the field force of the prohibition service fingerprinted before they are subjected to a competitive examination.

So far as the examinations to which those who were prohibition agents were subjected being of a scholastic nature, they were of a most highly practical nature. Applicants were asked, for instance—and if I am not mistaken, that was the principal feature of the examination—what they would do in such and such a state of different circumstances that might arise in the discharge of their duty. These men failed because they had been appointed as a result of the very much greater abuses of the old spoils system of patronage, appointed at the suggestion of churches, of the Anti-Saloon League, of Wayne B. Wheeler, of Senators or Members of the House of Representatives, and of politicians of high and low degree. Now, of course, they are all to be brought under the civil service law.

If the Senator will permit me just to make one more observation, I think it will be a great mistake, notwithstanding the judgment that the Senator from Kentucky seems to have formed on the subject, to ask the applicants how they feel about the prohibition law. The very object of the merit system of appointment is to exclude political influence, political views, political opinion, political pressure in every form, from the operation of the civil service law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator mean by that to suggest that he think's a man's attitude toward the enforcement of the prohibition law ought not to have any weight in determining whether he is a suitable appointee for its enforcement?

Mr. BRUCE. I think there would be more danger of giving too much weight to it. Some Federal judges having charge of the administration of this law are men who in their hearts are opposed to it and do not believe in it, and yet their judicial conduct has been absolutely impeccable. I can not conceive of any man honorable in a general sense, charged with an official duty, violating it, and he would not do it unless he is some base, worthless fellow.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator would not, then, if he had the power, recommend the appointment of a man as prohibition agent to go out over the field and search out violations and make arrests and secure evidence if he knew that that man in his heart was opposed to the enforcement of the law?

Mr. BRUCE. If we had a good worthy man with a strong sense of duty, I do not know that I would care particularly about what might be his personal convictions with relation to prohibition or any other political question.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator would not assume that attitude with reference to the enforcement of any other law. The Senator would not recommend for appointment as sheriff or police officer one who was not in sympathy with enforcing the law against burglary or theft?

Mr. BRUCE. Now the Senator, of course, is getting into the province of deep-dyed criminality. He is getting entirely out of the province of political influence.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not able to know just how far one has to get before he is deep-dyed.

Mr. BRUCE. I can conceive of a man not believing that the prohibition law is a good law and yet, being a dutiful man, he would be faithful in helping to enforce it. I can not conceive of a man in sympathy with burglary or murder or rape doing his duty in the administration of the criminal law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not possible to conceive of a man who may technically believe in the enforcement of the law but frequently, as experience has already shown in various parts of the country, go about with his fingers crossed and then take the oath of office with his fingers crossed?

Mr. BRUCE. If I was in charge of the enforcement of the prohibition law and knew that some man was of violent extremes with reference to prohibition—that is to say, a man who was fanatical in relation to prohibition—of course, I do not think I would choose just that kind of a man to appoint. But those are extreme, exaggerated cases.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, does the Senator mean he would not appoint a man who entertains his own views?

Mr. BRUCE. I would hesitate. I think I could go on the bench to-morrow—and I hope the Senator thinks so, too—and with perfect fidelity administer the prohibition law.

Mr. GLASS. I think the Senator could. But would the Senator then insist that a man entertaining his views could not properly enforce the law?

Mr. BRUCE. All I am saying is that I do not think it is necessary for the Civil Service Commission to have a regulation requiring an inquisition into how an applicant for a competitive examination feels about prohibition before he is allowed to stand the examination. That is all I am saying; but I would have no objection to it.

Mr. GLASS. What I rose to ask the Senator, who seems to be entirely familiar with the questionnaire, is whether there is among the questions anything that would elicit information as to the marksmanship of prohibition agents? I ask the question because in Staunton day before yesterday a prohibition agent shot at the tires of an escaping automobile and killed an occupant of the car.

Mr. BRUCE. I might remind the Senator that since that time another constituent of his has been shot in the neck by a prohibition agent at Newport News. The press brought us information of that fact this morning. I do not know, but it looks to me as if it might be very well to school these prohibition agents in gunfire, because not one of them ever does shoot anybody through the neck or any other portion of his body that he does not set up the claim that he shot at the automobile tire and not at the unhappy victim.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. I may say, if the Senator from Washington will allow me, that I am a firm believer in an honest civil service, which I do not think we have, but it puzzles me to understand how the Civil Service Board can exactly or approximately determine the efficiency of a prohibition agent. One of the outstanding requirements and essential elements in the enforcement of the prohibition law is courage; and how on earth a board sitting here in Washington can determine whether or not a man has the essential courage to hunt down and arrest bootleggers is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator for a moment, I desire to say that he knows that policemen throughout the country are selected as the result of competitive examinations, and I know of no calling in which courage is of more supreme importance than in the calling of a policeman.

Mr. GLASS. The board which selects the policemen is a community board, entirely familiar with the applicants, I imagine, and that board can vastly better determine the reputation for courage or the demonstration of courage than can a board here in Washington.

Mr. BRUCE. Courage is something that we never can tell much about until it is actually tested. It is not until a man has been exposed to danger that we can say in the old Virginia phrase, with which the Senator from Virginia is so familiar, that he has "pluck to the backbone."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have a very high regard for the Senator from Maryland, but he and I differ very radically with reference to the merits of prohibition.

Mr. BRUCE. I will say that I also entertain the highest regard for the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I thank the Senator, but I have always felt and I have had the impression that while the Senator from Maryland does not believe in prohibition he does believe, inasmuch as we have it, in its proper enforcement. So I thought that he had misunderstood one of the questions of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] in that he seemed not to be in favor of determining whether a man who did not believe in prohibition also was against enforcement. I want to say that, while I prefer to have men as enforcement officers who believe honestly in the principle of prohibition, there are many men in this country who would make competent prohibition agents who may not believe in prohibition but who do believe in the enforcement of the prohibition law so long as it is the law, and many of them could be depended upon, probably just as well as could those who believe in prohibition, to enforce the law honestly and faithfully if selected as prohibition enforcement officers.

Mr. President, I wish to take only a minute or two in discussing the amendment. Most of the discussion has really been outside of the amendment. As I have stated, the committee reported the amendment, and I voted for its report to the Senate, but the committee directed that a report on it should be secured from the Secretary of the Treasury. I noted in the press that Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Lowman and Commissioner Doran were together in conference over this matter. Whatever question there may be with reference to the sincerity or earnestness of the Secretary of the Treasury as to prohibition, I have never heard the sincerity and devotion to prohibition of Assistant Secretary Lowman and Commissioner Doran questioned. So, without going into the other phase of it, I think we have a right to conclude that this letter and the suggestions made in it as to the condition that confronts us have the approval of two ardent prohibition officials—Assistant Secretary Lowman and Commissioner Doran. In brief, they suggest in this letter that they can not advantageously spend this money under present conditions; the Secretary of the Treasury sent the letter here, and I judge he concurs in their views.

It is suggested that a survey should be made to determine the need of more money, and how it may best be used. I am willing to take the judgment expressed by these officials in the letter. I think this element of good, at any rate, has come out of the report of this amendment to the Senate and out of the discussion, that it will hurry up the department to make the survey, ascertain what further steps may properly be taken in the enforcement of the prohibition law, how much more money is necessary, and how much can be used advantageously. Those in brief are the suggestions in the letter. I am going to take them at their face value, especially because of the known views of the Prohibition Commissioner and of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was called out when the discussion was proceeding with regard to the civil-service method of appointment of prohibition officers. I wish to ask the Senator if he thinks it is possible under the present system to administer the prohibition law in a nonpartisan manner? Let me take, for example, my county. When it is desired to appoint a prohibition agent for that county a civil-service examination is held and three men are certified, two of whom, perhaps, are Democrats and one a Republican. What is done then? The list is sent to the chairman of the Republican committee of the State or the county, as the case may be, and he is asked which one of the three is the Republican; and after hearing from him the Republican is appointed. Is not that the rule in connection with these, as well as other appointments?

Mr. JONES. I never had any list of those who have passed the examination for prohibition appointments certified to me.

Mr. OVERMAN. Where three men are certified as the result of an examination, the list is referred to the chairman of the committee, as I have said, and he always selects a Republican.

Mr. JONES. That is so with reference to postmasters, I know, but I say to the Senator I have never had any certification in connection with prohibition appointments made to me.

Mr. OVERMAN. The list would not be certified to the Senator, but when it becomes necessary to fill a vacancy or to add to the number of agents, the Civil Service Commission is called upon to certify three names. That is the rule, as I understand.

Mr. JONES. Certify them to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. To the department; but before the department makes the appointment it confers with the chairman of the Republican committee, which informs the department which one of the three to appoint.

Mr. JONES. I do not think the department would confer with the chairman of the Republican committee where there are Republican Senators and Republican Representatives.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then, can the Senator tell me why every prohibition agent in my State is a Republican?

Mr. JONES. I can not. I have discussed the question pretty fully, and I have said that I do not believe there should be politics in connection with this matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know the Senator does not, but I should like to know why the Prohibition Bureau can not be administered in a nonpartisan manner? As it is now, I repeat, the chairman of the Republican county or State committee is called upon to pass upon appointments of prohibition agents, and they appoint a Republican every time, although there may be two Democrats and only one Republican on the list.

Mr. JONES. I think it should not be done.

Mr. OVERMAN. But do they not do it, and is it not human nature to do it? At any rate, Republicans always seem to be appointed.

Mr. JONES. As I have said to the Senator, I receive some certifications in connection with the appointment of postmasters, and so on, but I never yet had any certification in connection with the appointment of a prohibition agent made to me for my selection of one of three.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think they ever do that; I do not think they ever ask a Senator or a Representative in Congress to pass upon the question, but they refer the list to the chairman of the Republican State or county committee. I am not complaining of it particularly and probably I might do the same thing.

Mr. JONES. The Senator may have in mind a case where there are no Republican Senators or Representatives. Let me cite this illustration; it may help to clear up the situation: There is a district in my State that is represented by a Democrat in the House of Representatives. The appointment of postmasters in that district is always referred to me. The three names are certified to me, and I am asked to recommend one.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why should such a course be followed in the appointment of prohibition agents? They want to build up a machine in this country, and so the practice to which I have referred is followed all the time.

Mr. JONES. I have not, as I have said, any certifications made to me with reference to prohibition appointments.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator ought to look into that question, because the appointments ought to be made in a nonpartisan way.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that, from some very slight experience of my own, I consider the appointment of prohibition officers as a liability rather than a benefit from a political standpoint.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not feel that to be the case in my State.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think other appointments might also be considered as liabilities.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to conclude. I am always glad to yield as much as possible, but I have taken far more time than I expected. I have called attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury conferred with Assistant Secretary Lowman, who has direct charge of prohibition enforcement, and also with Commissioner Doran, who is at the head of the Prohibition Unit, and they evidently agreed upon the suggestions contained in this letter. We should not appropriate more money than can be used economically and efficiently. I think in view of this letter that we are fully justified in the conclusion that at least they would not know how to use $25,000,000 now, and that it probably could not be expended economically.

I started to say that I think one good thing has come out of reporting this amendment and the consideration of the amount involved in it, and that is that it will certainly spur the department to make the survey which they say in this letter ought to be made. I hope to see a program presented next winter under which they can use an increased amount of money in order to bring about a more effective enforcement of the prohibition law. For that reason I am not going to vote for the amendment providing for a $25,000,000 additional appropriation, and for that reason I have submitted the amendment which I have. Now, I wish to discuss that amendment for just a moment.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator speaks of a survey upon the part of the department, as I understand, so as to provide for the expenditure of the additional appropriation in the future. Does the Senator consider his amendment would cover that? It does not in any way indicate any portion of it to be used for a departmental survey.

Mr. JONES. Not for that, but it is suggested in this letter that a small amount additional for enforcement could probably be economically used now; and so I put in a million dollars, to be used specifically for enforcement purposes. Then it is suggested in this letter that what they term "educational work" should be carried on and that some money possibly should be appropriated for that purpose, and so I put in $250,000 for that. I called on Commissioner Doran to submit a statement as to what would be done under that appropriation, and I am going to read his reply. It is brief and was prepared, of course, by the commissioner himself. He says:

> In connection with the proposed educational campaign relative to questions concerning the enforcement of the prohibition laws, the following is a brief outline of the proposed undertakings in connection with the dissemination of information and increased activities:
> The use of a selected force to cooperate with officials of cities, counties, and States in stimulating their activities in order that a greater number of violations may be prosecuted in local courts in States having adequate laws relating to the illegal use of intoxicating liquors.

I think that is quite an important activity. I know that in my State I have encouraged the prohibition officials to bring about cooperation with the county officials and the city officials as fully as possible; and while they have not the cooperation of all the sheriffs in the State they have, I think, the cooperation of the majority of the sheriffs, and they have been holding annual meetings to confer with reference to these matters. The same thing is true with reference to city officials; so that they are gradually working out a general cooperation of State, county, and city officials with the national or Federal prohibition force.

> This force also to instruct various organizations interested in law enforcement as to how they can serve and operate in connection with local and Federal authorities.
> The release of information to newspapers and periodicals, and the use of radio and billboards and posters in informing the public as to enforcement conditions and other essential facts for the purpose of interesting the general public in obedience to and enforcement of the laws.
> Prohibition agents, to a limited extent, now operate in conjunction with local authorities, but the field force should be increased in order that all requests from local authorities for Federal agents to assist them in prohibition enforcement may be met.

Some Senators expressed themselves privately to me yesterday to the effect that this was a rather ridiculous proposition, and that we ought not to start on what might be termed propaganda, and that it is apt to lead into a wide field; and yet we are already doing this. I see, in every section of the country where I go, large billboards with reference to what? Setting out the advantages of enlisting in the Army or enlisting in the Navy. That is propaganda, and yet nobody raises any question about it. That has been going on for many years. I have also seen publications with reference to the activities of various departments or bureaus of the Government, in effect doing the same thing. My recollection is that I have seen publications relating to forestry, especially; and that sort of thing is extremely valuable. It gives information that the people ought to have, and might be supposed to have. I think the Bureau of Education has sent out various publications and documents of different kinds, calling attention to the benefits of this procedure and that practice, and so on. There never has been any question raised about that; and it seems to me that some action and activity along these lines may be very valuable.

The other part of the amendment—I referred to it a moment ago—calls for an additional million dollars to add specifically to the enforcement force. That is pursuant to the suggestion contained in the Secretary's letter.

Mr. President, I have taken far more time than I expected to take.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. Does the Secretary suggest the appropriation of a million dollars in the letter?

Mr. JONES. No; he did not specify any amount. My recollection of the language is that he said that some additional money could be used economically and advantageously.

Mr. GEORGE. It was the Senator's conclusion that about a million dollars was needed?

Mr. JONES. Well, I will say that that is a guess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rise simply for the purpose of making a correction.

Yesterday morning I telephoned down to the department and asked about how many cases of arrests under the prohibition act were pending, unsettled. They said, "We do not know the exact number, but there are at least nine or ten thousand cases." This morning I received a report from Mr. Doran stating that there are between twenty and twenty-one thousand cases pending in the courts.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, in committee I voted to present this amendment to the deficiency bill involving an increased appropriation of $25,000,000. I did it because when criticism is made to the effect that the law is not enforced, the response invariably is that it is enforced as effectively as the meager appropriations of Congress will permit. In short, with respect to this law, as with respect to other laws, it is sought to produce the popular impression that Congress in some way or somehow is persistently neglecting its duty with respect to enforcement.

So far as my observation goes, the Appropriations Committee of this body has never failed to report to the fullest extent appropriations recommended by the department for the enforcement of prohibition; and I am certain that I have never failed to vote to the fullest extent for appropriations recommended. Therefore I voted for this appropriation, but with the understanding that the chairman of the committee was to seek information from the Treasury Department as to its expediency.

The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he tells us that this appropriation can not be judiciously expended, that it can not be expended at all without the risk of great extravagance, puts a different aspect upon the case. While I may get my consent to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], it is my expectation to offer as a substitute for the whole the amendment that I sent to the Secretary's desk a while ago, which provides for the appropriation of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be required, to enable the incoming President of the United States to put into effect his own proposition to appoint a competent commission to review this whole problem of prohibition under the eighteenth amendment and under the laws enacted in pursuance thereof, and to report the result of such inquiry to the Congress of the United States with his recommendation with respect thereto.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. I did not hear the beginning of the Senator's statement. Did I understand him to say that the substitute he has offered, which was read at the desk, provides for the appropriation in this bill of $250,000 to be available for the use of the incoming President, or so much of that sum as may be necessary?

Mr. GLASS. I imagine that it would be used by the incoming President. I do not conceive that the present occupant of the White House, in the limited time he has to serve, would enter upon an inquiry of this sort.

Mr. EDGE. I agree entirely with the Senator. I am simply asking as a matter of procedure. The appropriation, then, would not expire before what time—June 30, 1930? How long would the appropriation be available? That is the information I was seeking.

Mr. GLASS. My purpose is to make it available as long as it can be used.

Mr. EDGE. Then I am in entire agreement with the Senator. I am simply asking for information.

Mr. GLASS. I want to put upon the incoming President of the United States the responsibility for the enforcement of this law as it exists or the responsibility of recommending suitable changes in the law if changes are required; and then there will be upon the Congress of the United States responsibility for accepting or rejecting the President's recommendations. I have every reason to suppose that the incoming President of the United States not only is willing to assume that responsibility but is anxious to do it, because he has suggested that that be done.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if I may again interrupt the Senator, I also am in hearty agreement with his suggestion in that regard and that recommendations shall result, based upon the facts and causes so discovered.

Mr. GLASS. And in all sincerity I thoroughly believe that the incoming President will have the courage to make those recommendations, based upon a scientific ascertainment.

Mr. EDGE. Is it not a happy moment when the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from New Jersey can proceed to a solution of this problem through the same channel?

Mr. GLASS. I think it ought to be done. I think the President ought to be charged with responsibility and held accountable for the enforcement of this law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does the Senator's amendment define the extent or direction of the investigation or does it leave to the Executive full authority to make any investigation that he desires without limitation?

Mr. GLASS. It puts no limitation whatsoever upon the President. It charges him with the full responsibility of making a thorough inquiry into this problem and making his recommendations to the Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It would seem that $250,000 would be a rather large fund for the support of an investigation.

Mr. GLASS. The amendment says "or so much thereof as may be required."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the history of this amendment in this Congress is a rather unusual one.

A short time ago an amendment was proposed, and agreed upon, as I understand, without any opposing vote, to appropriate $300,000,000 for the enforcement of prohibition. The Members on both sides of the Chamber accepted that amendment. It then went to conference. The conferees reduced it to $25,000,000. Strange to say, many of the same gentlemen who voted for the $300,000,000 are now opposed to the appropriation of $25,000,000. What potent influence has been wielded by the Secretary of the Treasury one can only surmise.

Strange also to say, men who have been the champions of the enforcement of the prohibition law, and who voted only a short time ago either for $300,000,000 or for $25,000,000, have yielded their convictions merely because the Secretary of the Treasury says he might spend the money extravagantly, or, as the Senator from Washington quotes him, that they do not know how to spend it.

There is another strange incident connected with this procedure, and that is this:

A few months ago there was an election in this country, and a decisive victory was won. All people know that millions of citizens of the United States voted for the incoming President at least partially because they expected him and his administration to utilize every opportunity within their power to enforce this law; and yet, strange and unusual as it may seem, leaders of the prohibition forces on the other side of the Chamber are not willing to accept the $25,000,000 appropriation, and they reduce it to the infinitesimal sum, in comparison with that for which they have previously voted, of $1,000,000 for enforcement and $250,000 to convert bootleggers by distributing propaganda over the country.

Just exactly what methods will be used in this distribution we do not know. Probably the literature will be placed in an airship, and as that airship soars in the skies over the various sections of America, the literature prepared by this Secretary of the Treasury upon the evils of strong drink will be wafted on the breezes, to be received by the listening ears of the American public.

If that is not sufficient, we are to have a survey. Imagine, if you please, a man having been sheriff of a county for eight years and running for reelection to office upon the statement that if he succeeds in winning again the position of sheriff of his county he will make a survey to ascertain whether or not the laws are being broken in his county; and, if so, how he will enforce them. Yet Senators who voted for a $300,000,000 appropriation, Senators who are backing, we assume, the President elect in the statement he has made that he will enforce the laws of this country, recede from their position and say now, "We will vote $250,000 for a survey."

What will they survey? Will they go into the States where the State laws have been repealed in order to ascertain whether or not they are in effect? Will they go into the State where the laws are enforced in order to ascertain whether or not they are enforced? What is this survey for? Why is it needed? Why, when men have been in charge of the enforcement of a section of the Constitution of this country for eight years, is it necessary for them to tell the public in America that they can not say whether they need any more money or not? They do not know whether they can enforce the law or not. They do not know how many officers are needed. They can not say where they would be used. They do not know whether or not the law is being broken. They know nothing except that they know nothing and desire to make a survey in order to confirm the fact that they know nothing. That is the position with reference to the survey.

There have been several propositions advanced. It was certainly a great surprise to many people to learn that on the side of the Chamber occupied by those who in large majority contributed to the election of the incoming President, there are those who are not willing to arm him when he goes into office and to give to him the money that is needed in order that the laws of this country may be enforced.

There have been several arguments advanced to which I desire to direct just a little attention. In the first place, the highly esteemed and respected Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] presented the argument, as I understood him, that political appointments are made and the law is enforced in a partisan manner, I assume leaving the inference that for that reason it was not proper at this time to vote an additional appropriation.

I agree with most of the statements made by the Senator from Nebraska, but if we are to wait to make sufficient appropriations until partisan politics cease to play an important part in the employment of officers in the enforcement of law, then I feel the increase would never be made. What reason have we to suspect that at any time in the future appointments will not be made from partisan considerations? Why can we anticipate that at any time within the next fiscal year the enforcement of law will not be in the hands chiefly of the dominant party that is governing in this Republic? The history of the Government shows that it is practically impossible, unfortunate as it is, to escape from the conclusion that the enforcement of this law and the appointment of the officers to enforce it will be influenced by partisan politics.

Another argument has been advanced by the Senator from Utah; that is, that we should first increase the courts. What difference does it make where we begin to enforce a law written in the Constitution of this country? What right have we to demand that the enforcement be improved in any certain or particular manner?

There are certain States of this Union that have courts that can try the cases. There is not reason to suspect that more than two or three or four States of this Union have congested court dockets so that the courts can not dispose of the business before them. Therefore the proposition that presents itself to this body, with a new administration coming into power pledged to the enforcement of the law, is: Will you give them the funds that are needed in order that the American people may hold them responsible if they fail to avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by this Congress? Or will we, perchance, because of the edict of a single officer of this Government, forego our right to our own conclusion and permit the Secretary of the Treasury to determine for us what is a sufficient amount in order to enforce the laws of this country?

My friends, I desire to call attention to the situation in one State with reference to the law-enforcement officers of the State and of the Government. In the great State of New York, which has no prohibition laws upon its statute books, we find that there are 32,089 officers charged with the duty of enforcing the laws of the State, and 516 charged with the duty of enforcing the laws of the Government of the United States. That includes district judges, marshals, deputy marshals, district attorneys, and all officers charged with the enforcement of the law. Yet that State has no prohibition law. There are, for the millions of people who live in that great Commonwealth of this country, 281 field agents. Imagine a situation where 281 field agents have to cope with the enforcement of a law in a State where the majority of the people have expressed themselves by ballot against the law, and where the officials of the State have destroyed the statute which was upon the books to aid the Government in the enforcement of the law. What could we hope, what could we expect, with reference to the enforcement of the law in States with millions and millions of population, and with 281 officers charged with the duty of detecting crime and punishing it?

This is the situation; the amount of twelve or thirteen million dollars appropriated heretofore for the enforcement of the prohibition laws of this country is a disgrace and a shame to the Government. What can we do when we divide up $12,000,000 among 48 States to enforce a law which many in the Senate say is being daily and repeatedly violated all over those States? A quarter of a million dollars to enforce a law of that kind in a State with eight or ten million population is not even a drop in the bucket.

The conclusion which must be reached is that there are some who oppose the prohibition law as honestly as others favor it, and there are some who favor it with all their hearts, but there should be no line of demarcation between these two classes when it comes to a question of the enforcement of any statute.

I was criticized yesterday for making the statement that the Constitution of the United States imposes upon Senators the responsibility of voting for adequate appropriations to enforce the prohibition law. If not, why not? That law is written into the Constitution of this country. There is one honest and legitimate way to get it out; that is by the constitutional method. There can be no repeal of that amendment by acquiescence on the part of the people of this country without attacking the very sovereignty of the people and the fundamental principles of liberty and freedom under which we live. Yet there are some who will not vote for adequate appropriations in States, although the Constitution charges the States with the joint responsibility of the enforcement of the law. There are others who are willing to continue to appropriate a measly $12,000,000 to enforce a law all over the States of this Union.

The charge has been made here in the last day or two that the prohibition law is grossly violated. Many years ago the present great Chief Justice of this country said that the enforcement of the criminal laws of America was a disgrace to the civilized world. The lawlessness in this country is not limited to the violation of the prohibition law. One city in this country, with a comparatively small population, has committed in it more murders in one year than are committed in the whole domain of England. Yet do we hear any hue and cry that we should repeal the law against murder? The same startling proportion exists as to the law against stealing, and as to the law against burglary, and as to the law against other crimes.

We have now come to the situation, practically, where we must vote upon whether or not we favor a proper appropriation to enforce the law. Will we arm the officers of the Government so that they can enforce the law? Or will we leave their arms paralyzed, perchance, because some of them may prefer to be paralyzed?

We should not permit the dictum of one officer to govern our conclusions in connection with this vote. In the name of law, in the name of decency, in the name of order, forgetting the differences which exist as to the need of this law, I appeal to the Senate not to permit the conclusion of one man to override the simple justice which this amendment is intended to bring about in America.

I appeal to Senators, as they believe in the safety of our Government, and in the safety of the home, not to permit this law to be flagrantly violated in the future, with the charge being thrust in our faces that it is due to the fact that Congress would not make proper appropriations.

We make appropriations for bridges, we make appropriations for roads, we make appropriations for dams, we make appropriations for rivers. The improvements thus brought about add to the comfort and convenience of the citizens of this country. But the law which protects us when we are awake and when we are asleep is based upon the fundamental right to human liberty, and that law is challenged in this country, and the answer can be made both from this body and from the throats of millions of citizens in this country, "Will you vote to enforce the law, or do you believe it proper to continue an appropriation which you know, which every citizen of this country knows, is a mere measly pittance in comparison with that which is needed to make this country safe for the law-abiding citizens of this Republic?"

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had concurred in the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 28) relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the followings bills:

H. R. 1320. An act for the relief of James W. Pringle; and

H. R. 4920. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to award a Nicaraguan campaign badge to Capt. James P. Williams in recognition of his services to the United States in the Nicaraguan campaign of 1912 and 1913.

The message further announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9961) to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MORIN, Mr. JAMES, and Mr. MCSWAIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Senate, under the order previously agreed to, will proceed to the consideration of executive business. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. NYE. Is a motion in order at this time that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business in open session?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Such a motion will be in order when the Senate is in executive session behind closed doors.

Mr. NYE. Not until then?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not until then.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 2 hours and 30 minutes spent in executive session the Senate, in closed session (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, January 19, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, January 18, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose love has consummation in sacrifice and service, quicken us by Thy Holy Spirit that we may conquer the sense of frailty of this passing world. Oh, come out of Thy infinite depths and find a sure dwelling place in our hearts; define Thyself in terms of life—human life, humble life, that ever stoops to conquer. To-day is another providence. Every success launches us upon a new pursuit, and every failure bids us get up and begin again. We must attain; though we fall, we shall not be utterly cast down, for our Heavenly Father upon earth is our strength and the rock of our salvation. May we align ourselves with Thy holy purpose; thus shall we attain the measure of the stature of our manhood. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COUNT OF THE ELECTORAL VOTES

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table concurrent resolution S. Con. Res. 28 and pass the same.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Concurrent resolution

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 13th day of February, 1929, at 1 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed by the President of the Senate on the part of the Senate and two by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed as they are opened by the President of the Senate all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

RECESS ON CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk another resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 294

Resolved, That on Wednesday, February 13, 1929, it shall be in order to move that the House take a recess, subject to the call of the Speaker, for the purpose of counting the electoral vote, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 7 of Rule XXIV.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, just a word as to the resolution. Members will recall that the Calendar Wednesday rule provides against taking a recess. This simply allows a recess on Wednesday, February 13, for the purpose of counting the electoral vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

EQUALIZATION OF RANK IN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following bills, which I shall call up. I first ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9961) to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MORIN, JAMES, and MCSWAIN.

CAPT. JAMES P. WILLIAMS

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4920) authorizing the Secretary of War to award a Nicaraguan campaign badge to Capt. James P. Williams in recognition of his services to the United States in the Nicaraguan campaign of 1912 and 1913, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell us just what this means?

Mr. MORIN. It appears now that this man is in the Army, but at the time the service was rendered he was in the marines.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question for information. I notice the gentleman employs the word "campaign" with reference to the Nicaraguan operations of our troops. Quite generally it has been understood, I think, that "campaign" refers to military activities in time of war.

Mr. SNELL. And election campaign.

Mr. MORIN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] drew the bill and presented it. I do not know what he had in his mind. He can probably give the information.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I do not care who drew the bill. I did not know we were at war with Nicaragua and I do not like to have that term there.

Mr. MORIN. I think it was some time previous to the latest activities in Nicaragua that this man served there.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. If that is so, we may have had some war down there at some other time, but not now; and I have no further objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not catch the explanation of the amendment made by the gentleman.

Mr. MORIN. The man who is affected is now in the Army and when Mr. GARRETT of Texas drew the bill he thought this service was rendered while he was in the Army; but he had previously been in the marines, which is under the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

JAMES W. PRINGLE

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1320) for the relief of James W. Pringle, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am assuming, with respect to all these bills which the gentleman calls up, that there has been a conference with the minority Members.

Mr. MORIN. I so stated in making my request.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to state that in the beginning, but there were some Members about me who did not hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MORIN. I have consulted with all the Members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

MORRIS FOX CHERRY

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12538) for the benefit of Morris Fox Cherry, with a Senate amendment, agree to the Senate amendment, and pass the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are these bills that have passed the House or bills that were objected to on the Private Calendar?

Mr. MORIN. The bills have passed the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And are coming back with an amendment?

Mr. MORIN. They amended the bill by putting in the language that is usually put in these bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16301, independent offices appropriation bill. And pending that, I would like to see if we can not agree upon time for closing general debate.

Mr. CULLEN. I understood the chairman of the committee to suggest three hours, when debate shall close. That would be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. WASON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be continued not to exceed three hours, to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16301, and pending that asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. WASON was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of a bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, ordinarily I am glad to yield for questions and interruptions, but I am particularly desirous to-day of proceeding without interruption, so that I may be able to make a continuous statement. I will ask Members therefore not to ask me to yield in the presentation of this matter.

THE BILL TO PREVENT FRAUD IN CONNECTION WITH BUSINESS BEFORE THE UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE

Many Members of the House and Senate have asked me for information about H. R. 5527, introduced by me, a bill to prevent fraud, deception, or improper practice in connection with business before the United States Patent Office. The inquiries result from unfair, misleading, and very selfish propaganda recently spread through the country by one A. J. Wedderburn, formerly registered to practice before the Patent Office. The propaganda, copies of which have come to my hands, is sent out by Wedderburn, whether as coming from the Patent News, of which he is the publisher, or the League of American Inventors, of which he is the whole works. Many good people have been misled and caused concern by this propaganda, and I am glad to give the facts to the House for the benefit of all persons interested.

My concern in this legislation arose from an appealing case in my district, where a poor old man, who thought he had a worthy invention, was victimized by another alleged altruistic organization to help inventors. He paid them fifteen hundred dollars without even getting a patent. I found then that the Patent Office could not reach the real principals in the fraud, because those who solicited the business and who received the money were not registered to practice before the Patent Office and did not so practice. The bill H. R. 5527 was then drawn by the Patent Office and the Department of Justice.

The Patent Office maintains a register of attorneys entitled to practice before the office. There are about 9,000 or 10,000 persons who are thus registered. To obtain registration an attorney must show he is possessed of good moral character and has had sufficient experience in patent matters as to be able to render intelligent aid to inventors in obtaining patents for their inventions. This register of attorneys is established and maintained by authority of section 487 of the Revised Statutes. Under this section the Commissioner of Patents may, after suitable investigation and an opportunity for a hearing, disbar from further practice before the office any attorney, person, or agent shown to be guilty of gross misconduct, but such order of disbarment, as well as a refusal to register anyone as attorney, is subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

This authority would seem to be sufficient to prevent corrupt practices and fraud by attorneys or agents, and for years such statutory authority was fairly sufficient, but there has of recent years been discovered by unregistered attorneys ways to get around the law and escape the control by the Patent Office of their activities. One of the most successful ways is to file the applications and prosecute them in the names of the inventors, the agent's name not appearing in the record.

The business between an inventor and his agent being almost always conducted by correspondence, the inventor is unaware that the attorney is not registered and can not appear before the officials of the office, as registered attorneys do, to present the inventors' claims and interests. The office letters are, in such cases, sent to the inventor's address, who has been instructed to forward them to the attorney. In this manner a good deal of fraud has been practiced on inventors who are ignorant of all these matters and no way has been provided for reaching and controlling these fraudulent activities. A number of so-called patent attorneys in various parts of the country (including the Patent News), who are not registered to practice before the Patent Office, follow this plan of filing applications and amending them as if the inventor was doing the work himself and had no attorney or agent.

The records of the Patent Office show, in the letters from disappointed inventors, that much crooked work has been carried on by unregistered attorneys.

The bill H. R. 5527 is intended to correct this evil and would prevent all unregistered attorneys, including the Patent News, from filing and prosecuting applications in the Patent Office in the manner they have in the past.

The Patent News is published, as I have said, by A. J. Wedderburn. He formerly was a registered attorney before the Patent Office. A number of years ago under Commissioner Newton a serious controversy arose between him and the Patent Office authorities. It was charged by Commissioner Newton that Wedderburn was using unfair and misleading advertising methods in his advertising in the Patent News, and he demanded that such advertising methods be discontinued. Rather than conform to the requirements of the Patent Office, and rather than face the possibility of being disbarred, Mr. Wedderburn withdrew his registration and hence is not now entitled to practice in the Patent Office. His attitude toward my bill, H. R. 5527, is, therefore, a very personal one. In his propaganda to the country, he professes great concern about the legal profession which he himself does not at all adorn and toward other professions and people for whom he has no real concern. His purpose is only to get them to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for himself. The same misleading and irresponsible methods that characterize his propaganda to entice inventors to his net through the Patent News characterize his propaganda to mislead the lawyers, the engineers, and the general public with reference to the provisions and the purposes of my bill, H. R. 5527.

H. R. 5527 is for the sole purpose of preventing either an unregistered individual or a corporation from holding himself or itself out as a patent attorney. This is the only purpose of the bill.

The bill will not affect any person no matter what his vocation—draftsman, engineer, publisher, or otherwise—from pursuing his vocation unless he represents himself to be a patent attorney.

Much misrepresentation has taken place concerning this bill, but from the fact that the bill is supported by the American Bar Association and the different patent law associations of the country, including the American Patent Law Association, having members in more than 50 different American cities, and opposition has been entered by one only—or at most two—registered patent attorneys, it can be readily seen that all such misrepresentations must be without merit. The opposition is centered in less than half a dozen people, and all of them except one are unregistered. One of these has been disbarred and another was formerly but is not now registered. The one who is not now registered is the proprietor of the Patent News, a so-called newspaper styling itself as the "official organ of the League of American Inventors," and making the claim that it is "the only newspaper on earth published exclusively in the interest of the inventor." The proprietor of this paper, the Patent News, has organized the League of American Inventors and is endeavoring to scare corporations, engineers, draftsmen, and publishers into the belief that the bill will adversely affect them when, as a matter of fact, it has no possible effect upon their activities and does not even concern them.

One statement made by the Patent News is that "a handful of patent attorneys" are attempting to pass H. R. 5527, which "will create a monopoly of the patent business for these interested attorneys." In this connection it is interesting to note that there are at least 9,000 registered patent attorneys, and if the bill had this purpose they would certainly oppose the bill instead of being found among its supporters, but that, as above stated, only one—or possibly two—registered attorneys have entered opposition to the bill.

The Patent News also is spreading broadcast the statement that—no corporation, including a publisher's corporation, can indirectly solicit professional employment for any person admitted to practice as a patent attorney. Advertising in our view is an indirect soliciting of such services.

This is a manifest absurdity, since there is absolutely nothing in the bill that could possibly be twisted into such a meaning, and if the bill had this purpose not a single member of the Committee on Patents would have supported the bill, and yet the Committee on Patents, after thorough investigation and many long hearings, has supported the bill and it has now passed the House the second time.

The Patent News is also sending broadcast the statement that H. R. 5527—would deprive about 125,000 engineers, 60,000 draftsmen, 100,000 model makers and machinists, and many other professionals of their vested rights to do work in assisting inventors to perfect their inventions unless said professionals are employed through a registered patent attorney.

No one familiar with patent procedure could read the bill and not see that this is all absolutely false. Indeed, it seems incomprehensible that anyone should seriously charge that both the Patent Committees of the House and Senate, and, in fact, that the House itself—which has twice passed this bill—could possibly attempt to pass a law having such a dire effect. The bill will not prevent any engineer from pursuing his profession; it will not prevent any draftsman from making a drawing to be filed by an inventor as part of his patent application; it will not prevent any model maker or machinist from making a model or machine for any inventor. The most it will do will be to prevent an engineer, a draftsman, or model maker—or anyone else—from representing himself to be a patent attorney unless he is registered. The engineer can aid the inventor in every engineering way; the draftsman can make as many drawings for patent applications as the inventors are willing to pay for; and the machinist and model maker can make as many machines and models as they can get orders for; but if they want to enter the other or additional field of patent attorney, they must first be registered. If anyone not registered holds himself out as a patent attorney, the commissioner is not given any authority by this bill to do anything to such an offender, but the matter of taking steps to stop or punish him will lie with the United States district attorney of the district in which the offender lives. The bill then gives the Commissioner of Patents no more authority or power than he now has and has had for years.

Misrepresentations as to this bill above noted are being sent to engineers, lawyers, draftsmen, model makers, and even publishers, with the request that if they wish this "monopolistic legislation" to be defeated they should "get as much pressure to bear upon Senators as possible to defeat the measure," and ask their Senators to "fight the bill." Their correspondents are also advised that—

You should also get every lawyer, inventor, engineer, draftsman, model maker, and machinist you know to do likewise; and also get your friends who are opposed to monopoly and the concentration and abuse of power among a small group of Washington, D. C., men and a monopolization of all business connected with patents by a few registered patent attorneys to write their Senators in protest against the passage of H. R. 5527.

It is the sending forth of statements of this kind that is bringing requests to Congress to defeat this urgently needed legislation. The matter is said to be so acute "protests should be sent by telegraph, special delivery, air, or regular mail."

Let me repeat: If this bill did anything more than to prevent anyone from holding himself out as a patent attorney until he has shown himself of good moral character and possessed of a proper knowledge of patent matters, if it prevented an engineer from aiding an inventor in perfecting his invention, if it in any way prevented a draftsman from making drawings for the inventor, if it prevented a machinist from making machines for the inventor, if it prevented a model maker from making models for the inventor, if it prevented a publisher from publishing patent advertisements, I would never have introduced the bill. And let me add that these same statements were investigated by the Committee on Patents and all of them were found to be wanting in truth. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I desire to touch upon two of the items in the pending appropriation bill. The same points that I raise to-day I have been raising almost every year when the independent offices appropriation bill was before the committee for consideration. And even at the risk of becoming tiresome by repetition I want again to call the attention of the House in the hope that the necessary remedial legislation will be passed.

Gentlemen, we have an item in the bill of over $499,000,000 for the Veterans' Bureau. A large part of that item naturally is for the allotment of adjusted compensation. To that there is no objection. But it seems to me that an examination of the enormous cost brought about by the gigantic machinery that is being built up for the administration of the veterans' law causes one to pause and consider whether or not we are spending too much on overhead and not giving enough to the veterans.

There are entirely too many examinations and reexaminations in the Federal bureau. Once a veteran is rated he should not be disturbed for two years unless the man asks for a reexamination for a higher rating. Another thing veterans should not be compelled to undergo operations when their own personal physician advises against the operation.

This bill carries an allowance of $499,000,000 for the Veterans' Bureau. I can only repeat what I have said for many years in considering this bill that I believe a great deal of the overhead—clerical, supervisory, medical, and institutional employees could well be disposed of and better compensation allowed to the disabled veterans.

To my mind, it is simply disgraceful to give a veteran afflicted with tuberculosis an allowance of $50 a month. He is not able to work and he can not live on $50 a month. This seems to be the period of refunding some of the excessive burdens of the war. More than $500,000,000 have been refunded and only a few days ago we appropriated an additional $75,000,000 to the poor, feeble, needy war profiteer who paid taxes on his excess profits out of the war. We can not refund the health to these tubercular veterans, but we can at least keep faith with them and increase their compensation. Fifty dollars a month is not enough for a tubercular veteran.

There are entirely too many examinations and reexaminations in the Veterans' Bureau. Once a veteran is rated he should not be disturbed for a year or two unless he himself asks for reexamination for a higher rating. Another thing, veterans should not be compelled to undergo operations when their own personal doctors advise against same. Veterans who are to be operated on should have the selection of the hospital and the surgeon to perform the operation. In large cities arrangements can easily be made with medical institutions where great surgeons operate daily and give the benefit of their skillful surgical services to these boys. If not, ample and generous provisions—and it may cost a great deal—should be made to compensate boys who undergo operations that are botched up. There are many such cases and only within a few days I have talked to several Members who have had similar cases in their own districts. If less money were spent for examinations, reexaminations, ratings and reratings, boards of review and other kinds of reviews, and more given to the veterans, it would be in keeping with the wishes of the American people.

I still insist and recommend that tubercular veterans who are hospitalized should have the selection of either going to the Government hospital or receiving the per diem allowance which it costs the Government to maintain him in such hospital and to permit him to go where he desires. The argument of the Government that tubercular veterans need hospital care and can not provide for themselves is suggested when we ask for the same per diem allowance for the veterans as it costs to maintain him in the Government hospital. When the Government turns him loose after one year of treatment still afflicted with tuberculosis at $50 a month, then nothing more is said by the Veterans' Bureau officials of the need of continued hospital care and the impossibility of permitting a veteran to remain at home.

I do not see how these war profiteers, who received millions of dollars of refund from the Government from taxes paid on excess war profits, knowing that there are tubercular veterans receiving $50 a month from the great Government of the United States, can possibly sleep nights. Their consciences must certainly be tortured by the very thought of such a condition.

If the cost of keeping a veteran in a hospital is examined, you will find that it averages $4.50 a day to $7.50 a day, depending upon the hospital; and if we allowed the boy $4.50 a day, I believe it would be a great deal better for the veteran himself, because the state of mind is a most important factor in tubercular cases. What do we do? We take him to a hospital and keep him there for a year. We allow him proper compensation for a limited period, and then we turn him loose at $50 a month. If the argument of the Veterans' Bureau is sound that a tubercular patient should not be permitted to be at large, how can they justify their own system of turning the patient loose at $50 a month?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. Is not what the gentleman calls "turning loose" the dismissal of a case whose progress has been arrested?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the progress of the case has not been arrested. It is arrested merely for the purpose of the law, and I submit to the gentleman and to our colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRWIN], who is himself an eminent physician, that an arrested tubercular case requires a great deal of care. The patient can not engage in laborious work; he can not risk exposure in inclement weather. He requires a great deal of care to hold his own in an arrested case, and $50 a month, with the existing conditions, with the care that an arrested tubercular case requires, is not sufficient. I know literally hundreds of boys who are simply going down physically by reason of the fact that with $50 a month they are not able to give themselves the care that is required, to provide for themselves the proper and necessary nutritious food that they need. It is not always possible for a boy to go out and find part-time light work. It is not possible always for a boy to find work only when the weather is good, so that he may remain at home and be protected in damp weather; so that it is cruel to turn the boy loose—and I repeat the term—at $50 a month.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. LUCE. In fairness to the Members of the House who have the particular responsibility for advising the House in this matter, I think the RECORD should show that they have given very serious attention to the considerations on both sides, and that the weight of the testimony has so far seemed to those gentlemen to be in favor of keeping patients close to medical care. While the gentleman presents a strong argument, still stronger arguments have been presented in favor of the present system to the committee concerned.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What the gentleman stated is the condition. There is no issue of fact as to that. Still I believe that $50 a month for an arrested case is not sufficient. I know that all pioneer work requires years of patient toil. Why, 10 years ago I sought to advise the House on Liberty motors, and it took 10 years of constant repetition to get an amendment stopping the further use of Liberty motors on new planes adopted by the House a few days ago. So I shall continue my insistence in bringing to the attention of the House the condition of the Veterans' Bureau, which I believe needs correction.

Now, I want to take up another item in the appropriation bill before the House.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will.

Mr. PERKINS. Did the gentleman state what relation the overhead bears to the total expenditure for the World War veterans?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think you would have to eliminate from that calculation the amount appropriated for adjusted compensation.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that, too. I think we ought to know something about the relationship that the overhead bears to the total amount.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think I gave it last year. I can get the figures.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman discussed in an enlightened manner the question of the refund in excess-profits tax collected. Does my friend from New York think a man who has been charged an excessive amount of tax may not be entitled to get his money back?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman should reframe his question. The gentleman means taxes in excess of what the law required?

Mr. DENISON. If a man believes that he paid more taxes than he ought under the law for his excess-profits tax, does the gentleman think he ought to make a claim?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman think it ought to be paid back?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; but I also believe that the poor disabled veteran, who contributed excessively of his health should likewise receive an equal, substantial refund. We can not give him back his health, but we can give him substantial compensation and partially contribute to his comfort.

Mr. DENISON. We all agree, but that does not necessarily mean the gentleman believes we ought to pay back taxes improperly collected?

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. I am not quite sure, but perhaps $5,000,000,000 has been put at the command of those who suffered from the war. We have been seriously engaged in an effort to give them the best treatment possible. Of course, the exact figures could be computed, but something like $5,000,000,000 has been already paid. Is that parsimonious?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. You can not figure it in total dollars and cents. War is expensive. The gentleman knows that we are now spending more than 68 per cent, in fact 70 per cent, of the entire appropriations of this Government for past wars, for present defense, and preparations for future wars. It is the enormous cost of war. Whatever it costs to properly care for disabled veterans, we must meet it. We owe to these boys just as much in refunding, even a greater duty, as was so ably pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois, than we owe to the taxpayer who paid excess war taxes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. ARENTZ. The other day I made a request for a bed for a tubercular patient, an ex-service man, and I found that there is not a tubercular bed in a tubercular hospital in the entire West that is vacant. I do not know whether that is true in the East or not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What of the boy in the meantime?

Mr. ARENTZ. He is in the same predicament as the boy who is let out of a hospital at $50 a month, wandering around.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why should not that boy be allowed a per diem sufficient to take care of himself?

Mr. ARENTZ. He should be.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now I want to take up another item in the bill providing for the Shipping Board and the United States Lines. I voted for every appropriation that would in any way encourage and help to build up an American merchant marine. I want the chairman to correct me if I am in error when I say that there is provided in this bill, in addition to the $11,000,000 plus directly appropriated this year, a reappropriation of the amount on hand on July 1, 1929, not to exceed $50,000,000, including such sums as the Shipping Board may have received for the fiscal year 1927 for the reconditioning of vessels—a very generous appropriation, indeed.

Congress appropriates generously for the establishment of a merchant marine. In the building up of a merchant marine, the training of the crew is as important as the ships and their operation. Whatever may be said about prosperity to-day—and personally I believe that a great deal of the prosperity is simply a stock-ticker prosperity—the fact remains that we have considerable unemployment. In New York City the unemployment situation is very acute. I am reliably informed, and I have figures to prove it, that in the stewards' department of the United States Lines aliens are preferred. Not one but hundreds and hundreds of clean-cut American boys have applied for jobs on the United States Lines and are turned down, while in the stewards' department on every ship of the United States Lines are aliens. When the steamship Leviathan sailed out of New York on December 5, 1928, the aliens in the steward's department outnumbered the citizens 2 to 1. There were 204 citizens and 452 aliens. The steamship George Washington, sailing from New York December 12, 1928, in the steward's department had 62 citizens and 257 aliens, and there are American citizens walking the streets of New York to-day looking for jobs. The steamship America, which sailed on December 27, 1928, in the steward's department had 67 citizens and 166 aliens. The steamship Republic sailed on the last trip with 50 citizens and 153 aliens in her steward's department. While a great many of these men have their first papers, I have absolute proof that they are not bona fide declarants. They took out first papers only for the purpose of being employed by the United States Lines on the advice of officials of the United States Lines, who assisted them in getting these papers. Ninety per cent of these men have their families on the other side and are recruited in Europe and England by officials of the United States Lines.

I have not yet determined just what is the reason that the men in charge of the United States Lines prefer aliens. I charge that it is because there is some queer business going on in the steward's department of those ships and the steward's department on shore that the employment of the majority of aliens fits into the whole rotten scheme.

The United States Lines can not say that they can not obtain the right kind of employees, for the reason that the merchant lines are running out of New York with 97 per cent of their crews American citizens.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I agree that, so far as can be, American citizens ought to be employed on our ships. But I have had this information from a number of concerns; I do not know how reliable it is. It is to the effect that these stewards' places or positions are rather positions of menial service and Americans will not accept them. Is there anything to that claim?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No. Take the ships on the American Merchant Line. They find all the American-boy stewards that they require in going out of New York. Talking about veterans a few moments ago, a great many veterans in New York City would be glad to take up that work. Steward's work on a ship is not necessarily menial. The man can work himself up to a supervisory job. There are many desirable places in the steward's department that a young man can work up to. At present all these supervisory jobs are in the hands of either German or English subjects on the United States Lines.

The history of the sea has yet to record the loss of a ship where they had an American crew—where a crew saved themselves and every child was drowned and the majority of the women. That happened on the Vestris. There is no such blot on the history of American sailors, and there never will be. I am going to offer an amendment at the proper time compelling the Shipping Board to give preference to American citizens in place of the aliens who apply.

CHARGES UNITED STATES SHIPPING LINES BEING THE DUPE OF THE ENGLISH

The United States Lines and the Shipping Board are now whining and complaining because the Cunard Steamship Co. is entering into competition with them in the Cuban service. The fault is entirely with the United States Lines. Last year I advised this House and suggested that this very thing would happen. The United States Lines have been cajoled into joining the continental conference and other shipping conferences controlled entirely by foreign steamship companies. The officials have been so stupid as to permit the English to verily lead them by the nose. The foreign steamship companies control these conferences; they fix the rates, they arrange the schedules of sailings, they divide up the trade, they even fix up the commissions paid to agents, which commissions they themselves violate, and the poor, stupid officials of the United States Lines have been going along and doing as they were told by the English steamship companies; and now—although they are in the conference, although they have arranged their sailing schedules and rates according to the conference—here is a company in this very conference entering into competition in the Cuban service.

It we are to have rate war, we might as well have it so that we can be part of the war; but by the United States Lines joining in the conference, the foreign steamship companies are waging war against United States ships; and the United States Lines, by being part of the conference, are being told what to do and how to do it by these foreign steamship companies.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A moment ago the gentleman spoke about these competitive steamship companies violating conference agreements with reference to the commissions paid to their agents. Has the gentleman any information as to whether or not they also violate their agreements with reference to freight charges?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have some data on that in my office. Do they not get around that by preferential railroad rates on the other side? I think that is one of the ways they do it. But, of course, I suppose they also violate their agreements on the amount of commissions to be given to freight agents. It happens all the time and yet the United States Lines were cajoled into this conference and remain in it. I can not see that we get any benefit from it. We abide by the terms of these conferences in good faith, but the same terms do not seem to be binding on the foreign steamship companies; and that is my objection to it.

Now, the officials of the Shipping Board talk about a rate war. If we are going to have a rate war then let us have an honest-to-goodness rate war, where we can go out and have as much freedom of action as the foreign steamship companies seem to have against our lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. Box].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a brief newspaper clipping.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have the honor to hold the subordinate position of Democratic whip of this House. For nearly eight years I have served as first assistant to my friend and our lamented colleague, Hon. W. A. Oldfield, long the Democratic whip. When other duties or illness compelled him to be absent I usually performed as far as I was able the duties of the place.

Mr. Oldfield's death made us sad and left a big gap here. At that time it was and it is now hoped that my friend the gentleman from Texas, Mr. GARNER, would succeed Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, whose prospective retirement we all regret, as minority leader of the House. I knew and then told the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that the Texas delegation could not decently ask or hold at the same time the positions of leader and whip on this side. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] had been in Congress some 16 years before I came. He has long been the ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee, where he has rendered substantial and conspicuous service to the party and Nation. His position, his ability, his service, and his seniority made it preeminently appropriate and right that he should become minority leader upon Mr. GARRETT's retirement.

Messrs. GARRETT, GARNER, and other colleagues therefore understood clearly from the first that my service as whip would be terminated when Mr. GARNER became leader. I want my colleagues and the country to know the facts as they have been definitely recognized by me and many others from the beginning of my service in this unpretentious capacity.

I wrote my recent letter to Governor Roosevelt as a Democrat belonging to the rank and file in this House and in the country. I am glad I wrote it.

Governor Smith received my support in the recent compaign and Governor Roosevelt had it when nominated for Vice President some years ago. Being strongly attached to the party and deeply interested in its faithfulness and efficiency in serving the Nation, I wrote Mr. Bryan about party policies after one or more of his campaigns, and Hon. John W. Davis on the same subject after his defeat four years ago.

In writing my recent letter to Governor Roosevelt I was moved by the same purposes which have heretofore prompted me and said only what millions feel and what the humblest Democrat has a right to say. His letter to me dealt with future party management, and mine to him complied with a request in his letter to me in the following words:

I hope you will write me soon.

Dissatisfaction in some political circles with my reply must arise because I candidly stated the situation as I see it and future developments as I foresee them, or because I let the public know what I was saying about public affairs of vital public importance.

I am not and have never been affiliated with the Ku-Klux Klan.

Few, if any, publications carried my letter to Governor Roosevelt in full. The first sheets released carried full verbatim copies. After the letter had gone to Governor Roosevelt the correspondent of two important dailies notified me that he would not report what I had written about the development of tolerance and religious liberty in America and the necessity of continuing them. Because that section was somewhat long and liable to be distorted by abridgements, I eliminated it from all subsequent releases. It was as follows:

Our Government does not handle questions of church creeds and practices; therefore they are not political. The extermination or subjugation of either the Catholic or the Protestant group by the other is impossible. Efforts in that direction filled a large part of Christendom with strife and distress for ages. Chiefly through the efforts of Mr. Jefferson, America worked out the plan of having our religious groups cease all political strife, practice tolerance, enjoy equality, and join in working for the political commonweal. Without political equality religious liberty is impossible. Neither Democratic people nor their leaders can deny either of these groups political equality without violating a fundamental of Americanism and democracy and sowing the seeds for a fearful and continuing harvest to be reaped by coming generations of Americans. In making its nominations and shaping its policies the party must avoid raising this religious issue.

I hope the press will find it worthy of publication.

With permission of the House, I quote at this point a brief newspaper report published in the Minneapolis Journal of July 14, 1928:

RASKOB MAY QUIT REPUBLICAN CLUB—DEMOCRATIC CHIEF DECLARES HIMSELF WILLING TO RESIGN FROM UNION LEAGUE

PHILADELPHIA, July 14.—John J. Raskob has indicated his willingness to resign from the Union League here if his membership in that organization, which always has been Republican, and which has indorsed Secretary Herbert Hoover's candidacy for the Presidency, should prove an embarrassment to the club because of his acceptance of the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee.

Speaking last night at his summer home near Centerville, Md., he said:

"I have no desire to embarrass the Union League. I shall be guided by the advice of the officers; and if it is found that continuance of my name on the rolls is embarrassing to the membership, I shall be glad to resign."

Mr. Raskob denied a report from Washington that he had urged President Coolidge to be a candidate for the Republican nomination.

"I did not talk to the President about the campaign," Mr. Raskob said. "It always had been my private opinion that Mr. Coolidge would be drafted, because, as a business man, I did not believe that the Republican Party would take a chance with a weaker candidate against the popularity of Governor Smith."

Many other press reports indicating that Mr. Raskob has been and was during the recent campaign a Republican have been published and, so far as I know, have never been denied. In many instances the majority Republican or Democratic organization dominating the politics of certain regions has controlled the local party machinery of the opposing party, feeding minority leaders from the back doors of the dominant bosses, holding the local minority organization in a kind of vassalage, and making it subservient to the usually unworthy purposes of the master machine.

Early in the recent campaign Democrats heard with dismay that their national party organization had been placed in the charge of a master of finance of the Republican Party faith, who, without becoming a Democrat, took charge of the dishonored and perverted organization largely for the purpose of using it to repeal or emasculate the eighteenth amendment, ratified and cherished by every safely Democratic State and overwhelmingly adopted by the Nation in a constitutional way.

Governor Smith may correctly estimate some of the people of some parts of the country, but in making the arrangement mentioned he demonstrated that he greatly underestimates the independence, self-respect, and patriotism of the Democratic hosts of the cities, towns, and open spaces of America.

Many Democrats rebelled. Party loyalty and insuperable objections to supporting the Republican régime compelled many others to tighten their lips and endure the situation; but, if I know them, they will not passively permit themselves and their party to be thus enmeshed again.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am not fighting the Democratic Party or Democracy. I expect to die a Democrat. If I could, I would free the national Democratic organization from unworthy and subverting Republican control. The spirit and purpose of Democracy are sound, but its national organization is for the time in charge of one who would use it for purposes foreign to its mission and unworthy of it. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to briefly reply to a statement made in the RECORD yesterday, which is very misleading and may be harmful.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] was talking about the tariff and the effect of a meeting held in New England recently and said:

I want to direct the attention of this House to the fact that we are to have tariff legislation next year, and it was stated by the chairman of that great meeting that they hoped to insert into that tariff bill a provision which will protect only those that are limited to a 48-hour week.

Having been the chairman of that meeting, I do not want any such statement attributed to me.

After listening to a very eloquent and interesting address from one of the prominent labor leaders, who said, in substance, that the tariff had not helped labor to the extent expected, inasmuch as the Southern States by exploitation of labor, after they shared in tariff protection, had been able to injure New England by fierce competition, I simply said, "Let us see, then, if we can in any way apply some labor legislation into the tariff."

But it had been previously explained in the meeting how impossible it was to inject any labor legislation into tariff legislation. While I have this five minutes I will take the opportunity to refer to the 48-hour week, as so many have referred to the constitutional amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] demanding a 48-hour law for all of the States. Perhaps that gentleman and others of us who favor the principle do not expect immediate action, but it is an effective way to bring the attention of the Congress to the fact that labor is being exploited in this way, bringing about deadly competition in industries within our own country.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that whenever Congress has had the opportunity, as in the Adamson law, labor was restricted to a 48-hour week; and when we write contracts now—and as we shall continue to write them—we provide that they be performed under a 48-hour week.

So this Government, through the Congress, is on record, whenever possible, to set the example of the 48-hour week; but we are not so foolish as to think, and do not want you to expect, that there will be any attempt whatsoever, so far as I know, to inject into a tariff bill the 48-hour-week problem simply because we know of no way that it could be accomplished in such legislation.

Mr. WASON. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I was interested in the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], in which he described the effects of destructive competition in shipping and the efforts made to deal with it.

This problem of destructive competition is important, not only in international business but it is one of the gravest issues in domestic commerce. It is to that problem that I desire to devote the time which has been allotted to me.

In 1914 Congress created the Federal Trade Commission, and in that act laid down the ban against unfair competition. Section 5 of that act is as follows:

SEC. 5. That unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful.

The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Now, in my estimation one of the outstanding methods of unfair competition in business is the practice of selling trademarked, identified, standard merchandise at ruinously low prices in order to broadcast the belief that all goods are sold at the same low prices. Such practices deceive the public and destroy competition.

However, the Federal Trade Commission has never acted upon this method of unfair competition, presumably because the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Doctor Miles Medical Co. case of 1911, declared that price-maintenance contracts to prevent such price cutting for ulterior purposes were in violation of the Sherman antitrust law of 1890.

The Federal Trade Commission endeavored to act in line with this Supreme Court decision and began action against various business concerns charged with attempting to maintain prices. This led to such confusion that the commission on December 12, 1927, issued the following memorandum:

The question of resale price maintenance is one of the most troublesome with which the commission has to deal in the present state of the decisions. The early Federal cases trace the principle to a passage in Coke on Littleton dealing with restraints on alienation. Courts, in attempting to apply these ancient principles, have fallen into hopeless confusion. Orders of the commission, issued under its organic act, have been upheld in some circuits and set aside in others on almost undistinguishable states of fact.

It is evident that legislation will be required to cure the present unsatisfactory conditions; and it seems unlikely that Congress will enact such legislation without definite information as to the probable effect thereof on competition and prices.

It is significant that for the year 1928 not a single action involving price maintenance was brought by the commission. During that year the whole investigating personnel was engaged in a complete investigation of this whole subject. I was informed to-day at the offices of the commission that its report would be transmitted to Congress in the very near future.

In line with the suggestion that legislation is necessary to meet the present unsatisfactory situation, I have had pending in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce H. R. 11, known as the fair trade bill. A similar measure has been introduced in the Senate by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas.

Here is the first section of that bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That no contract relating to the sale or resale of a commodity which bears (or the label or container of which bears) the trade-mark, brand, or name of the producer or owner of such commodity, and which is in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others, shall be deemed to be unlawful, as against the public policy of the United States or in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce or in violation of any statute of the United States, by reason of any agreement contained in such contract—

(1) That the vendee will not resell such commodity except at the price stipulated by the vendor; and/or

(2) That the vendee will require any dealer to whom he may resell such commodity to agree that he will not in turn resell except at the price stipulated by such vendor or by such vendee.

The remaining sections provide that there must be no agreement between producers or between wholesalers or between retailers as to sale or resale prices. All reasonable contingencies when standard prices may be reduced are also provided for in the bill.

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House has held the most exhaustive hearings on this subject, with full opportunity for both sides to be heard. A subcommittee then went into the matter, and four members out of five urged immediate favorable action. One paragraph from that report is as follows:

The testimony already taken shows that local dealers suffer destructive competition from these chain stores and other large distributors with great capital, who often offer standard goods of a nationally advertised brand at prices which represent cost, or, in some cases, less than cost. They do this for the purpose of attracting customers, and make up their loss on this standard article by greater profits on staple goods on which there are no standard or advertised prices, so that the customer is not advised as to a fair price.

Mr. Chairman, of course I do not know what the Federal Trade Commission will report. I do know that it can not fail to point out the evils of the present situation. Legislation alone can remedy these evils, and Congress is responsible for legislation. We have declared unfair competition to be unlawful. Our duty now is to declare predatory price cutting on standard goods to be unfair competition, and grant independent business men the power to protect themselves against it.

Such action will be taken in the public interest. The people of this country are vitally interested in fair competition, because unfair competition is the sure road to oppression, injustice, and monopoly.

Mr. Chairman, the evil effects of cut prices on standard services have been recognized by the United States Government and by every State in the Union. It has been universally recognized that discrimination in prices, while benefiting the few, has always worked injury to the general public.

The antitrust laws were passed for the express purpose of preventing monopolies from being built on cut prices. Specific laws in the States provide severe penalties for the individual, firm, or corporation that cuts prices on standard services.

These laws forbid discrimination by railroads and public utilities, pipe lines, warehouse companies, and on all kinds of insurance.

Why do the governments, representing the people, take such action? Certainly the person who secures the cut rates is benefited. Is it fair to take his bargain from him?

If a man can get an insurance policy on his life at half rate because he is an intimate friend of the agent, why should he pay more? If a man has a pull with the gas company, why should he pay the regular price for lighting and heating his house?

These questions answer themselves. We have all come to see that uniform rates are essential to public protection against injustice—unregulated monopoly. If some pay less than a fair rate, others must pay more.

Exactly the same principles apply as to standard goods, and general recognition of that fact can not be much longer delayed.

Whenever the Government deals with a business it must of necessity insist, first of all, upon selling-price control. The railroads can not cut rates, give rebates or unfair advantages. The first regulation must be regulated prices.

Postage stamps are sold at uniform prices, and there is a law on the statute books prohibiting any juggling with those prices.

When the Pan American Union put out its book on The Panama Canal the stipulation was made that the retail price must be uniform. The director said, "I did it to protect the public."

If you visit our national parks, you will see standard prices fixed by the Government for transportation, meals, rooms, baths, and so forth.

Now, if unfair competition on prices is so completely prohibited by government where it has responsibility, is it not fair to assume that a system of cut prices on standard goods may also be against the public interest?

Already a number of States have acted. Among others, New Jersey, Missouri, Indiana, Wisconsin, and California have passed laws designed to prevent "cut rate" dealers from undermining the market on trade-marked goods and from deceiving the public into the belief that unknown and unmarked goods are sold at similar low prices.

The simplest, least expensive way of ending unfair price competition on standard goods is through a free contract between the manufacturer of such goods and his distributors. Until the Doctor Miles Medical Co. decision this was the method which had been declared valid in many Federal courts.

However, that decision declared that such a contract was in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. Then ensued a period of jungle competition which has continued to the present time.

As a result, great distributing combinations are growing like mushrooms and are having, in my opinion, a menacing effect upon the social and business life of America. In so far as they thrive through cut prices on standard goods they are endangering honest business. Most of them are out for profits, regardless of the interests of the consumer.

Those of us who stand for fair competition in business propose to make these combinations deal fairly with the public, manufacturer, and fellow distributors as far as standard goods are concerned. We propose to permit the manufacturer of identified goods to enter into contract with his distributors as to the fair and uniform price at which his products shall be sold. We propose to prevent the formation of merchandising monopoly through deception and unfair competition.

We contend that such a right will not mean higher prices to the consumer, but lower prices. It will take away no just privilege from consolidated business, but it will take away one weapon of unfair competition. It will give no undue advantage to independent business, but it will give a square deal to fair competitors.

It will encourage efforts to reduce the cost of products and increase their quality, knowing that a fair price may be protected. It will afford opportunity to the individual to sell his services or his commodities on a basis fair to customers, manufacturers, and distributors.

One thing is certain—if we fail to secure the boon of fair competition, opportunity in independent business will not much longer stand knocking at the door of young America.

In his acceptance speech at Palo Alto, President-elect Hoover said:

As Secretary of Commerce I have been greatly impressed by the fact that the foundation of American business is the independent business man. We must maintain his opportunity and his individual service. He and the public must be protected from unjust competition, from domination and predatory business.

That is the expression of a great purpose with which every good American must agree. We should give the independent business man a fair field but no favors. If we safeguard him from unfair competition, he will take care of himself. We should give him a chance to protect himself against price-cutting profiteers. We should let him know that efficient, economical service is the sure road to success. I am confident that, given a square deal, the independent business man will show he is worthy to continue as a self-reliant, efficient servant of the American public.

He is not getting a square deal under present conditions. He is being destroyed by unjust competition, domination, and predatory business.

Let us survey the field. There are three factors in the production and distribution of the goods upon which the welfare, prosperity, and happiness of the whole people depend. They are: Retailer, wholesaler, and manufacturer. Each factor is vitally concerned in this problem of fair competition.

Mr. Chairman, let us consider the plight of the independent retailer. The work in which he is engaged is of vital importance to every American. His job is to get to the ultimate consumer the things he must have in order to maintain life. Food, clothing, necessaries, and comforts must be bought in large quantities and sold in small. There is no way to get them to the American home except through some form of retail distribution.

No one need apologize for being interested in this essential phase of business. It comes closest to the family and the home. The welfare of every man, woman, and child depends upon the performance of this task. That it be performed in the most efficient and economical manner is of the first importance. There must be a fair price for the goods sold and there must be adequate service to the public.

There are about a million and a half retailers in the United States handling every conceivable commodity from apricots to zinc. Up to this time the very foundation of this far-flung system of distribution has been the independent retailer, serving the community of which he is an active part and in whose welfare he is already interested.

"Uncle Joe" Cannon in his "autobiography" has defined the place of the independent merchant in early American days in the following terms:

The pioneer and the little shopkeeper of pioneer days and after him the small merchant and after him the captain of industry were in no respect different except that the merchant took greater risks. The men who bridged the rivers and built the railroads were not the only pioneers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the predatory business to which the President elect referred? The word itself takes us to the jungle, and where perpetual warfare means the survival of the strongest and the most cunning. That word makes us think of beasts of prey, whose law is that of tooth and claw.

The predatory retailer is the one who drives the small concern to the wall through unfair competition. Of course, he can not avoid the laws of successful business any more than the laws of gravitation. Business, in order to endure, must yield a living profit. If money is lost on some articles it must be made up on others. But the predatory retail concern may destroy competition if it can delude the public into believing that it sells all goods for less than others charge.

There is but one way to practice such deception. Set the trap with bargain bait, using standard, trade-marked articles, at prices far below the standard, publicly approved price. Then having lured the public into a false belief, sell unnamed and unidentified goods at excessive prices.

If this be practiced by some huge combination, with many stores, the profit from one store or any group of stores may be sacrificed until competition is destroyed. Then the losses may be recouped by advances all along the line, while the duped and deluded public pays the bills.

That is predatory business. It is selling at cost or below cost some well-known, standard products in order to create the impression of universal bargains. Its method is always unfair competition, never fair competition. It always cuts prices for ulterior purposes, never stabilizes prices on a fair level.

Those of us who wish to give the independent retailer at least a fair chance against predatory business believe that a great deal may be accomplished through the so-called Capper-Kelly bill. Under this measure, the manufacturer of an identified, trade-marked product will be enabled to contract with his distributors as to resale price. Its purpose is to protect business from the dealer who is both a price cutter and a profiteer.

Every independent manufacturer who desires to protect his uniform price from being juggled by predatory business will be able to do so. By proper and fair cooperation the maker of goods and the distributors of them will be able to protect themselves and the public from the effects of this unfair competition.

Mr. Chairman, the efficient retailer is in desperate need of such protection. Through the right of voluntary contract we are trying to give the independent business man who is honest and competent an opportunity to be secure from unfair trade practices.

We are trying to free such worthy men from unjust fear and menace—the fear of seeing a hard-won business destroyed overnight by piratical practices and the menace of competition based on fraud and deception.

This little bill is a David's pebble which will help to slay the Goliath of predatory price cutting. It will prove a declaration of independence for the independents. It means mutual profits sales, not cut price on one sale and extortionate prices on others.

The independent retailer can not protect himself to-day, because the Supreme Court has held that uniform prices on trade-marked articles can not be established by contract. At the same time the court has held that uniform prices on all articles can be established by ownership.

As a result of these decisions one giant concern may operate 18,000 stores and charge uniform prices on all articles sold, but an independent manufacturer can not act by contract with 100 retailers as to uniform price on his own standardized, guaranteed product. Contract, the weapon of the independent business man, is under the ban, while ownership, the weapon of the giant combination, is given judicial benediction.

Our desire is simply to put contracts and ownership on the same basis and thus give the independent dealer a chance to meet his mammoth competitor on equal terms.

It is time to act. It is true, as President-elect Hoover has said, that the independent business man has been the backbone of American business. It is also true that that backbone is not so steady and erect as in other times. It is bending beneath a heavy load.

The independent retailer is being attacked from many quarters—great semimonopolistic merchandising corporations, mail-order houses, chain stores, manufacturers' selling agencies.

In a little local paper which I receive I read the other day of the retirement from business of an old friend. He had been a neighborhood grocer for 30 years, making an honest livelihood, and no more. He went down before a unit in a nation-wide chain of stores.

If it were not so common that it has no longer any news value, every paper every day, everywhere, could have an item like this: "John Littlefellow, proprietor of the neighborhood store in Homes Street, has been forced to close out his business after 20 years in the same location. He has as yet made no plans for the future."

If we recognized real service to the community we would pin on the breast of many of these community builders the distinguished-service medal. Better still, if we recognized the principle of free opportunity which is involved in their elimination, we would prevent the overthrow of their business and their life work by unfair, dishonest competition.

Let us think of John Littlefellow. When he first established his store he served a few scattered families in a new district. He knew every man, woman, and child, and he was counselor, guide, and friend to all.

He extended credit to the man out of work, who ran up a bill which awaited happier times. He did not point to a "Cash only" sign. He had troubles as he struggled and planned to meet the needs of a growing community, but he kept them to himself. He believed in his community, in his own ability, and the goods he sold. He followed honest business methods. He sold goods at a fair price, which included a fair profit for himself. He had one price for all and did not cheat trusting customers or inexperienced buyers.

He was not great nor brilliant nor too wise. Still he faithfully served his people in fair weather and in foul. No time clock nor steam whistle marked his working hours.

He paid his taxes and his bills. He served on public committees and helped a little in every movement for the upbuilding of his home community.

His hair grew white, but he was happy in his job, and was very proud of the good will of his little place of business. Though he only cleared enough to support himself and his family, he would not have traded places with a king.

Then came a chain store to take advantage of trade developed in a built-up community. The hardships of pioneering had passed; now the field was ready for easy harvest. Prices on standard, nationally known goods were cut below cost. The store laid a line of trade-mark bargains to its overprice traps.

John Littlefellow saw his patrons leave, those he had served and accommodated for years. They were deceived and it appeared that he had been extorting excessive prices. Surely the chain store, which could give such bargains on goods whose prices were known to all, must give similar bargains on all goods. They could not see that the same hand which gave them a few pennies on identified goods also took a dollar out of their pockets in extortionate prices on unidentified goods.

John Littlefellow saw the situation clearly. Still he could not bring himself to adopt the tactics of the opposition. He could not sell some articles below cost in order to cheat his customers on others. He did his best but he was in a jungle war in which the most unscrupulous has all the advantage.

He asked no pity and he took his medicine. He fell a victim to unfair competition and closed his store one night for the last time. In his place stands a unit in a country-wide chain, managed by a hired man, here to-day, in the next State to-morrow. Rid of competition, this store is master of the field and prices go up, while the duped public pays the bill for unfair business methods just as it always does.

Is it not time to realize that a square deal to the John Littlefellows of business means the public welfare? Can we not see that the present rule of predatory competition is destruction to that free opportunity for which America stands?

What is the situation? Let us ask William J. Baxter, who wears the impressive title of director of research, chain stores research bureau. He was present on October 23, 1928, at the trade committee conference of the National Association of Manufacturers. That conference was held in the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City, and Mr. Baxter made an enlightening speech. He is proud of the growth of chain stores and is in a position to know the facts. He said:

> Although we had chain stores prior to 1920, there were certain forces that worked in the business situation in this country from 1920 on that have made for tremendous chain-store growth. In that growth I have been happy to be associated with some 300 chains.

Here is an expert who ought to be able to give information. All the more because he had been so happy in his work. Independent business men were not so happy, but why bring that up?

Mr. Baxter goes on:

> In 1920 the chains were doing 4 per cent of the business. To-day, as far as we have been able to determine, the chains are doing 18 per cent of the retail business. During 1928 the sales have been slightly in excess of $8,000,000,000. At the start of this year we had 101,000 stores in this country, chain stores which did as much business as approximately 300,000 independent stores.

That is not all. Montgomery Ward & Co. and Sears, Roebuck & Co. have embarked on a plan of establishing 1,500 great retail stores each within the next five years.

Edward A. Filene, department-store owner of Boston, believes that the all-conquering distributor will be the chain department stores. There are many chains now in existence, and the largest of all has just been announced, with Lew Hahn, of New York City, as president.

Then, too, many manufacturers are establishing exclusive selling agencies in many cities. These, of course, destroy the opportunity of the regular retailer to handle these standard products.

With such developments the slaughter of the independents has been tremendous. At least 300,000 independent dealers have gone down before such competition in the last eight years.

But that is not all, either. The Bureau of the Census has made a study of retailing in 11 selected cities. The report shows that 28 per cent of all the individually operated stores did an average weekly volume of only $43. Forty-seven per cent of all these independent stores did a weekly volume of less than $140.

That means that almost half of all the independent stores did a volume which means failure within a short time.

At that rate at least 500,000 independent retailers are on their way out of business, their places to be filled by units of nation-wide combinations. It is a ghastly situation which confronts the business man who is termed the backbone of American business.

Of course, there are those who say there are many unnecessary retailers and they should be eliminated. I believe there are too many retailers, and the reason is because of lack of fair standards. Every man or woman, no matter what his previous occupation may have been, believes he can be a storekeeper. He enters the field and attempts to secure business. The favorite way to attract attention is to cut prices on standard goods. This means failure, and in the end he goes out of business, leaving debts and losses which must be absorbed by the community at large.

The adoption of a square-deal price policy will help greatly in getting the number of retailers to the most efficient basis. Surely that is a better way of securing the proper number than by jungle competition, which destroys the efficient with the inefficient. We should give the independent a chance to prove his ability to survive under honest methods. Let it be the survival of the fittest rather than the unfit, as is the case when unfair methods are the determining factor.

We are on the high road to monopoly merchandising. We are seeing in distribution the situation outlined by the United States Supreme Court in the field of production many years ago. In the United States against Freight Association case, decided in 1897, the Supreme Court said:

> The result in any event is unfortunate for the country by depriving it of the service of a large number of small but independent dealers who were familiar with the business and who had spent their lives in it, and who supported themselves and their families from the small profits realized therein. Whether they be able to find other avenues to earn their livelihood is not so material, for it is not for the real prosperity of any country that such changes should occur which result in transferring an independent business man, the head of his establishment, small though it may be, into a mere servant or agent of a corporation for selling the commodities that he once manufactured or dealt in, having no voice in shaping the business policy of the company and bound to obey orders issued by others.

Could there be a truer picture of the situation in retailing than this judicial statement 30 years ago?

Are we going to continue to force efficient individual proprietors to go to work as employees of great chain corporations? Shall we extinguish their initiative and enterprise and make them cogs in mighty machines? Shall they be forced to look to New York City for orders as to what to sell and what to charge, how much to pay help, and whether or not they can deliver goods?

Not if I can help it. America needs the independent dealer whose only boss is the people he serves.

What is to happen if we continue the present process? After all the consolidations and mergers and destruction of independents, what then?

Well, you may be sure this Government can never tolerate monopoly in the sale of the necessaries of life. The average American hates monopoly in any form, but there is no monopoly so menacing as that which controls the sale of food, clothing, and the things upon which life depends.

Inevitably the Government must master retail monopoly by fixing prices. To do that the Government must have a great army of experts who shall be trained in values not only of products but of materials entering into them.

We have done that already with the railroads and public utilities. We have our Interstate Commerce Commission, our public service commissions, and the like to fix the rates the public must pay for these services.

But these are natural monopolies. There is waste and public loss in competition between railroads and gas companies and telephone companies. One trunk-line railroad will serve the public more efficiently and more cheaply than half a dozen competing units. One electric-light system in a city is better than a dozen, with their duplications and wastes.

The retailing business is not naturally monopolistic but naturally competitive. Mere bigness in retailing does not insure efficiency and economy; it may be a handicap where added expenses eat up all the advantages.

Still, while monopoly is not natural in retailing, it is possible, as no fair-minded person, facing the facts, can deny.

If we desire it, we should choose it intelligently and face the situation. We can not permit private monopoly in merchandising, and so we should prepare for Government regulation. We will never allow one or two men in New York City to fix the prices of everything we must buy, so we should train men qualified to fix fair prices for the public.

Unless we act that is where we will end. It would be amusing, if it were not so serious, to hear some of these would-be monopolists attack those of us who are defending the independent business men as friends of Government intervention in business. I have often been dubbed a socialist when I was fighting for fair and honest competition.

Mr. Chairman, I will tell them how to bring socialism. Let them continue building up their great retail trusts and driving independent business men out of their fields of service. Let them continue their unfair labor policies. Let them continue their cut-throat, destructive competition and fight all laws which would enforce fair competition. Let them develop their semimonopolies into monopoly.

They will make socialism inevitable. They are the ones who are forcing Government control of business. They join hands, in effect, with those who preach the philosophy that monopoly is an evolution and can not be prevented.

I do not believe that monopoly in retailing is certain to come through evolution. I will not believe it until fair and honest competition has been tried as a substitute for the present cut-throat brand. Further, I believe that the establishment and maintenance of fair competition in all business which is not naturally monopolistic is essential not only to our prosperity but to the security of American institutions.

We have not yet seen proof that there is any better regulation of fair prices than fair competition. Not yet has it been proved that we can not establish the conditions under which regulated competition will exert its proper influence.

The fundamental question is this: Is mere bigness in retail establishments sufficient to destroy the small competitor? Is efficiency and economy inherent in bigness? Have the big combinations won their way solely on account of superiority to the independents?

I contend that the properly conducted small store is the most efficient and economical method of distribution. There is a size beyond which advantages become disadvantages. The individual owner of a single store of this proper size can manage it more economically than hired clerks of far-away corporations. He eliminates wastes and leaks which go unnoted in great establishments.

The little retailer can do business on less cost than the great establishment. He pays less rent in proportion and many of his other expenses are less in proportion to sales. His clerks are all salesmen, not nonselling employees, as in the case of the large establishment.

Gorton James, Chief of the Commerce Division, Department of Commerce, recently said:

> In what respects can the chain beat the old type of store when the latter is run on the new principles being evolved to-day? One element is claimed in cash selling, yet the economies of cash selling have been disputed. The cost of credit extension to retail customers is apparently a few tenths of 1 per cent. Certain cash stores report inventory shrinkages that mean losses greater than that. Thievery, careless handling, spoilage, and work under pressure of crowds add their mites. More retail selling time is required in a cash-and-carry store. Business comes in peak loads and the entire selling transaction must be finished at once. This adds to the congestion of the store. In a store which gives delivery service the order can be taken and set aside to be packed for delivery after the rush.

In a recent booklet dealing with retailing, put out by the Department of Commerce, Dr. Julius Klein says:

For certain types of business the big concern has an undoubted advantage over its smaller competitor. But in those lines of merchandising where success depends mainly on taking advantage of changing trade opportunities, close watchful contact with market conditions, and expert personal superintendence, the small operator has many advantages over the large establishment. * * * The resourcefulness and freedom of action of the individual will always go far toward offsetting the advantage of large-scale operations of the more complicated organizations. In fact, these characteristics are the most important factors in maintaining American business.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY. Yes.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell us why the chain stores are doing such a large per cent of the retail business?

Mr. KELLY. I certainly will. First I will let Mr. Baxter, the chain-store research expert, answer that question and then I will give my answer. Mr. Baxter went into that very question at length at the Waldorf Astoria meeting, and I have the transcript of his statements right here. I quoted where he said that "certain forces" had brought chain-store success after 1920. Let him explain what they were. He says:

In the first place the general level of prices had been rising from 1897 to 1920. From 1920 on it was evident that there would be a period of declining prices. During a period of rising prices the average consumer can afford to have service. During a period of declining prices the great middle classes' income is hurt and they must forego service. At that time the people who heretofore were ashamed of being seen in chain grocery or shoe stores, found they had to patronize these stores.

That is interesting. It was stark necessity and bitter privation which forced the public to deprive themselves of the service they really desired. Since they must forego service, they had to endure the humiliation of being seen in chain stores.

But Mr. Baxter has figures to prove the terrible position of the American consumer. He says:

The income of the middle-class family was cut approximately 50 per cent from 1914 to 1920 and prices had not declined in any such proportion.

That is a startling assertion and is certainly something new in statistics. The Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor is furnished funds to secure information on such subjects. I have been personally informed by that bureau that their official reports show that wages of all classes between 1914 and 1920 increased 129 per cent.

Instead of a decrease of 50 per cent there was an increase of 129 per cent in the income of forty million and more Americans who make up the great mass of consumers. In the main, all incomes increased greatly between 1914 and 1920 and, of course, the average income to-day is tremendously higher than the average income in 1914. Perhaps the expert refers to the income of the retailers who have been displaced by the chain stores, but since most of them are now working as clerks in the chain stores, he would not press that argument. In any case, he must give us a better reason for the growth of chain stores than decreased income between 1914 and 1920. And he has other reasons. He says:

Another factor that we can not afford to overlook is the fact that the character of the American family changed from 1890 to 1905. That is, prior to that time, the great majority of people or families in the country were of English-speaking descent. From 1905 to 1920 we had a tremendous amount of immigration which finally resulted in a law being passed in 1920 prohibiting further excessive immigration. Now, I don't think that if we had to-day in this country people to the amount of 90 per cent of English descent that we would ever have had chain stores to the extent we have. One has only to pass through any department store to see that the average American to-day is not as intelligent as the American of 10, 20, or 30 years ago.

Can it be possible that this is the great chain-store expert putting up an argument for chain stores. Yet that is what he said in his public address. We have been told of the efficiency and scientific superiority of the chain-store system. It was said to be the last word in high-power distribution, winning on its appeal to intelligent consumers.

Now, we learn that it depends on lack of intelligence. If the public is actually so ignorant there is all the more reason for their protection. The only proof of their ignorance is that they think a 9-cent saving on a standard article is enough to justify a 90-cent hold-up on unnamed goods. I am much afraid that the chain stores that pay the experts salaries will not appreciate such arguments as these.

Mr. Baxter gives as the third reason for the success of the chain stores the fact that they are perfecting distribution. He points out a chain clothing system which manufactures its own goods and sells clothing at uniform prices of $22.50 and $27.50. He says:

You eliminate the clothing manufacture at the same time you eliminate the salesmen of the clothing manufacturer. Then you have your own retail stores. So you eliminate two or three profits, in that way getting the product from the factory to consumer at a low price.

Is that perfecting the system of distribution? If it is, every manufacturer must have his own retail stores or every retail-store system must manufacture its own goods.

What will happen to prices when 50 clothing manufacturers adopt this perfect system?

All the costs must go on one brand, instead of being distributed over many as in the regular retail store. It is the most cumbersome and expensive system of distribution and is only used by manufacturers when it is needed in order to protect the standard price.

Mr. Baxter declares that this clothing-store system has a uniform price. His argument means that this chain succeeds because it can use through ownership the right to control the price, which is denied to independents through contract.

Here is a direct conflict within the ranks of his own chain organizations. If food manufacturers sell through their own agencies, where will the A. & P. stores be? If the makers of medicines distribute direct, what will happen to the drug chains?

No; this reason, most assuredly, will not account for the tremendous growth of retail chain stores. It is only a clear-cut invitation to the manufacturer to eliminate the wholesaler and retailer entirely. The maker of goods is told that he can protect his standard goods from price cutters by establishing stores everywhere.

Arthur Brisbane in one of his syndicated columns was many months ahead of Mr. Baxter with this suggestion. He said:

Isn't it time for owners of important national brands to have their own chain stores?

The public, of course, will pay the bill for such a system with its duplications and heavy overhead costs. The independent retailer will be destroyed by such a system just as surely as by distribution chains.

I do not want to see the retailing business monopolized by manufacturers. And it is only common sense to enable the makers of standard goods to use the established and efficient system of distribution and yet protect themselves against piratical price cutting.

Mr. Chairman, we will have to go still further with Mr. Baxter if we are to learn the real reason for chain-store growth. He has a fourth reason. Here is what he says:

It is practically impossible for an independent retailer to-day to lease for a period of 30 or 40 years a store in a building like the Paramount, where the rent will be $100,000 a year.

In other words, the ability to pay enormous rentals is the reason for chain-store success. What becomes of the economy of the chain-store systems? Certainly the unit that pays $100,000 for rent must get it back from the customers. Certainly in such a store, if some standard articles are sold below actual cost, there must be a mammoth mark up on other goods.

A store in the Paramount is not this problem at all. It is the store in the home neighborhood, serving the people of the home community. Willingness and ability to pay high rent is not the reason for the success of chain stores under such conditions. It is only proof that in the long run prices must be higher to cover the added expense.

Mr. Baxter gives still another reason. For his fifth point he enunciates the following:

People want to get their goods and don't want to take the time for service necessary in an independent store.

That is a curious argument. Does the average housewife go to a chain store and wait in line with her basket on her arm simply because she is a worshiper of speed? Would she not count it a speedier method to telephone in her order? Mr. Baxter had already admitted that she foregoes such service only under duress of circumstances.

The fact is, she has been made to believe that she will save money by the slower, more vexing methods which accompany the no-service policy of the chain stores. We must have more convincing reasons for chain-store success than speed.

Mr. Baxter himself is not satisfied with these five reasons. He starts all over again from the beginning. He says:

The most important thing is what we call the appeal to the eye. The chain store believes that its first duty is to get the customer into the store, and to do that you have to use modern art to the limit in the exterior and interior of the store.

Is it possible that this all-conquering system of economical and efficient distribution of goods to the homes of the people is down at last to "an appeal to the eye"?

All of us like an appeal to the eye occasionally, but few of us figure that it saves us money. That is supposed to be the real mission of the chain stores. If, as Mr. Baxter says, there is a feeling of shame in being seen in a chain store, there should be something more substantial than an "appeal to the eye" to pay for the ordeal.

He goes on to say that in the Fanny Farmer stores the appearance counts for 50 per cent. In the grocery business Mr. Bohak builds his success on the fact that every clerk must have a fresh white coat every day, while the interior and exterior of the store must be painted once or twice a year. Mr. Baxter says that he can tell from the use of electricity alone which are the chain stores and which are the independents. They do not make the "appeal to the eye," which he explains is counted so important by some chains that they will spend $750,000 for it in one store.

Of course, that regard for beauty is fine. I would like to see every store as beautiful as the Capitol. But would it help to distribute the necessary things of life on a more economical basis? Who pays for that $750,000 appeal to the eye? The consumer, of course, and the cost certainly does not bring down the price of bread and meat.

Then Mr. Baxter gives as another reason for chain-store success the fact that they specialize. They do not carry so many lines of goods. They hire specialized clerks, who do one thing and keep on doing it. They can have specialized window dressers and other specialists which the independent can not have. He would have us believe that they utilize energy like the foreman on a building job when a workman told him he was trembling all over and could not carry bricks. "Well, get busy with the sieve," said the boss.

But to cap the argument of specialized work, Mr. Baxter points out that chain grocery stores bake their own bread and slaughter their own meats. That argument kills itself. The chain store is a specialized business for selling goods. When it becomes a bakery and a slaughterhouse it is no longer a specialist at all.

Mr. Chairman, not a thing I have quoted gives any reason for the success of the chain stores.

The one legitimate reason for success Mr. Baxter gives up without an effort. He says:

> They haven't been successful due to prices;
> They haven't been successful due to buying.

I will have to make that argument for the chain stores myself. They have a decided advantage in being able to buy in large quantities at lower prices.

Still it is not an all-conquering advantage. The cost of the capital invested, insurance, warehouse storage, handling, and so forth, must be counted as part of the cost, and this helps to even things for the independent.

Nor does buying for less always mean efficiency. It often means mercilessly beating producers into less than fair prices. It means exactions and special rates and discounts which injure the producer. It means lower wages for labor and lessened consuming power. It means that workers may be thrown out of employment with every lowered demand.

There is a vast difference between real economic superiority and the counterfeit superiority which is only superiority in bargaining power. If through any power producers are forced to sell honest goods at less than a fair price, the loss is borne by the public in the end.

I maintain that combination, even with this bargaining power, can not alone put the efficient retailer out of business. Putting a vast number of retail stores together does not mean that each will make added profit. The independents can combine for purchasing goods and meet this factor successfully. If we are to have unified buying let us have it by cooperation and not by a trust.

We are not decrying big business in retailing. We are not opposing chain stores. We are only insisting that if they grow great they must meet the test of honest service and win by fair and honest methods.

> We do not challenge what they make
> We only challenge what they take.

If these huge combinations can succeed through fair competition, I am for them. But if they flourish through unfair methods it is the duty of every man to help end such methods.

We asked Mr. Baxter to explain chain-store success. He devoted a great part of his address to reasons which are not the real reasons. The independent dealer can meet the appeal to the eye, and the specialization and the advantages in buying and all the rest.

But he can not meet the huge combination of capital in retailing when unfair competition is used as a weapon against him.

Very casually, and as a kind of afterthought in his address, Mr. Baxter gives what, to my mind, is the real reason for much of the success of these great combinations. He says:

> To me there isn't any question as to the advisability of any retail store if it can sell some nationally known product at cost to get the crowd. * * * A consumer will go to a grocery store and she is willing to pay 55 cents for steak, whereas it might be sold for 52 or 50 cents elsewhere, if she at the same time can purchase Campbell's soup or some other package goods at cost. * * * Scientific retailing means studying the blind articles in the store and selling them at full prices. But what we call open articles, the ones that the consumer can go from store to store and compare, selling them at low prices.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are coming to the crux of the question. Here is a game which combination can best play. It can lose more money on standard goods and it has greater opportunity to recoup on blind articles. It can depress prices in a store or group of stores until it eliminates competition in that territory. Then it can raise prices there and depress them elsewhere to carry out the same purpose. It makes certain of its profits as a whole all the time. When it has the field to itself it holds the public at its mercy.

The independent, with his single establishment, can not meet this unfair competition, no matter how efficient he may be. When a chain competes in this fashion against a chain the result is a merger; against an independent dealer the result is destruction. It is unworthy of American business and must be ended.

It is a misnomer to call such a system "scientific retailing." It is rascally retailing. Its foundation is fraud. The blind articles are to be sold at full price! What is a blind article? Webster says a blind is "something to mislead one, or to conceal a covert design; a subterfuge." These articles are well named. They are sold at full price. But there is no price on these blind articles. They are unnamed and unstandardized. Therefore the sky is the limit in fixing the full price. Full price on them simply means the highest price that can be extorted from the buyer.

That is not scientific retailing. It is the oldest system of merchandising in the world, the haggle and barter plan, which led to the maxim, "Let the buyer beware." Justice-loving men have been trying to get away from it all through the years. And the greatest advance ever made was the trade-mark, with its identification and its guarantee; its standard quality and its one price to all.

But this falsely called "scientific retailing" has only one use for these honestly made and priced products. They are to be used as bait to delude innocent purchasers. Bait means anything used on a hook, or in a snare, trap, or the like, to allure. The standard article is slashed below actual cost and dangled beneath the customer's eye. Its character is then defamed and something just as good is urged. Unnamed blind articles are sold and the "full price" taken out of the customer's pocket.

Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the kind of merchandising which was denounced by President-elect Hoover when he was United States Food Administrator during the World War.

He met this deceptive scheme by the following official announcement issued by the United States Food Administration in 1918:

> All but a small percentage of dealers in food commodities advertise and sell their products fairly. Neither their statements concerning their goods nor the prices named are misleading. They do not cajole their customers by giving the impression that $1 worth of goods is sold for 69 cents, for the days of gold-bricking an intelligent public have passed. One's money's worth, no more—no less—is offered, and on such a basis of honesty is permanent business founded.
> However, in the grocery business, as in all other lines of business, there are a few black sheep. There is the very small minority that "sells at less than cost"—that is in business for philanthropic purposes! The present sugar shortage brought to light a number of interesting cases of unfair practices through the use of combination sales; that it was necessary to buy various other food commodities in order to obtain sugar.
>
> Many of these combination sales offered sugar at less than its actual cost, but the cost of the other food commodities was increased sufficiently to make up the loss on sugar and at the same time allow a profit.
> Many combination lots which included sugar were fair to the consumer, but in order to eliminate the operation of the few dealers who would take advantage of the situation the Food Administration abolished all combination selling except sugar with corn meal.

This combination selling was a deceptive, price-cutting-on-one-article device. It is exactly the same plan used by a predatory price cutter, when he slashes the price of a standard, identified article with a universally accepted price. He expects to sell the customer other goods at excessive prices to cover the loss on the cut-price leader.

Mr. Chairman, it is that system which is in large degree responsible for the slaughter of independent retailers. In the face of the facts, is it not ridiculous to say that if manufacturers have the right to control the price of his standard product, the retailer will become only an animated nickle-in-the-slot machine handing goods out over a counter?

Even if it were true, it would be better for him to serve his own community as an independent, taxpaying business man on his own, rather than as a hired man in a chain system. You can be sure that in a job behind the counter of some giant department store or unit of a chain, he will not have a chance to worry about the difference between a manufacturer's agent and a chain-store agent.

But it is not true. Given the right of free contract, the retailer will be eagerly sought by the maker of goods. The retailer can select any one of a dozen competing brands. He will choose the contract he signs. The goods must be right in quality and price or the dealer will not handle them. With fair merchandising methods, the independent retailer will not be a manufacturer's agent but the agent of the buying public he serves.

The price-cutting system on standard goods is turning independent, individual proprietors into hired servants of great corporations. It is destroying competition.

Texas has a law which provides that—if any person engaged in the sale of any article, shall with the intent of driving out competition or financially injuring competition, sell at less than the cost of the product, or give away products, said person, resorting to this method of securing a monopoly, shall be deemed guilty of conspiracy.

That is a worthy act. Is it not an absurdity that if independent retailers endeavor to cooperate with the makers of goods to prevent the action deemed criminal by the Texas statute, they are liable to prosecution and imprisonment under the judicial interpretation of the Sherman antitrust law.

There may be differences of opinion as to the amount of profit which is right, but one thing is certain, the right price of an article will not be below its actual cost. When any concern sells goods, in the regular course of business, below cost, you may be sure somebody is being defrauded.

If a clerk in a chain grocery-store system sells goods without express orders below cost or gives them away he is liable to the company for the loss. It should be just as sure in law that if the chain-store system itself sells goods below cost for ulterior purposes and to the injury of competitors it should be responsible for the loss occasioned.

I do not ask any favors or unfair advantages for the independent retail dealer. If he can not manage his store as capably as the great department stores or the chain-store systems let him fail. If he can not meet the fair competition of any rival, great or small, let him disappear and leave room for more efficient business.

But I do protest against his destruction by trade pirates. He has a right to protect himself against President-elect Hoover's triumvirate of evils—"unjust competition, domination, and predatory business." No combination of capital should have the right to bankrupt him through deceptive, dishonest business methods.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how is the independent wholesale merchant affected by the predatory price cutter?

He is an important factor in distribution. It is an absurdity to claim that the wholesaler's work can be done without cost by some sleight-of-hand performance on the part of either manufacturer or retail combination. His value is a long-established economic fact.

He collects the products of many manufacturers under one roof and holds them in readiness for shipment in small quantities to the retailers. If every manufacturer tried to sell direct to the retailers it would block the railroads of the country within a week. If the retailers were forced to buy their goods from individual manufacturers they would have no time to sell goods to the public.

In the first place, the manufacturer of standard goods desires to distribute his goods through the wholesaler for he knows it is the most economical system. However, it is just as important that the manufacturer be able to prevent his products being made a football by the price cutter. Juggling of his prices means the loss of public confidence and the good will which is the most valuable asset of his business.

The Supreme Court decisions have pointed out to all manufacturers that they may control their prices if they sell direct to the consumers. This is a direct invitation to adopt that method and more and more manufacturers are being forced to embark upon the direct merchandising of their products.

That eliminates the wholesaler, even though it does not eliminate the cost of the functions performed by the wholesaler. The manufacturer must establish not only his own retail stores but must also have warehouses and branch offices in strategic locations. It is the most expensive system of distribution, and the destruction of the wholesaler has no compensations in reduced prices to the consumer.

Suppose the manufacturer decides to sell direct to the retailer and exercise his right to refuse to sell to price cutters. He must then have his own force of salesmen to take the place of those of the wholesaler. The expense goes on one line, not a hundred. He must extend credit to a vast number of retailers instead of a few wholesalers. He must ship in very small lots instead of carload lots.

Such a situation confronts the independent wholesalers because the maker of branded goods can not enter into contract for the control of fair prices.

The attack on the other side is just as menacing. Chain stores eliminate the wholesaler also. They have their great warehouses and the investment in large quantities of goods. They, too, must deliver in small lots to the various units.

But if they succeed in putting the independent retailer out of business they insure the doom of the wholesaler.

The growth of chain stores has resulted in the destruction of a vast number of wholesale houses which have had a part in the upbuilding of many communities. They have been left as wrecks along the pathway of centralized merchandising.

Others as a defensive movement have joined in mergers, thus losing the identity which had been built up through years of service. Just one instance is the McKesson & Robbins merger of 16 wholesale drug houses. The firms involved are located in Mobile, Ala.; Burlington and Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Peoria, Ill.; Omaha, Nebr.; Boston; Detroit; Kansas City; Chicago; Albany, Troy, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, N. Y.; Cleveland; Sacramento, San Francisco, Fresno, and Oakland, Calif.; Minneapolis; Columbia, S. C.; New York; Bridgeport, Conn.; Newark, N. J.; Houston, Tex.; Los Angeles and San Diego, Calif.; and Phoenix, Ariz.

When this merger was made in August, 1928, it was officially announced that it was due to the necessity of a strong central organization to protect the interests of the independent druggist against chain systems.

This organization is not affiliated directly or indirectly with any chain-store system—

Said the announcement—

and its aim is to be an organization of druggists for and in the interest of independent retail druggists in the territory that it will serve. * * * The continued growth and expansion of chains, from local groups to chains of State and national extent, is creating problems of great concern to the manufacturer, the independent retailer, and the wholesaler.

Such a merger is forced because of chain stores. It is a merger none the less and adds still more to the problem of centralized business.

Just this morning I received a statement that Arbuckles & Co., one of the oldest wholesale firms of the United States, located in Pittsburgh, will discontinue business on February 1. This concern, through its coffee and other products, established a name which was a household word for several generations. Its good will, built up through years of honest and faithful service, was its most valuable asset. That has been destroyed and much of the damage was done by unfair competition.

Hundreds of employees are thrown out of employment and the opportunity to give efficient and economical service to hundreds of retail merchants has been taken away.

What is to be the end of the process? Is the great business of distribution to be concentrated in a few hands until the doors of opportunity are to be closed to all save a few?

Then, what is the effect of predatory price cutting upon the maker of trade-marked, identified goods?

The independent, smaller manufacturer is the victim of this unfair competition. The great concern, with unlimited capital can protect itself and its products in legal fashion. It establishes its own retail agencies and maintains its price or it consigns its goods to the retailer and maintains its price. Henry Ford and the General Electric Co. are instances of these two methods.

But the little, independent maker of standard quality goods is helpless. He knows that the good will of the public is his most valuable asset and his whole effort is made to win it. He builds on good quality and fair price. If the quality is lacking, all the advertising in the world will not make a continuous market for his goods. If the price is too high the public will not buy.

He must make good goods and he must invest money in letting the public know he makes them. He must convince people that they need his goods and must get them distributed economically and efficiently. He must persuade the public to prefer his goods to anything of a similar nature.

When he puts his name and brand on his product, this independent manufacturer stakes everything upon public approval. He guarantees his article and takes full responsibility for it. He stands back of every unit just as he would a certified check. He must make good with the ultimate consumer and he must use the wholesaler and retailer in his distribution.

The independent manufacturer of a trade-marked article spends time and money and effort to build up a good name, and that investment in good will is the security of the public for the maker is bound to maintain the quality of his goods.

Then, is not the price, that other factor in good will, just as important? The manufacturer of this distinctive article is just as much concerned that it sell always at the same price as the retailer is that his customers do not believe that he is selling the same article at different prices to different customers on the same day.

Faith in the established price is a vital element in good will.

When a predatory price cutter takes that standard, publicly approved article, and advertises it at less than cost to himself, he strikes a deadly blow at the good will of the manufacturer. The public believes that the standard price was excessive. Other dealers are incensed against an article which is slashed for the deception of their customers. The market is destroyed and the manufacturer under present conditions must sit silent in the face of such piracy.

If he sells through wholesalers, the price cutters can always get the goods from some wholesaler or even some retailer.

If he sells direct to retailers he can refuse to sell to the price cutter, but as soon as he is cut off the price cutter gets the goods through other channels and continues the game.

There is no theory about it to the independent manufacturer, but a tragic condition. The Ingersoll dollar watch made splendid bait for the predatory price cutters, and it was cut as low as 59 cents. Retailers who believed in mutual profit sales refused to handle this article at less than the standard price of $1, because there was no profit in it and they did not desire to cheat their customers by charging extortionate prices on unmarked goods. This predatory system of business was responsible, more than anything else, for the destruction of the Ingersoll Watch Co.

The cigar business is another example. The chain cigar stores used manufacturers' brands as bait. The public believed they were getting bargains and patronized these stores. As the cut-price brands were money losers, they were dropped one by one and replaced by the unknown brands. The makers of publicly approved and widely wanted brands were destroyed.

Such a system restrains trade, for many retailers refuse to handle goods which are used as footballs. Perhaps the manufacturer tries to deal with the price cutter by selling only one retail store in a city. That curtails the volume of their sales for there are always many persons who go into one store but will not go into others.

The whole price-cutting system is competition run mad. It forces the standard article to compete against itself. Not only is the manufacturer faced with competition from a hundred other concerns making similar goods, but he must also compete with himself to his own destruction.

The Supreme Court of the State of Washington pointed out the evils in such competition when it said:

> The true competition is between rival articles, a competition in excellence which can never be maintained if, through the perfidy of the retailer who cuts prices for his own ulterior purposes, the manufacturer is forced to compete with goods of his own production, while the retailer recoups his losses on the cut prices by the sale of other goods at or above their reasonable price. Fixing the price on all brands of high-grade flour is a very different thing from fixing the price on one brand of high-grade flour. The one means destruction of all competition and of all incentive to increased excellence. The other means heightened competition and intensified incentive to increased excellence.

The competition here referred to means the lowest price possible for the standard article but it will be a uniform price. Henry Ford has forever exploded the old business delusion that high prices mean big profits. Here is what he says:

> My policy is to reduce the price, extend the operations, and improve the article. I have never considered any costs as fixed. Therefore I first reduce the price to a point where I believe most sales will result. Then we go ahead and try to make the price. The new price forces the costs down. One of the ways of discovering what a cost ought to be is to name a price so low as to force everybody in the plant to the highest point of efficiency. The low price makes everybody dig for profits.

Anyone who thinks that a wild theory might review the record of the Ford Motor Co., conducted strictly on the standard-price basis. Ford has steadily reduced the cost to the public, increased the quality, and reaped a harvest of greater profit.

I want to see the little independent manufacturer given the same opportunity as Henry Ford. Safeguard him against the unfair competition of predatory business and he will do exactly as Ford has done—increase standard quality and decrease standard price.

Because he has no right to protect himself he is being injured without recourse.

The income-tax returns for 1925 show that 95 manufacturing concerns had net incomes of over $5,000,000. That is less than one-ninth of 1 per cent of the entire number; but they made 44½ per cent of all the profits made: 99 per cent of the entire number suffered an 11 per cent reduction in income over 1923; two out of every five showed an actual loss.

It is believed that 1928 will show a still greater concentration of profit. What that means is better understood by the fact that three-quarters of the 89,000 manufacturing concerns reporting are small concerns, with less than 20 employees.

Is it any wonder there are mergers and consolidations? Cut-throat competition, forced by interpretation of the antitrust laws, have led to combination and monopoly.

Already there have been consolidations which have put many nationally known products under one corporate ownership. Most of these manufacturers had created a position for themselves which was distinctive. They did not lose their identity through merger from their own choice. Their robust self-reliance was undermined by cut-throat competition.

Mr. Chairman, it is said that if legislation is passed which will permit the enforcement of standard prices for standard goods the huge selling combinations will sell only their own private brands.

That is a fair proposition. Let these retail combinations have all the private brands they wish. But they must be responsible for them and sell them on their merits. The present system is to use the good will of a national brand as bait. They can not do that with private brands, but will be compelled to use their own good will.

It is predatory business to use nationally-known brands in order to gain the confidence of customers, and then betray that confidence by the substitution of private brands. Yet that is exactly what is done.

Percy F. Straus, of Macy & Co. department stores, was chief opponent of the Capper-Kelly bill at the hearings before the congressional committee.

He stated that his stores would make more money if the bill went through, but he was opposed to it. He explained his generous disregard of increased profits by saying:

> We make goods under our own brands. If nationally advertised brands are sold at uniform prices, in self-protection the prices of our own brands must go up.

Now, why should that follow? Why should they not lower their prices and take over the business of the nationally advertised brands? Or why not increase quantity and quality to compensate for the increased price?

Mr. Straus gave figures as to how it works. For instance, Nujol costs 57 cents and is sold for 54 cents, a net loss of 3 cents, or 5 per cent of the price.

But the Macy brand only costs 32 cents and sells for 54 cents, a profit of 41 per cent.

Royal Baking Powder costs 37 cents and sells for 42 cents, a profit of 12 per cent. The Macy brand costs 19 cents and sells for 40 cents, a profit of 52 per cent.

It costs them around 30 per cent of sales to do business. They lose 35 per cent on Nujol and 18 per cent on Royal Baking Powder. But they make a net profit of 11 per cent and 22 per cent on their own brands.

The sale of these private brands is largely possible because of the nationally known brands. If these selling companies are compelled to build up their own good will, they will find it a different proposition, and that is why they oppose the measure for self-protection of trade-marked goods.

To cut the price on standard goods is simply appropriating the good will of manufacturers who have built it up by loyalty to the public and their best interests.

The State of New Jersey recognizes that fact in its law against unfair competition. It is as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any merchant, firm, or corporation to appropriate for his or their own use a name, brand, trade-mark, reputation, or good will of any maker in whose product said merchant, firm, or corporation deals, or to discriminate against the same by depreciating the value of such products in the public mind, or by misrepresentation as to value or quality, or by price inducement, or by unfair discrimination between buyers, or in any other manner whatsoever, except in cases where said goods do not carry any notice prohibiting such practice, and except in case of a receiver's sale, or a sale by a concern going out of business. (L., 1913, c. 210, p. 377; as amended, L., 1915, c. 376, p. 704; L., 1916, c. 107, p. 235.)

Mr. Chairman, the independent manufacturer of standard goods does not fear the competition of private brands. In fact, it is altogether likely that the retail combinations which have gone into the manufacturing business are finding it unprofitable.

One of the large grocery chains recently advertised the sale of stock in its concern. One of the paragraphs of the advertisement was as follows:

The company has developed the manufacture and packing of a variety of food products, with an established and growing consumer demand for its brands as a basis. These activities include the manufacture of preserves, jellies, mayonnaise, extracts, catsup, ammonia and similar products, the packaging of tea, rice, cornstarch, vinegar, etc., the roasting of coffee, the canning of vegetables and fruits, the baking of bread and cake. During 1928 a wholly owned subsidiary was organized to acquire a large plant for evaporating milk, located at Neillsville, Wis.

All of the company's seven warehouses, seven bakeries, and manufacturing and packaging and packing plants, are owned in fee, either by the company or by its wholly owned subsidiaries, with certain insignificant exceptions.

In the financial statement it was shown that this manufacturing activity was not increasing profits. In 1926, with 1,983 stores, they did a business of $116,902,000 and earned a profit of $7,775,000.

In 1927, with 2,133 stores, they did a business of $120,664,000 but they only earned $6,749,000.

In other words, with an additional business of $3,500,000, the profits were less by $1,026,000.

Let such competition flourish and let all goods be sold on their own merits. Permission to establish a standard price will not lessen fair competition, but increase it. We are simply trying to restrain piracy and give honest merchantmen on the high seas of commerce a square deal.

Mr. Chairman, the public pays the bill for unfair competition in one form or another. The destruction of independent retailers, wholesalers, and manufacturers by unjust practices injures the consumers, who are helpless before monopoly.

Saving a few cents through a bargain rate on standard goods is of no value when dollars are taken from the consumer through excessive prices on unknown goods.

Under standard price contracts the consumer will pay less for standard goods than he does to-day under the cut-price system. Now, the manufacturer must provide against the price cutter and names his price accordingly. Give him power to enforce a uniform price and he will name the lowest price possible, the one at which the article will be sold.

The fair-trade system will make the public the judge and jury. The high court of public opinion will determine the success or failure of a product. It will not depend upon the juggling of prices by those who have no interest in the product.

Above all, public policy demands freedom of opportunity for men to enter into business for themselves. America has become great because every mother's son of us had a fair chance to enter independent business.

If present conditions continue we must accept the transformation of our land of opportunity into a land of hired men, with workers known as numbers, not as individuals.

No matter what brilliant careers and high salaries may be offered for executives in these great merchandising corporations, it will mean for the great mass of Americans only a servile place, without a chance for the exercise of initiative and independent effort.

The issue involved is old; it only wears a new face. America has always stood for the development of the man through equal and fair opportunities; she must not fail in this testing time.

Mr. Chairman, the mission of America is to-day exactly what the immortal Abraham Lincoln defined it to be in his day, a nation built—to preserve in the world that form and substance of government, the object of which is to remove the obstacles from the pathway of all; to open the avenues of honorable employment to all, and to give all an unfettered start and a fair chance in the race of life.

The measure which I am advocating here is in line with that high ideal, for it aims to prevent unfair competition and to give a fair chance and a square deal to those engaged in independent business to-day and those who desire to enter it to-morrow. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire has only 17 minutes remaining, according to the timekeeper.

Mr. WASON. We had three hours. It is not 2 o'clock, and the House did not meet until 12 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and a half on each side.

Mr. WASON. The gentleman from New York and myself have an understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York, according to the timekeeper, has 1 hour and 19 minutes and the gentleman from New Hampshire has 17 minutes.

Mr. WASON. The gentleman from New York has yielded me some time. We have an understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman should convey the understanding to the Chair.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New Hampshire one-half hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, in the last appropriation bill for the independent offices I offered an amendment to add $1,000,000 to be used by the Shipping Board to recondition ships and pay the loss resulting from the shipping of American coal to foreign ports. This amendment was adopted by the House and Senate. This $1,000,000 was appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929.

During the holidays a number of representatives of the coal industry and I appeared before the subcommittee and urged that an additional appropriation of $1,500,000 be granted for the same purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and urged that the unexpended balance of about $400,000 of the $1,000,000 appropriated be reappropriated, so that this will give for this service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, $1,900,000.

The subcommittee before which we appeared made a unanimous favorable report, and it has been included in this bill by the full Appropriations Committee.

NECESSITY AND VALUE OF POLICY

I wish to talk to you about the necessity of this policy and its value to our country. The pressing problem in this country for some years has been and is now, and the problem that will become more pressing as the years come and go, is how we may dispose of the surplus of American products. We are producing a surplus on the farm, and hence the distress in agriculture. We are producing a surplus in the factories, causing unemployment in these industries. We are likewise producing a surplus in the forests and in the mines of America.

In order to take care of this surplus we must not only enlarge our home markets but also enlarge our foreign markets. Congress has been promoting our merchant marine policy. Our Government ships, our merchant marine, have been handling the products from the farm, the factory, and the forests of this country, but until recently they have carried but very little soft coal. There is no good reason why this discrimination should have been practiced at any time against the soft-coal industry, and there is certainly no good reason why this discrimination should continue in the future.

A GREAT INDUSTRY

The coal mines of this country, with their equipment, are worth more than $6,000,000,000. The other coal to which no equipment has been attached is estimated to be worth more than $5,000,000,000, so that the investment in our coal industry is in the neighborhood of $11,000,000,000 or $12,000,000,000. About 600,000 men and their families daily depend directly upon the soft-coal industry for their livelihood.

Soft coal is produced in commercial quantities in more than 30 States. Almost the entire Nation depends upon it for power, heat, and light. Some of our most valuable medicines, our finest dyes, our most beautiful colors, and most of our explosives come from coal. It is one of the great key industries and one of the strong arms of our national defense.

SOFT-COAL INDUSTRY IN DISTRESS

During the recent campaign President-elect Hoover pointed out in his speech of acceptance and in other addresses that agriculture, the textile manufacturers, and the bituminous-coal industry were in distress, were not prosperous.

I realize the distress in agriculture and in the textile industry. I have always fought for those measures that the farmers of the country and their advisers felt would relieve them of their distress and I shall continue to give to agriculture my full, earnest, and active support. I am likewise concerned about the textile industry of our country. It is the hope that in the extra session of Congress we may pass a measure that will greatly benefit agriculture and by proper tariff schedules aid the textile industry.

In my humble judgment the soft-coal industry of this country is in more distress to-day than either agriculture or textiles. The soft-coal mines on an average are idle about half the time, the miners are employed on an average not more than three days per week. Thousands of them and their families are in distress and can not provide for themselves as American citizens should be provided for. While the mines are idle overhead charges go on every day. Many well-equipped mines with the very best coal available and under efficient management in Kentucky as well as in other States of the Union are being forced into the hands of receivers and into bankruptcy.

Congress and the Federal Government should direct its attention and its active cooperation for the next four years to bring relief to these three industries that are now suffering. We have the coal mines, we have the best coal in the world, we have thousands of trained, experienced; honest, industrious, idle miners; we have ample railroad facilities and ample railroad workers to take care of this industry, and I wish to bring to the attention of the House what I consider sound economic suggestions of relief.

GREAT BRITAIN OUR COMPETITOR

About the only competitor we have in the soft-coal industry is Great Britain. Great Britain produces annually about 240,000,000 tons of soft coal, while we produce and consume in this country in the neighborhood of 500,000,000 tons of soft coal every year. We have two very important advantages over Great Britain. American coal is the best coal in the world. Consumers want American coal because of its high quality. We realize that, under present conditions, our miners do not receive as much pay as they ought to receive. I have heard a great many operators in my own district so express themselves, yet on the other hand American miners receive nearly three times as much pay as the miners of Great Britain.

Notwithstanding we pay much better wages, we produce soft coal in this country $1.50 per ton cheaper than it is produced in Great Britain. Now we have a better coal and the cost is $1.50 per ton less here than in Great Britain. Why is it that American coal has been kept out of the foreign markets?

RAIL AND WATER RATES

Under present railroad rates, we must pay about $2.50 per ton to get our coal to the seaports, while in Great Britain the rates are not over 70 cents per ton to the British ports, and, furthermore, England has subsidized her merchant ships, and this gives British ships an advantage over American ships.

We built a great many ships during the war. We now have several hundred of these ships owned by the Government tied up in the various bays and harbors of our country, deteriorating and becoming worthless. About 250 of these would be suitable for carrying coal.

The purpose of the $1,000,000 carried in the last bill and the $1,500,000 carried in this bill is to recondition these ships and put them in the coal-carrying trade and pay whatever loss may be sustained in competing with Great Britain in shipping coal to foreign ports.

Six ships have been put into condition or are being reconditioned. Two of these have already been loaded with American coal and have sailed to foreign ports, and we feel that with this additional money before June 30, 1930, between 20 and 30 ships may be reconditioned and put into service.

Some have objected to this movement on the ground that the Government will lose some money on each shipment. This is true. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, our merchant marine under the Shipping Board handled about 8,500,000 tons of farm, factory, and forest products, and the loss was something like $14,000,000. It will be observed that for every ton of products shipped from the farm, the factory, and the forest we lost on an average about $1.67.

The loss on our coal shipments will not amount to that much. The statement of the representatives of the Shipping Board about the loss on coal is not correct. At the time they made these statements no coal ship had made a round trip. Each ship that carries coal to foreign ports will, whenever possible, return loaded. The first coal ship that we sent out has secured a return cargo, and the loss on this shipload of coal to the Government will be considerably less than a dollar per ton. The Shipping Board estimated the loss at $13,000 on this ship, but they do not take into consideration that this ship is coming back loaded with 5,000 tons of ore at the rate of $2 per ton.

TWENTY OR THIRTY MILLION TONS

We have a potential market for our coal in the West Indies, Central and South America, and also in the Mediterranean. These Mediterranean ports are almost as near to American ports as they are to British ports, and some of the South American ports are nearer to us than to the British ports. The West Indies and Central American ports, of course, are nearer to us than they are to the British ports.

We have had a very small foreign coal trade, while Great Britain has built up a foreign coal trade of something like 60,000,000 tons. There is a potential market for American coal and coke of upward of 30,000,000 tons.

American railroads have given rates to our seaports on other products for foreign shipment. A movement is now on foot to have them to give a rate on coal for foreign shipment. If we secure this rate and secure proper unloading facilities in these foreign markets, it is believed by those who have made a careful study of the problem that we can compete with British coal in these foreign ports without any aid from the Government, but it is very essential at this time that the Government, through our merchant marine, should help to build up our foreign coal markets and this will go far toward inducing the railroads to give the rates on coal for foreign shipment and in getting suitable unloading facilities in these foreign ports.

We are satisfied that other economies may be effected. With the soft-coal industry in distress as it is, and thousands of miners out of employment and their families needing support, there is no good reason why our Government, through the merchant marine and the Shipping Board, should discriminate against coal. We should handle it and build up markets for it just as we are doing for our products from the farm, the factory, and the forest.

INTERESTED IN MERCHANT MARINE

While my district is far removed, and there are thousands of people living in my district who never saw a great ocean ship and never will, yet no one can be more interested in building up our merchant marine than I am. I desire to see American ships loaded with American products, flying the American flag, and sailing the seven seas of the world. Every ship loaded with American products of whatever kind to foreign ports means more employment for our people, and more returns on capital invested whether it be in mines, railroads, factories, or farms. [Applause.] Whatever helps one industry is bound to benefit every other industry in this country.

Mr. KELLY. Will the gentleman yield? I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement regarding an important industry. What is the productive capacity of the bituminous coal mines at this time?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If our mines worked anything like full capacity, they could produce about a billion tons of coal annually. We actually produce about 500,000,000 tons; only about one-half of our capacity, as we only have markets for that much.

Mr. KELLY. About one-half of the potential capacity.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; the mines are idle about one-half of the time. It is not like some other industries where you can stop the overhead. The expense in overhead goes on and mines deteriorate very rapidly when they are idle. The miners live in mining camps and can not, as a rule, find other employment for the days that the mines are idle.

Mr. KELLY. What might be the total exports of bituminous coal?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. There is a potential foreign market for about 30,000,000 tons of coal and coke. We do not produce much over 500,000,000 tons of coal. It is the surplus that breaks down the market. In 1927 the British coal miners were on a strike and this enabled us to have an export market for about nineteen or twenty million tons of coal. While that was not a large tonnage yet it took up the surplus and gave us a good strong coal market throughout the year.

TARIFF ON CRUDE OIL

I think we can help the coal industry very materially in another way. In 1921 some of us made a determined effort to secure a tariff on crude oil. There are being brought into this country about 3,000,000,000 gallons of crude oil for a single year. This is used largely for fuel purposes. As I am informed, very little of it is or can be used in making gasoline or lubricating oils, and it is estimated that it displaces somewhere between seventy-five and one hundred million tons of coal. This crude oil comes in from Mexico, Central and South America, and is produced by cheap labor, and can be sold at such a price in this country as to make it a cheaper fuel than coal. We think it is unfair to the coal industry as well as to the oil producers of the United States to have this large quantity of crude oil to come in free of duty, and at the proper time, when the tariff bills come up for consideration, it is my purpose to urge a proper tariff on crude oil. I feel that the coal industry is like agriculture and some other industries. We can not relieve them by any one particular thing, but it is my purpose to urge, for these industries, relief along several lines.

WILL HELP MANY

I wish to thank the subcommittee and the full Appropriations Committee for including this $1,900,000 in this bill. I am satisfied that this is going to grow into something big for our country. It will give new courage and life to those who have their money invested in this business. It will give employment to many miners and bring a ray of hope to them and their families. It will give business to the railroads and work to the railroad men, and to those who are employed on our ships, and will help every industry in this country.

All of our activities are so interrelated that one can not suffer without doing harm to the other.

I wish to thank you for your patient hearing. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON].

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON].

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, there have been favorable comments in my part of the country upon the fact that we are to have a special session of Congress this coming spring for the purpose of a revision of the tariff and to consider agricultural legislation. There is a well-founded belief that Congress will enact legislation at that time which will restore the agricultural industry to a parity with that of other industries, which is all that it is asking, and that such legislation may have the approval of the incoming Executive. In the Mitchell Republican, one of the leading daily newspapers of my district, there appeared an editorial on the subject a few days ago. I ask unanimous consent that this editorial may be read by the Clerk during my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

A CHANCE FOR THE FARMING INDUSTRY

Representatives of the farm States in Congress should recognize the forthcoming revision of the tariff as their opportunity. To be sure, it is an opportunity they never have taken, but it is high time they were availing themselves of it.

Senator MCMASTER showed the way when he presented last year his resolution calling for a downward revision of excessive tariffs paid by the farmer. The purport of that resolution was to serve notice on other industries that if they were not willing to put the farming industry on the same plane with themselves in the fixing of effective tariffs, the farmers did not propose to give further support to the protection accorded them.

Now that the tariff is to be revised generally, all the farm bloc Members of Congress should serve notice in some such form as this:

"We believe in the protective tariff system, but we also insist that it is unfair and discriminatory to increase the prices of some industries through the tariff and leave other industries on a world-price basis. Congress has refused to make effective the tariffs on some of the basic farm products. Unless Congress does do so, unless it enacts legislation that will insure to the farmer on all his products the world price plus the tariff, we will not vote for a continuation of existing tariffs enjoyed by other industries and we certainly will oppose any increase in such duties."

That the opportunity to do something of this sort exists is manifest from the attitude toward tariff revision of newspapers that speak for the manufacturers' group. For example, note the following from the Philadelphia Public Ledger, one of the high priestesses of protection for the big corporations:

"Now is the opportunity for industries requiring additional tariff protection to present their case. Representative TILSON has recently pointed out the committee's need for the fullest information available as the basis for new tariff schedules. Seven years have elapsed since the last tariff revision. The Republican majority is pledged to a comprehensive revision without delay that might cause uncertainty to business. And it is acting promptly to redeem its party's pledges and fulfill the mandate expressed at the recent election."

Of course, the Public Ledger says nothing of the party's pledges to end the discrimination of a tariff system that leaves the farmer on the world-price basis while according to the manufacturer the last cent of protection. This means that the farm bloc will be expected to continue to vote for high tariffs for manufacturers, with the farmer left out in the cold. Will the farm bloc play the rôle of cat's-paw once more?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. That editorial expresses a sentiment quite general throughout my part of the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does that view express the individual opinion of the gentleman himself?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. It does largely; yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Can the gentleman tell us what will be the policy of those who think as he thinks on this question when a bill comes in here for farm relief that does not carry out the policy indicated by that editorial?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. As for myself, I shall make an effort to get a bill that will carry out the policies that will bring relief and restore agriculture to an equality with that of other industries, and that is all that we are asking. That is what I am contending for.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the editorial itself reiterate a demand for the equalization fee in a farm relief bill?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Possibly so, but I am not one who believes that that is the only solution of the farm problem.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 14 minutes more of my time to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON].

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, the independent offices appropriation bill contains the regular annual appropriations for all those offices, bureaus, and establishments of the executive branch of the Government, which have not been placed by law under the jurisdiction of one of the regular departments of the Government presided over by a Cabinet officer. These independent establishments, so far as they are provided for, in whole or in part, by regular annual appropriations are as follows:

The Executive Office (including the salaries of the President, the Vice President, and of the employees of the White House and the President's immediate office).
American Battle Monuments Commission.
Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission.
Board of Mediation.
Board of Tax Appeals.
Bureau of Efficiency.
Civil Service Commission.
Commission of Fine Arts.
Employees' Compensation Commission.
Federal Board for Vocational Education.
Federal Power Commission.
Federal Radio Commission.
Federal Trade Commission.
General Accounting Office.
Housing Corporation.
Interstate Commerce Commission.
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.
Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital.
Smithsonian Institution.
Tariff Commission.
United States Geographic Board.
United States Shipping Board.
United States Veterans' Bureau.

The appropriations for the independent bureaus and establishments were carried for the first time in the single bill known as the independent offices appropriation bill under the appropriations made by Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, being the outgrowth of the establishment of the Budget system in Federal expenditures and of the consolidation in a single committee of the House of jurisdiction over all appropriations.

The total amounts appropriated each year for independent offices, including sums appropriated in all bills for the same bureaus for the fiscal year 1922, are as follows:

1922	$528,746,407.00
1923	555,615,334.38
1924	502,078,191.82
1925	540,303,926.21
1926	571,376,061.40
1927	513,606,436.64
1928	534,058,891.02
1929	528,355,562.00
1930 (recommended in the bill)	541,314,144.00

Appropriations for those activities reached their peak in 1926, when the aggregate amount was $571,376,061.40, of which $70,000,000 was for the adjusted service certificate fund. The total amount recommended in this bill is $541,314,144. This amount is $12,958,582 in excess of the appropriations for the current fiscal year. The increase is more than accounted for, however, by the increase allowed in the Veterans' Bureau, amounting to $14,415,000, so that, aside from the Veterans' Bureau activities, the bill is $1,456,418 less than the appropriations for the present fiscal year, which includes the increase above the Budget of $1,500,000, which the committee has given the Shipping Board for reconditioning and operating ships for carrying coal to foreign ports, as well as the increases needed for salary adjustments under the Welch Act.

AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION

The present authorization of expenditures by the American Battle Monuments Commission in the erection of suitable memorials to the World War dead in France and other foreign countries totals $3,000,000, of which there has already been appropriated $2,695,750. Upon the recommendation of General Pershing and of the Budget Bureau the committee has increased the total authorization to $4,500. This does not involve any increase or modification in the program of memorials to be erected, but is necessitated by two considerations—

First. The prices for materials and construction in Europe have increased approximately 40 per cent and are still rising.

Second. The commission's original project did not include the cost of landscape gardening and other beautification features in the cemeteries, as such work was under the jurisdiction of the War Department and was to have been paid for from their appropriations.

The commission and the War Department, however, have both concurred in the view that the beautification and landscape features are so clearly related to the memorials themselves that they should be planned and executed by a single authority. Consequently funds which would otherwise be appropriated in the War Department bill are included in the present bill.

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE COMMISSION

Progress of the work on this bridge is practically up to schedule. Colonel Grant assured the committee he does not anticipate there will be any necessity for asking an increase in the original amount of the authorization for the project.

The modification of plans recently adopted by which the Rock Creek-Potomac Parkway will underpass the bridge approach at the Washington end will add approximately $160,000 to the cost, which will be cared for by omitting certain unessential ornamental features of the bridge and its approaches contained in the original plans.

The bridge can be made available for traffic some time during the calendar year 1931 by providing temporary approaches, but the adoption of such measures will depend somewhat on whether the Virginia State highway authorities have the State highway approach to the bridge ready by that time.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think the House would be interested to know, if the gentleman has time to go into it for us, something of the progress being made by the United States Shipping Board. In other words, we would like to know how many vessels are in operation, whether the total number is being decreased, and whether or not the same amount of tonnage is being carried in our own bottoms that we have carried within recent years, and something with reference to the cost of operation, whether any progress is being made along those lines.

Mr. WASON. Will my friend from Alabama wait until I get to the Shipping Board item?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought that he had passed that item.

Mr. WASON. No.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Substantial increases have been granted for the Civil Service Commission, necessitated largely by the increased work in connection with examinations for positions in the Prohibition Unit, the employees of which were placed under civil service by a recent act of Congress.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The bill also includes a substantial increase for additional personnel in the Federal Power Commission.

This commission was created by the act of June 10, 1920, and is composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture. The act authorized the appointment of an executive secretary at a specified salary, and also authorized the detail of an officer from the United States Engineer Corps to serve the commission as engineer officer.

The additional personnel needed for the work of the commission had been performed prior to the present fiscal year by employees detailed from the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture. Last year's appropriation bill provided that the employees theretofore detailed from the respective departments should become permanent employees of the Federal Power Commission and their salaries were appropriated for in last year's bill and are also included in the bill now before the House.

This commission is growing in size and importance from year to year. It has jurisdiction over the granting of licenses for the development of all water power upon the public domain and upon all the navigable streams of the United States. Under the law the licenses so granted are for a period not exceeding 50 years, and upon condition that at the end of the period the Government may recapture the project by reimbursing the licensee in the sum of the actual investment.

Protection of the interests of the Government in connection with possible recapture in the future involves a careful policing of the accounts of the licensees in order that the question of the net cost of such subject may be fairly and properly determined.

The commission has scarcely entered upon this phase of its duties, for the reason that it has been heretofore engrossed with the work involved in the consideration of applications for licenses. The necessity of protecting the interests of the Government with respect to the inspection and supervision of the accounts under licenses already granted has constrained the commission because of lack of sufficient personnel to slow down the consideration of applications for licenses with a view of overcoming some of the arrearage in the work of supervision of accounts. This situation is partly the occasion of the increased appropriations carried for the commission in the present bill.

The importance of this work is emphasized by the fact that the total amounts eventually involved in connection with the projects already under license, if the projects are completed, will aggregate approximately $1,000,000,000.

Another important duty imposed upon the commission by law is that of the regulation of rates for power, which is transmitted by licensees in interstate commerce. The Supreme Court of the United States having recently decided that in such cases neither the State of origin nor the State of ultimate use of the power has jurisdiction in the matter. This provision of the law has imposed no serious duty upon the commission up to the present time, but it is certain in the future to become an important element of the work of the commission.

The committee feels that the heavy responsibilities imposed upon this commission have been admirably discharged under the efficient administration of the present executive secretary, Mr. O. C. Merrill, who was formerly an engineer in the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture, and who has held his present position from the inception of the commission.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

A substantial increase is carried in the bill for the Federal Trade Commission, necessitated by inquiries which are now being conducted under two Senate resolutions, one pertaining to public utilities and the other to chain stores. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars has been made immediately available to enable the commission to prosecute these investigations without delay.

HOUSING CORPORATION

The liquidation of the Housing Corporation is making satisfactory progress. The unsold real estate amounts to only $115,000 in value, consisting of unimproved property with the exception of two dwellings. The outstanding balances on mortgages amount to $3,508,796, and collections on these mortgages are practically current.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The bill carries a material increase in the appropriations for the Interstate Commerce Commission, the committee having approved 13 additional examiners to accelerate the disposition of the large accumulation of formal cases on the commission's docket.

Another substantial increase was for the work of completing the valuation of the property of the carriers.

The 3-year program initiated by the committee, the period for which ended on June 30, 1928, is well advanced toward completion. It is expected that the program will be practically completed within the coming fiscal year.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The bill authorizes the construction of a full-scale wind tunnel at a cost not to exceed $900,000, and carries an appropriation of $525,000 toward its construction. This tunnel when completed will enable the aeronautics committee to conduct valuable experiments for the solution of necessary and valuable problems of aviation.

TARIFF COMMISSION

A moderate increase in the appropriations for the Tariff Commission is carried in the bill to enable that body to meet the ever-increasing duties in connection with the flexible provisions of the tariff law and the material increases in its activities which will be necessitated in connection with the impending general tariff revision.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD

The United States Shipping Board, in its administration of the Merchant Fleet Corporation, has made a creditable showing in the matter of reduction in operating losses. This is reflected in the reduction in the estimates of appropriations to cover such losses for the ensuing year. The current appropriation for that purpose is $13,400,000 and the Budget estimate for 1930 is $9,500,000. The amount carried in the bill under this head is $11,134,250, of which $134,250 is represented by personnel estimated for under the head of the Shipping Board but which the committee has transferred to and recommended in connection with the appropriation for the operation of the fleet. The reasons of the transfer of appropriation are fully set forth in the report accompanying the bill.

The Fleet Corporation has 21 ship lines, which involve about 250 active vessels. There is no fleet now in operation under private ownership that approaches in size the fleet operated by the Merchant Fleet Corporation.

The committee is gratified at the creditable showing made by the Shipping Board in the continual reductions in the operating deficit of the fleet.

COAL-CARRYING VESSELS

Last year Congress authorized expenditure of $1,000,000 in reconditioning vessels for carrying coal in foreign trade. The Shipping Board at the present time has barely gotten the project under way. About six vessels have been reconditioned, but only two voyages have been begun, neither of which was completed at the time the bill was under consideration by the committee. The committee was convinced that Congress having once set its hands to the plow would not be disposed to turn back at this stage. Evidence before the committee indicated the advisability of a further enlargement of this enterprise, particularly with reference to encouraging trade with South America, and has added $1,500,000 to the bill for this purpose.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU

The work of the United States Veterans' Bureau is proceeding in a most satisfactory manner under the present able and efficient administrative director, General Hines. The execution of the various laws enacted by Congress for the benefit of the veterans has necessitated certain increases in the appropriations for 1930. These increases total $14,415,000, and the Budget estimate for the various items under this bureau have been granted in full. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes. Gentlemen of the committee, this bill which we now have under consideration carries an aggregate appropriation of $541,314,144 for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, and commissions for the fiscal year of 1930, while in the fiscal year of 1929 the sum of $528,355,562 was appropriated. The Budget estimate for 1930 is $540,917,930.

There is, therefore, an increase of $12,958,582 over the same appropriation bill of 1929, and an increase of $396,214 over the amount recommended by the Budget. In connection with the $12,958,582 it was more than accounted for by the increase of $14,415,000 in the amount recommended for the Veterans' Bureau. Aside from the Veterans' Bureau there was an actual decrease in the amount recommended in the bill as compared with the amount appropriated for the current year, $1,456,418, notwithstanding the fact that the committee has included under the Shipping Board an item for $1,500,000 for reconditioning vessels for carrying coal to foreign ports.

The two largest amounts appropriated under this bill are those for the United States Veterans' Bureau, totaling $499,975,000 and the United States Shipping Board, which is $9,994,000.

For the Executive Office the sum of $458,120 is appropriated.

American Battle Monuments Commission	$600,000
Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission	2,000,000
Board of Mediation	348,270
Board of Tax Appeals	725,863
Bureau of Efficiency	228,130
Civil Service Commission	1,251,562
Commission of Fine Arts	9,080
Employees' Compensation Commission	4,077,326
Federal Board for Vocational Education	822,520
Federal Power Commission	170,250
Federal Radio Commission	164,440
Federal Trade Commission	1,289,760
General Accounting Office	4,132,000
Housing Commission	397,950
Interstate Commerce Commission	8,213,825
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics	1,300,000
Smithsonian Institution	1,047,573
Tariff Commission	815,000
U. S. Geographic Board	9,200
U. S. Shipping Board	9,994,000
U. S. Veterans' Bureau	499,975,000

And in addition, the permanent annual appropriations for 1930 amount to $107,456,991.

In order to have a permanent record and to call the attention of the Members generally to the objects and amounts for which these appropriations are made, I ask unanimous consent to insert herewith a prepared statement thereof.

As a member of the minority of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on independent offices we have presented for your consideration a bill which will, I hope, commend itself to the membership of the House.

Our subcommittee has labored for the past few weeks in session with our esteemed chairman, Congressman WASON, and Congressmen SUMMERS of Washington, ALLEN, and VINSON of Kentucky, while conducting hearings with the representatives of the various independent offices before our committee. From a general résumé thereof, I believe that the employees in the Federal departments are rendering most efficient and capable service, worthy of much praise and recognition. But I warn the Congress not to reduce too far the needed appropriations for the operation of our governmental agencies, and thus cripple and retard the progress that is being made in bringing about the greatest possible degree of efficiency compatible with the amount of money that is appropriated annually.

The men who left their jobs, their homes and relatives, to enlist in defense of the lives and property of the American people in time of war, some of whom were crippled and maimed for life, while others paid the supreme sacrifice, must be well and properly cared for, and adequate and up-to-date hospital facilities provided.

In that connection I am glad to hear that the Veterans' Bureau are going to extend their hospital operations by asking an appropriation of $10,000,000 for the building of hospitals, which I think is a very good and wise thing to do.

I am for an American merchant marine, supported, maintained, and developed along with the other big institutions of this great country. I believe in the principle of Federal aid. We must have a merchant marine capable of transporting our enormous overseas commerce and serving the American people in time of war and distress, when it is absolutely necessary that food and supplies be furnished our forces on land and sea, and act as an auxiliary to the Navy.

Our country from its beginning were shipbuilders and mariners. We had shipyards and shipbuilding in all its branches, and we should remain steadfast to that policy. We rank about eighth in the shipping business, and although the early founders of this Government advocated and encouraged the building of a large merchant marine, our present shipping business is at low ebb. A merchant marine is vital to the Nation's supremacy. We should support by voice and money its upbuilding so that it will be an example to others and a credit to ourselves.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will it interrupt the gentleman at that point?

Mr. CULLEN. No.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Last year or last Congress, I recall, the Congress appropriated $10,000,000 for the purpose of reconditioning two ships, with a view of balancing our trans-Atlantic passenger service. A report was made to the President by some bureau or board of the Navy Department. So far I have been unable to learn what the report was, and I have not heard it was favorable. We could recondition the two ships, the Monticello and the Mount Vernon, for about half as much as to build new ships. Those two ships were never in that service, but had excellent service under the Shipping Board, and I was wondering if the gentleman or his committee had obtained from those who appeared before the committee the reason why this money was not used, why these boats were not reconditioned for the North Atlantic passenger service?

Mr. CULLEN. The answer is this, that when the Shipping Board advertised for bids to recondition the Mount Vernon and the Monticello they found the money appropriated by us in the last Congress was insufficient to recondition both of them, and probably would only recondition one, so that they stopped.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman mean to say they really made some move toward reconditioning those boats? I understood nothing was ever done. The gentleman says they did advertise for bids?

Mr. CULLEN. They advertised for bids, yes; but they found that the moneys appropriated were not sufficient.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Did that board make a report?

Mr. CULLEN. I think it is in our hearings.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The board did make a report?

Mr. CULLEN. I think so.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And advertised for bids? If they did, I must have overlooked it.

Mr. CULLEN. I think you will find it in the report.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is in the hearings?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

By the act of Congress of date July 4, 1789, a discount of 10 per cent was allowed on all goods in ships owned by American citizens, and a further rebate was allowed on tea imported from the East Indies in American vessels. With such aid and encouragement, the tonnage carried in American bottoms increased from 123,893 in 1789 to something over 400,000 in 1792. In other words, the percentage of exports and imports increased from 25.6 to 92 per cent. As early as 1840 the British Government adopted the policy of granting subsidies to certain steamship lines, and shortly Italy, France, and the other European countries followed. Presidents Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison strongly advocated relief to the shipping industry, and it was no other than Thomas Jefferson who said:

To force shipbuilding is to establish shipyards, is to form magazines, to multiply useful hands, to produce artists and workmen of every kind who may be found at once for the peaceful speculations of commerce and for the terrible wants of war.

From the year 1831 to 1841 the number of foreign ships in our ports increased over 400 per cent, while during the same period American ships only increased 40 per cent. The British Government in 1834 granted to certain lines a subsidy of $850,000, and in a few years such subsidies were increased from three to four million dollars. It is very significant that those who advocated and initiated the movement to compete in the shipping business with the British lines by granting subsidies were men of power, leadership, and national influence, such as Presidents Jefferson and Polk and Senator Thomas King, of Georgia, and by the largest shipowner of more recent time, A. A. Low, Esq., father of Hon. Seth Low, former mayor of New York and president of Columbia College and of the New York Chamber of Commerce. There was practically no increase in the amount of imports and exports carried in American ships up to the time of the great World War, the proportion of tonnage transported in American vessels being 8.2 per cent in 1901, while in 1914 it was only 8.6 per cent. The Merchant Marine Commission established by Congress in 1904, composed of five Senators and five Representatives, with Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, as chairman, recommended tonnage subsidies on cargo vessels to certain steamship lines to the West Indies, South America, South Africa, Australia, and the Orient, but this provision embodied in the measure that passed the Senate was eliminated in the House.

It was in recent years, under President Harding's administration, if my memory serves me right, we passed a ship subsidy bill, which was defeated in the Senate, and I voted for it.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I will.

Mr. BACON. Is the gentleman aware that three boats are being built by Germany at this time that will probably make 30 knots?

Mr. CULLEN. Then I would make ours 30 knots to match. I am also aware that they have under construction now 20 vessels of from 25,000 to 30,000 tons ready for the North Atlantic trade.

Mr. BACON. I think the gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. CULLEN. The Italian Government alone has spent approximately $4,600,000 annually in the construction and operation of their ships and mail lines to China, India, North and East Africa, and Egypt; and France has expended about $13,000,000 a year in the equipment and operation of its various ship lines to Australia, eastern Mediterranean, Brazil, and other countries; while England is also appropriating between seven and eight million dollars every year in aiding and developing her merchant marine.

Italy is building ships of twenty-five to thirty thousand tonnage, while France and Germany are also forging ahead under a very large shipbuilding program, reconditioning and thoroughly equipping all their old ships on hand and constructing additional ships. To-day our North American lines are badly in need of two modern vessels of 30,000 tonnage to supply the great demand for additional export, passenger, mail, and freight services along with the Leviathan, George Washington, President Harding, America, President Roosevelt, and the Republic. Sailing of these ships should be made at least three times a week, and thus eliminate the great delay and congestion entailed by sailing only once every 10 days or two weeks.

I am in favor of building two more ships for the North Atlantic service of 30,000 tons, with a speed of not less than 25 or 30 knots, to balance the fleet which is now operating in the trans-Atlantic trade, and which would also act as auxiliaries in times of stress.

The Shipping Board and Merchant Fleet Corporation are showing a great desire to have their business in which they are engaged firmly established along strict business lines, and in my opinion are making excellent progress in that direction. They are doing good work; there is no question about it. And since we have put vessels under their jurisdiction as a result of the war, we find it wise in our judgment to leave them alone instead of criticizing them unnecessarily. They are doing work commendatory not alone to themselves but to the Congress and the people of the United States.

I am also fully convinced that the wisest and best policy is to have shipyards and train men to become proficient and experienced shipbuilders, as this feature of our ship program is just as important to the upbuilding of a merchant marine for reconditioning and repair in order that our ships can be kept up to that high standard worthy of the merchant marine of a great country and place our business at least on a par with that of the foreign nations.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield at that particular point?

Mr. CULLEN. I will.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am advised that the Palmetto Line, after making 46 trips under the Shipping Board, lost more than a million dollars last year, and in the face of that it was bought by a private concern. I am just wondering why a private concern would buy a shipping line with that deficit staring them in the face unless they could see how they could run the line much better than the Shipping Board.

Mr. CULLEN. A business corporation, with money invested in those lines, if they could not see something in the future as to the investment, would naturally hesitate to invest. I do not know whether that is the result of experience in management or not, but I know, as a shipping man, that there were many times when we ran our vessels not only across the north Atlantic but to South America when we were on the red side of the ledger.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not true that the fact that the Palmetto Line bought those ships for a song, approximately $300,000 for 10 cargo carriers, and the further fact that they were enabled under the merchant marine act for 1928 to get a 10-year mail contract made it possible for that line to run in private operation?

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and he probably knows about that.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I can not see why these private concerns could get more favorable treatment in handling United States mails than the Shipping Board itself.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is because the Congress has specifically provided, under the merchant marine act of 1928, that the Government may make 10-year mail contracts with citizens of the United States; and that was offered as an inducement for purchasers to buy ships from the United States when the Post Office Department and Shipping Board determined such contracts were advisable.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Under the shipping act could the Government itself get those contracts?

Mr. CULLEN. I think perhaps it could; but in this case the contracts were permitted to be made as an inducement to privately operated lines.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am anxious that the American lines shall get contracts to carry the mail and that those ships will go out of rating.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Of course the gentleman knows that the Leviathan and American ships of the United States Lines are the only first-class passenger lines flying our flag on the North Atlantic lane. Is it designed to encourage the building of fast passenger and cargo vessels in connection with the disposal of these ships to private owners? Does the gentleman know whether, in the advertisements of the United States Lines, they are now imposing as a condition that any purchaser of a ship of the United States shall agree to build under the present loan laws two new up-to-date fast passenger and cargo vessels such as the gentleman describes?

Mr. CULLEN. I am not altogether familiar with that, but I think I am safe in saying that if the United States Lines on the North Atlantic are sold at satisfactory prices there is a condition involved to recondition the Monticello and the Mount Vernon.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Of course that would only go part way, but it would help some American shipyards to recondition the vessels.

Mr. CULLEN. I am in harmony with the gentleman's suggestion as to that.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The gentleman may recall that a bill was introduced at the last session of Congress to require that any sale of United States Lines should be on the condition that the purchaser should build two such ships.

Mr. CULLEN. I think that was provided for in connection with the repair of these vessels.

In closing, it might be well to mention as regards ship operation that originally the board had 45 main cargo lines, 7 passenger lines, with 91 managing operators or charterers. The ship lines were afterwards reduced through consolidation or abandonment to 37 in number. Up until 1924 only 1 of the board's established lines had been sold to private interests.

To date 17 lines have been sold, consisting of 134 vessels, and these lines are now in operation under private American ownership. The vessels, totaling 5,112,743 tons, as well as 489 ships for scrapping, totaling 2,024,710 tons. The aggregate totals of ships sold amount to 1,668, representing in cargo ships 8,080,631 dead-weight tons and 282,674 gross tons for passenger vessels, with aggregate sales prices of $252,756,615.05.

The board now has 21 ship lines, which involve about 250 active vessels. It has 405 ships in inactive status, including 9 vessels undergoing Dieselization and 11 in "spot" status, with 385 in lay-up.

I would like to see them act on the mandate of Congress with regard to the repair of ships that are carrying coal. I supported that project in the subcommittee. I think that is a very good business project, at least if we can get preferential rights from the railroads in regard to carrying coal.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY. In looking at the hearings I find that special stress has been laid on the amount of money used in reconditioning those ships so that it would be possible to carry coal in them. I understand that quite a little space is given in these hearings to finding fault with the proposition to make provision for the shipping of coal, but in the committee they never batted an eye on several million dollars providing for the reconditioning of two passenger ships. I am wondering what is underneath this. Has any information come to the committee?

Mr. CULLEN. I do not know what is back of that.

Mr. MURPHY. I noticed that in the hearings.

Mr. CULLEN. Two of these ships were to be reconditioned to carry coal. I think that one of them was sold. I am not sure about that, however. I think that is good business that they should be reconditioned.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes. They could not dispose of them unless they were. I notice in the remarks made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] yesterday that only one ship had made a trip to Mediterranean ports. Yet the hearings say that 10 trips have been made. I was wondering how that thing works.

Mr. CULLEN. That, I think, is shown in the report of June 30.

Mr. MURPHY. They think that will be the law.

Mr. CULLEN. Five lines were sold during the fiscal year 1928, including the three remaining cargo services on the Pacific, thus disposing into private American hands all of the board's lines in trans-Pacific trade. The board has since sold 12 vessels which were in lay up on the Pacific coast, thereby closing out all remaining cargo vessels and taking the board out of active operation and ownership on the coast. Individual vessels sold during the fiscal year 1928 for unrestricted operation total 20.

The other day, prior to getting up this statement, I happened to look over the Lloyds Register, and I thought it might be of interest to the Members of the House generally to know, in regard to the construction of merchant vessels, that 81 per cent of all construction of merchant vessels, according to the report of Lloyds Register, which is an English register, is being done in Great Britain. Now, gentlemen, we ought to do something in regard to our merchant marine, and I hope and sincerely trust that the next Congress will take up this most important subject and put our flag where it should be on the seven seas of the globe. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further general debate, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read down to line 16, page 6.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS

For expenses made necessary by the act entitled "An act establishing a Commission of Fine Arts," approved May 17, 1910 (U. S. C. p. 1295, sec. 104), including the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference, and payment of actual traveling expenses of the members and secretary of the commission in attending meetings of the commission either within or outside of the District of Columbia, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the commission, $7,380, of which amount not to exceed $4,280 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee to what extent the Fine Arts Commission is being consulted in the design of the public buildings for which Congress has provided in the District of Columbia and also throughout the United States?

Mr. WASON. The only answer I can make to my colleague is that I understand they are complying with the requirements of the law whenever any activity of the Government asks for their opinion or wherever the law provides that they shall act.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is this compliance a purely perfunctory compliance or is the advice of the Fine Arts Commission really sought and followed in connection with the many millions of dollars we are now spending on public buildings?

Mr. WASON. I understand it is, but we made no inquiry to what extent.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the work of the Federal Power Commission as authorized by law, including traveling expenses; contract stenographic reporting services, and not exceeding $600 for press-clipping service, law books, books of reference, and periodicals, $165,750, of which amount not to exceed $131,800 shall be available for personal services, and of this amount not to exceed $127,200 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the subcommittee whether this is a sufficient appropriation for the Federal Power Commission. The chairman will recall that at the last session of Congress we had a bill before the House in connection with the Federal Power Commission which did not pass, and it was stated at the time that the Federal Power Commission had so much work on its hands and had so many of these projects to look into that they were hampered and could not possibly do the work with the personnel and funds then available. In the meantime, if they did not act, there would be great danger of some of the water power under the jurisdiction of the commission being usurped and used contrary to the provisions of the law. That was stressed to some extent in the House last year, and while there is a slight increase in the appropriation this year I would like to know if the committee is satisfied that the commission can keep abreast of its current work.

Mr. WASON. I will say to my colleague that I understood from the commission that with this amount they could function efficiently with the work, although they will probably need an increase for the next year, 1931, for additional personnel.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The point I am interested in is not exactly the same one raised by the gentleman from New York. I would like to know what they are going to do with this additional $57,000.

Mr. WASON. One of the important items making up that appropriation is what they call policing the accounts of the work that has been done so as to keep the valuation of the different projects up to date in case of a transfer. It is otherwise known as the recapture by the Government if such action is required at the end of the license period.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Did you increase the amount for press-clipping service, for stenographic hire, and additional periodicals?

Mr. WASON. No; it was largely for additional personnel.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Additional employees?

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman know how many they are taking on?

Mr. WASON. I think about 10 more persons.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And they are to be engaged on what sort of service?

Mr. WASON. Policing the accounts and bringing the different items of the record up to date, so that they can keep them current as the years pass.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It takes 10 men to police the accounts of the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It will take more than that.

Mr. WASON. I mean the accounts of the licensees. The gentleman will understand that these activities have been promoted under a license from the Government, and these men in the Federal Power Commission oversee the work of the licensees and check up their books and accounts—expenditures, income, and so forth.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That covers the entire country then.

Mr. WASON. That covers the activities of the United States Government in respect of these water-power projects.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Claims of $297,000,000 are involved.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman means plans instead of claims.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Plans or claims. On page 132 of the hearings the gentleman will find a complete statement that is very enlightening.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can the gentleman from New Hampshire inform us whether the commission will be able to employ the necessary experts and accountants to keep abreast of this valuation work which is so important?

Mr. WASON. They gave the impression they were satisfied for the ensuing year with this personnel.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With the increase the gentleman has provided in this bill?

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is, the commission itself

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If they say so, then it is their responsibility.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I wish to follow the same line indicated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] and to make inquiry in regard to the very rapid increase in the expenditures of this bureau or commission.

True, the Federal Power Commission is a very important commission and it is doing a very important work, but when I see one of these newer commissions begin to go forward by leaps and bounds in its expenditures I feel like making inquiry as to whether the increases are demanded by the work required of the commission.

I note that since last year the expenditure has jumped up from $108,000 to $165,000, in round numbers; that last year not to exceed $87,000 was to be available for personal services; and that $83,000 was to be expended in the District of Columbia. In this bill the amount to be expended is $165,000, for services $131,000, and not to exceed $127,000 of this amount is available for personal services in the District of Columbia.

These figures indicate a very rapidly growing commission, and I am wondering just why this particular commission is growing so rapidly, and why all of it, or practically all of it, is to be expended inside the District of Columbia. Is there not required some policing of accounts at places outside the District of Columbia?

Mr. WASON. They travel outside the District of Columbia, but they are on the pay roll as of the District of Columbia.

Mr. TILSON. It is practically all expended within the District of Columbia, it would seem, and yet this is a commission which regulates power activities all over the country.

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I say that this commission has the right to call on the three departments or on many departments of the Government for any information, and the various departments have their experts to furnish the information. I can not see why this increase is necessary, although it may be. I am not informed, frankly, but it is remarkable to see how this item for services in the District of Columbia is growing year by year.

Mr. WASON. The gentleman will recall that in the last appropriation bill the policy to which he has referred was changed. Originally, the details were one man from each of three departments, and they kept increasing the employees in this way until last year when it was changed, and instead of having details from the departments, they were put on the pay roll of the Federal Power Commission and taken off the expenditures of the several departments where the details came from. All the employees now are under the executive secretary, Mr. Merrill, and the appropriations are made to the Federal Power Commission to cover these expenditures.

Mr. McDUFFIE. How many employees are there in the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. WASON. They have 29 or 30 for this year, and next year they asked for and have been allowed by the committee an increase of 10, making 40. The statement of Mr. Merrill to the committee is that the work is behind and he desires to get it current. One of the things that has been neglected, as the activities have spread and grown, is the policing of the accounts of licensees, which my friend will understand. Under the act there is a provision for recapture at the end of the license period.

Mr. McDUFFIE. There is the power of recapture after 50 years, but that is a long time off.

Mr. WASON. But the accounts of the licensees should be kept accurately policed during such period.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then, the gentleman is providing for 10 additional auditors?

Mr. WASON. The commission calls this work the policing of accounts, and I would say they are to be accountants or auditors or perhaps some engineers.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman will recall there was an effort made to enlarge this commission under the terms of a bill brought upon this floor, which the House refused to pass. Under the provisions of that bill the commission could have grown into a bureau as large as the Interstate Commerce Commission, but the House did not pass that legislation.

This rather large increase for personnel in the District of Columbia leads one to question necessarily, or to at least ask for information, as to why so much money is needed, and this was my purpose in seeking the information. If additional employees are needed I want them to have them, but the question is, Are they really needed? This is what the House wants to know.

Mr. WASON. I am satisfied they are, and let me call the gentleman's attention to page 135 of the hearings, where this statement is made:

> Under sections 19 and 20 of the act, the commission is authorized to exercise regulatory power—that is, the regulation of rates, services, and securities—not only of its licensees but of customers of its licensees who are buying power from them and selling it in the public service, and of subsidiaries of licensees, the stock of which is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by a licensee.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed on this paragraph for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said, I think it is only fair that the RECORD should show that the Federal Power Commission is the only supervisory agency which the Federal Government has over power companies using water power in streams under Federal control; that the various power companies throughout the United States are so well organized, with such an army of expert accountants and other kinds of experts, that the people of this country are in need of the protection which the Federal Power Commission is giving them.

The attention of the committee was called to the increase of expenditures of this commission. It is only fair to note in connection with the expenditures that the receipts of the commission from June 30, 1926, total $107,414, while the estimated receipts for 1930 are $718,663. The receipts for reimbursing costs of administration in 1926 were $317,432, while the estimated receipts for the present fiscal year are $1,103,539, so that the receipts are greater in proportion to the increase than the expenditures, as pointed out by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. I note an increase in personnel of 10—from 30 last year to 40—in this bill, according to the gentleman from New Hampshire. That is 33 per cent increase in the personnel, while the amount available for personnel service in the District of Columbia is increased 50 per cent. Are the 10 additional men high-priced men?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They ought to be to compete with the high-priced accountants and the high-priced jugglers of figures of the power companies. We ought to go out and get the very best employees we can to keep up with them.

Mr. TILSON. You can not always tell by the price you pay how expert they are.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The report shows that the receipts for the use of the Government dams has jumped 50 per cent, and the cost of administration 50 per cent; and some increases run as high as 100 per cent. It seems to me if Congress errs in any way it errs in not giving the Federal Power Commission unlimited funds. There is now going on in this country a struggle for the absolute control over all the water power throughout the country. The rates are fixed on the valuation of the plants, and if we have a power commission on the job that will keep the companies to an honest valuation instead of permitting them to fix and juggle their figures, and get all sorts of fictitious and theoretical valuations, the American people will save many millions of dollars.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does not the gentleman know that fixing the rates is done by the various public utilities of the various States?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This applies only to water power under jurisdiction of the Federal Government. As to the public service commissions in some States I will say that they were created to protect the public, but in some States the public service commissions are the best allies the power companies have.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Federal Radio Commission, $164,440.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that to make a contribution to the discussion of the preceding paragraph. If the whole report is taken into consideration there is found on page 19 the increases provided in the salaries carried in the section of the bill there discussed. The increase in that section is $277,722; that is on account of the Welch Act. That is found to be 13¾ per cent of the increase provided in the bill. That being true, and applying those figures to the increase under discussion in connection with the Water Power Commission, I am sure that it will indicate that the increase provided for personnel are in line with other departments. I thought it was worth a moment's attention in connection with the general increases provided under the Welch bill.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Locomotive inspection: For all authorized expenditures under the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "To promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto" (U. S. C. p. 1439, sec. 22), as amended by the act of March 4, 1915, extending "the same powers and duties with respect to all parts and appurtenances of the locomotive and tender" (U. S. C. p. 1440, sec. 30), and amendment of June 7, 1924 (U. S. C. p. 1440, sec. 27), providing for the appointment from time to time by the Interstate Commerce Commission of not more than 15 inspectors in addition to the number authorized in the first paragraph of section 4 of the act of 1911 (U. S. C. p. 1439, sec. 26), including such legal, technical, stenographic, and clerical help as the business of the offices of the chief inspector and his two assistants may require, and for traveling expenses, $459,000, together with $31,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1928, of which amount not to exceed $72,500 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman the status of the claim against the Government by which the United States was held by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be obligated to the railroads for carrying the mails for the past three years to the extent of $45,000,000 over and above the remuneration agreed upon between the railroads and the Post Office Department?

As I understand it, that results from some provision in the interstate commerce law whereby the railroads may have the right to review these contracts or obligations entered into by the Post Office Department with the railroads for carrying the mail; that under that law and the ruling of the commission it is claimed that the Government is obligated to pay an increased amount of $45,000,000 over and above the agreed compensation. I understand that has been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from the award made by the Interstate Commerce Commission and affirmed by the Court of Claims. I want to know what action, if any, is being taken to protect the rights of the Government in this matter; whether any action is being taken at this time, so that the fullest review of the matter may be had by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I expect that that matter would be handled by the Attorney General's office. It does not come before our committee. We are not a legislative committee in any event. Perhaps some legislative committee may have charge of it.

Mr. BRIGGS. This committee did not give any consideration to that phase of it?

Mr. WASON. No. The subject was not brought to our attention. We deal entirely with appropriations. If it was in the nature of a judgment it might come before us, but until that time we would not know.

Mr. BRIGGS. My understanding was that it might be necessary to come before the Congress for an appropriation of, say, $13,000,000, to pay for the period of one year, and then probably additional sums until the total amount of $45,000,000 extra was appropriated; but the gentleman says that he knows nothing about that?

Mr. WASON. No.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, it is my recollection—and I may be mistaken—that the deficiency bill at the last session carried a certain sum which was made necessary by the increase to the carriers for carrying the mails, due to this order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I remember the matter was discussed before the deficiency committee from the viewpoint of additional appropriations required.

Mr. BRIGGS. Have any payments been made upon those claims before the Supreme Court of the United States has finally adjudicated that the Government is actually liable therefor?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not mean to say that, but I do have a distinct recollection that the Postmaster General made a statement, or representatives from the Post Office Department, that the postal expenditures had been considerably increased by this ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I was not aware that there had been any appeal to the Supreme Court in the matter. The Interstate Commerce Commission was given authority, as I recall, by a statute to review the rates, and a hearing was had before the Interstate Commerce Commission on a petition from the railroads, which, as I recall, was resisted by the Post Office Department and was adjudicated in the manner stated by the gentleman.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. There was a report that it would be taken into the courts.

Mr. BYRNS. I am reminded by the gentleman from South Dakota that the matter was taken into the courts.

Mr. BRIGGS. The thing that I am interested in is in knowing whether in truth and in fact that is being done. It is my understanding that the matter was heard on an appeal before the Court of Claims; that it was taken into the Court of Claims and the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission affirmed.

Then I have heard that the Government was appealing it to the Supreme Court of the United States, and I wanted to have that made clear. I wanted to make sure that the matter was being carried to the highest court in the land for final determination, so that the Government would not be subjected to this huge liability until the Supreme Court had actually said that it is liable.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the line of reasoning of my colleague from Texas, but we have no power in this committee to further his wish.

Mr. BRIGGS. I thought perhaps the committee had received some information about it in the course of the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation to operate ships or lines of ships which have been or may be taken back from purchasers by reason of competition or other methods employed by foreign ship owners or operators, there is hereby reappropriated the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10,000,000 made for similar purposes in the independent offices appropriation act for the fiscal year 1927: Provided, That no expenditure shall be made for the purposes of this paragraph from this sum without the prior approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 38, line 25, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the wages or salary of any alien seaman or steward if suitable American citizens are available for such employment."

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is not subject to the point of order. We may as well dispose of that first. I would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. WASON. It is imposing an executive duty on every person who pays an employee of the Shipping Board. He must first find out whether there is an American available for those positions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly; he has to find out the citizenship of everybody on the ship's manifest.

Mr. WASON. No; he has to find out whether there is an American citizen available for the job.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If there is any doubt in the chairman's mind, I am ready to argue the point of order; but I think the burden is on the gentleman making the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very glad to hear from the gentleman.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, it is imposing an executive duty upon the Shipping Board to determine the fact when they pay an employee or a steward whether there is an American citizen available for that work at the time that an alien is employed. Further than that, it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may we have the proposed amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the LaGuardia amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is absolutely a limitation. It imposes no new duty upon the employing official of the United States Shipping Board, United States Lines. As everyone on the floor knows, when a person is employed by a ship his citizenship must be ascertained. It must go on the ship's manifest, and whether or not an American citizen is available is known to the Shipping Board through their own employment agency. It adds no new duty; it is clearly a limitation on the appropriation. There are several limitations on this appropriation for the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, not having had time to look that amendment over until a second before it was offered, I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to rise in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not waive my right to speak to my amendment after the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor on his amendment.

Mr. WOOD. Let the gentleman go on then.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment or the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out this morning, the United States Lines are not only employing aliens but they are employing aliens in preference to American citizens. The Leviathan, which sailed on December 5, had in the steward's department 204 citizens and 452 aliens. The George Washington, which sailed on December 12, had in the steward's department 62 citizens and 257 aliens, over 4 to 1. The America, which sailed on December 27, had 67 citizens and 166 aliens in the steward's department; and the average runs along about the same proportion to every ship.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Where does the gentleman get his information?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman want to know?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. From the Shipping Board.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is the reason I asked; I wanted to know it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. From the assistant director of the sea-service bureau.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am very much obliged. I did not speak simply to hear my voice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Perhaps the gentleman thought I was off in my figures, but they are right.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I am asking for information; is it not almost impossible to secure Americans to do the work that these men have to do?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Where does the gentleman get the information?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. From the same source. I am advised by the director of the sea service bureau, New York, that the Merchant Line running out of New York has 97 per cent American citizens in their crew. There is no such thing as the work being menial. All honest work is honorable. The gentleman who is an expert on hotels knows that he can go to every first-class hotel in this country and in the best hotels the waiters, which correspond to this steward's department, are American citizens.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. You do not mean to tell me they are American citizens born in this country?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They are American citizens, nevertheless.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Are not these picked up on the other side because they can not get them on this side?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. My judgment is that the class of labor they need for this purpose to compete with other ships is in many cases to put in this foreign labor because they work mostly for the tips and the American will not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No. The salaries are fixed. My amendment does not affect the salaries. As the gentleman points out, they do recruit these men on the other side. These men have families on the other side. They do not contribute anything to our community. These ships are operated with public funds, and it is just as necessary to build up our own body of seamen on our ships as to build up the operation of the ships. At this time I charge that not only are the majority of these people aliens, but that American citizens are discriminated against in securing employment on United States Line ships.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Can you prove that American citizens are discriminated against?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. I can by citing the number who apply for these jobs and can not get them.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. If the gentleman will only listen I will say——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I prove that; and I prove that the men are available by citing the fact that the crews of American merchant lines are 97 per cent American.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. That does not prove it. If you prove that a lot of Americans have made application for these places and have been turned down, that would be something definite; but you are not proving your contention by citing the fact that other lines hire American citizens to fill these places.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Merchant lines are running out of New York with 97 per cent American crews. The gentleman asked for the proof. I have furnished the proof.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. You do not prove your contention by citing what other lines do.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have proved my charge, and I have shown you the figures.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. You did not say what I said.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not believe that with all that Congress is doing for the American merchant marine, as generously as we are appropriating funds to assist in the operation of these ships, we can afford to take a stand to-day and turn down an amendment that simply asks that American citizens be given the preference for employment on these ships. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, the task of obtaining employees for this steward service on the ships is certainly a very difficult one. They tell me it requires more time and more investigation and the exercise of a greater amount of judgment than is needed in the selection of the other employees needed by the Shipping Board. Instead of helping the merchant marine we will severely handicap it if we put this restriction upon it.

I take it for granted that, other things being equal, Americans would be employed in all these jobs. I take it for granted that we should select American citizens in the same spirit as the Englishman would select Englishmen.

We are selfish enough to do that. We have more confidence in our own people than we have in foreigners. But many cases arise where it is impossible to get Americans to fill these places, and if you are going to put this restriction in this bill you will open up the doorway to all sorts of troubles and all sorts of pulling and hauling and haranguing. Suppose there is a place open on board a ship and the authorities are looking for some one to fill it. Here is a man who has some one with him who says the law says you must employ the man if the man is an American citizen. He may or he may not be suitable. The fact that you are putting this restriction in gives opportunity for all this trouble. You ought to have the responsibility for the selection of these employees with the men who understand and control this employment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I leave that entirely in the discretion of the employing authorities.

Mr. WOOD. Yes; but every time a person presents himself and says he is available, you open the door for a lot of trouble, and we know they have enough trouble there now.

Mr. LEHLBACH. What is the standard as to suitability? Is it going to be left to the employing authorities or the courts to determine that?

Mr. WOOD. I say it simply opens up the doorway for all sorts of argument and trouble.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is not the gentleman aware of the discrimination that exists against the employment of American citizens in these ship lines?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The figures that I have show that on all boats operated by the Shipping Board—not all under the American flag—as high a percentage as 89 per cent of American crews is carried. Certainly the deck crews and the navigating personnel are all American citizens.

The gentleman from Indiana is correct when he says we will add to the troubles, or multiply the troubles, that already handicap them now if we adopt this amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to say now that if you take that attitude toward American labor some of us may take a similar attitude on the tariff.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], I can not but reach the conclusion that we should adopt this amendment. Those who oppose this amendment are strong advocates of a tariff on foreign products, which compete with the products of the United States Steel Corporation and other corporations, in order to protect the interests and welfare of the American people from unfair competition of foreign business and labor. They are also strong advocates of an American merchant marine. It is almost unbelievable that they should be voicing opposition to this amendment which gives preference to American citizens, as against aliens in the service of the merchant marine operated by the American Government at a considerable expense to the American taxpayers.

Those who are in favor of a reasonable protective tariff to protect the industry and the labor of America, and those who are advocating the policy of maintaining a truly American merchant marine should support this amendment. There is no good reason why American citizens should walk the streets out of employment while our Government continues to employ aliens, most of whom are not even residents of America.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. For a brief question.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Then the gentleman admits there is unemployment in this country under this prosperous Republican administration?

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman will admit that there is unemployment, but not nearly as much as stated by the gentleman from New York, the Hon. Alfred E. Smith, during the last campaign. There is nowhere near the amount of unemployment as there was at the close of the last Democratic administration.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment: In the last line of the amendment, after the word "are," insert "in the opinion of the United States Shipping Board," between the words "are" and "available."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND to the amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: In the last line of the amendment, after the word "are," insert the words "in the opinion of the United States Shipping Board."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported as it would read with the amendment I have offered, if adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment with the amendment to the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the wages or salary of any alien seamen or steward if suitable American citizens are, in the opinion of the United States Shipping Board, available for such employment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 20, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, on page 38, at line 12, I would like to correct the figures. They are printed as June 30, 1928, whereas they should be June 30, 1929.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, United States Shipping Board, $11,494,000: Provided, That of the sums herein made available under the United States Shipping Board not to exceed an aggregate of $350,000 shall be expended for compensation of regular attorneys employed on a yearly salary basis and for fees and expenses of attorneys employed in special cases.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 39, line 23, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the followlwing: "Provided further, That no part of the funds by this act appropriated shall be used to pay dues, fees, expenses, or disbursements for membership in the Continental Conference, the Mediterranean Conference, or in any permanent conference, committee, pool, agreement, or trust controlled by foreign steamship companies or in which the majority of members are foreign steamship companies."

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment as being legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair looks upon this, it appears to be a limitation, and the Chair holds it in order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to prevent the United States from continuing in a ridiculous position by reason of its membership, through the United States Lines, in the Continental Conference. The sailings, the schedules, the freight rates, the passenger rates, and the commissions paid to agents are all controlled by this conference which, in turn, is controlled by foreign steamship companies. Right under the noses of the officials of the United States Lines, the foreign steamship companies tell the United States Lines when they can sail, where they can sail, what they can charge; and then they come in and compete in the Cuban service, which for a long time was under the control of American ships. Last year the United States Shipping Board was told by the British companies that they could not increase their Indian trade; that their ships coming through the Suez Canal could not stop in India and take cargoes there, and they humbly bowed and submitted to that dictation.

Now, this continental conference is nothing but a pool or trust. It regulates the rates, which I believe is made legal under a provision of the shipping laws by simply filing a copy of the agreement with the United States Shipping Board. The United States Lines are outvoted in that conference about 8 to 1. We are entirely at their mercy.

Why, we brag and talk about what we are doing for our merchant marine. If we continue the recruiting for this marine service in foreign countries, as you have just sanctioned by your vote a few moments ago, and if we continue to permit the United States Lines to spend public funds for membership in these conferences controlled by foreign steamship companies, then, indeed, we are wasting millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, because we are not building a permanent American merchant marine, but simply playing second fiddle to Great Britain.

We have a rate war now, only it is one-sided. We go into the conferences in absolute good faith and we abide by the rules of the conference; we abide by the terms of the conference, and yet the foreign steamship companies compete with American lines and they are practically putting them out of business. I can not for the world see how anyone on the floor of this House can stand up and vote against this amendment unless, of course, he is looking after the interests of some British steamship company, and it would appear that the British steamship companies have a great many friends in this country.

Why, everything we do under a conference we have to submit to them. When our vessels are to sail must be submitted to them; how much commission we pay the ticket agents or the freight agents must be submitted to them.

I suppose some one will say this conference is a good thing. I would like to hear from anyone a justification of a membership in a conference which limits the sailing of American ships and then turns around and increases their own sailings in competition with an agreed schedule.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Suppose an occasion arose where those charged with the duty of operating these ships thought it was necessary to go into such a conference. The gentleman can imagine such a situation?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Under the language of the gentleman's amendment we could not have a representative at such a conference.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What benefit are we getting from it now?

Mr. McDUFFIE. As I have said, conditions may change.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. All right then, my amendment would not prevent a representative of the United States Lines conferring at any time or at all times with representatives of other lines, but this is a permanent institution. This is a real institution. The continental conference exists and it is an institution and the United States Lines through its membership is under the control and dictation of foreign steamship companies.

Mr. McDUFFIE. How much dues?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, whatever it is, I do not know. The terms are on file with the United States Shipping Board and this conference actually fixes the sailings and the rates and the commissions, and, as I said this morning, they limit the commissions paid to steamship agents and then they phone the agents to disregard them.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment.

I wish to say there is some truth in what the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has said with reference to violation of the rules adopted by these conferences, but if we are not to take part in them we will be infinitely worse off than we are now. It is true they adopted rates for the carrying of freight and for the carrying of passengers and they are supposed to keep the faith, but there is a rate war almost every year between the different shipping interests of the world.

If we are not represented, however, at these conferences the very gentlemen who are taking advantage of us now because of the fact we do keep the faith and they do not would be in a position to go a great deal further than they are going now, and simply say, "You did not take any part in our conference; you are not to be heard to complain now because of the fact that you might have come and presented your grievances or might have come and presented your views with reference to what the rates should be or should not be."

So we can not be hurt any more by staying in the conference and we can be hurt infinitely more if we stay out of it. I think when somebody is plotting against us we had better have somebody there to know what the plot is. I think when somebody is trying to intrigue against us we had better have some one there who will know the facts and then try to checkmate them the best we can. So there is every reason why we should still have a representative at this conference even though its agreements are violated, and there is no reason why we should not have some one there.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the United States Veterans' Bureau, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $125,000.

Mrs. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, with all the earnestness at my command I wish to urgently plead with the membership of this great body to pass this appropriation of $1,500,000 for reconditioning and operating ships for carrying coal to foreign ports. This appeal comes from one who lives in the heart of the coal fields of eastern Kentucky and one who is daily confronted with the paralyzed and depressed conditions of the coal industry, and is therefore in a position to know first-hand the pressing and desperate need for aid and relief.

The amount of this appropriation, together with the unexpended balance of the $1,000,000 authorized at the first session of the Seventieth Congress, will greatly strengthen us in the establishment and maintenance of the channels of export coal trade to foreign markets, which is most essential if we are to have any relief from the problem of overproduction.

It is the consensus of opinion and incontrovertible that the farmers of the Middle West, the textile manufacturers of the East and South, and the coal-producing States are in distress and need the immediate and instant attention of Congress. These are present-day pressing problems, and we are not doing our full duty to the working masses of our country if we do not grasp every opportunity to meet their needs and solve their problems. I contend that only by legislation can the rehabilitation and the stabilization of these great national assets be obtained.

As has been stated, the appropriation of $1,000,000 so generously granted at the last session was in the nature of an experiment; that is, to ascertain if it were feasible and of economic value as well as relief for overproduction to send our coal abroad. While the funds were available July 1, the Shipping Board did not begin work until October, 1928, thus making it impossible for those of us vitally concerned in this legislation to give you the exact facts and figures proving our contention that export coal trade will be of great value to the coal industry. Time will assuredly convince the business world that the policy of carrying our coal to foreign markets will be vastly beneficial to the great body of Americans who are striving to market coal at a reasonable ratio of profit.

This appropriation makes it possible for our Stars and Stripes, the red, the white, the blue, to proudly wave on the high seas, carrying the message to our mothers and sisters on foreign shores that we are the proud possessors of the king of energy—the finest coal in all the world. I thank you. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have printed in the RECORD the statement in the hearings showing the results of the operations of the Shipping Board during the year 1928.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the right to object, is not that rather a large table?

Mr. BRIGGS. It is a table in form, but not very long.

Mr. TILSON. In what kind of a form does the gentleman think it can be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BRIGGS. The usual form; it will go on two pages of the RECORD.

Mr. TILSON. It may require an inset.

Mr. BRIGGS. I do not think so; I think it can be set up on two pages. It shows the operation of the Shipping Board for 1928, and I think it will be informative to Members.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGGS. In order that the people of the United States may know the result of the operation of the Government fleet during the fiscal year 1928 the following statement submitted by the Shipping Board is presented. Without the services of the Government fleet the people of the United States would have paid many millions more in increased ocean freight rates than the amount of the operating deficit, and could not have transported the agricultural and manufactured products of this country to foreign lands with the needed expedition and dispatch. Adequate transportation facilities have assured delivery of American products in foreign markets when prices were best and the goods wanted. But for our own ships to serve our needs, the farmers and producers of various products would have lost additional millions in the shrinkage in the value of their commodities.

NOTE.[1]—This item includes all direct overhead of the United States Lines, with the exception of its advertising expense.
NOTE.[2]—The amounts shown under the caption "Inactive vessels and adjustments" in the monthly financial statements published during the fiscal year 1928 included the expenses of vessels inactive with managing operators and "adjustments" representing items applicable to vessels redelivered by managing operators but reported subsequent to the month in which the expenses of the last voyage or inactive period were included. Such "adjustment" items have been included in this consolidated statement under the "active" or "inactive" results shown above according to the classification to which applicable.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, on page 3 of the printed bill after line 18, I want to offer an amendment by inserting the words "independent establishment."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to return to page 3, line 18, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, after line 18, insert the words "independent establishment."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the figures and also the totals throughout the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the figures and the totals throughout the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16301, the independent offices appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LAGUARDIA moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 16301) to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment:

On page 38, line 25, strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following: "Provided, That no part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any alien seaman or steward if suitable American citizens are, in the opinion of the Shipping Board, available for such employment."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 10, noes 42.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 118, not voting 195, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WASON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LANHAM] is absent this afternoon on account of illness.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVENPORT], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ESTEP] were prevented from voting on this bill on account of the Ways and Means Committee being in session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 41 to the bill H. R. 15089, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes"; that the Senate further insists upon its amendments Nos. 20, 39, and 40 to said bill, disagreed to by the House, agrees to a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SMOOT, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. HARRIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MORRIS FOX CHERRY

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the action taken by the House to-day on the bill (H. R. 12538) for the benefit of Morris Fox Cherry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to vacate the action taken this morning by the House when the House agreed to the Senate amendment to the bill H. R. 12538. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12538, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12538, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Messrs. MORIN, JAMES, and MCSWAIN.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DISABLED VETERANS AND THEIR DEPENDENTS

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the appropriation bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the bill just passed carried an appropriation for various independent establishments of the Government of $541,314,144. Of this, $499,975,000 goes to the credit of the Veterans' Bureau, which has to do with administering the law extending benefits to World War veterans and their dependents. Approximately one-eighth of the revenues collected annually by the Government goes to meet this expense. This is astonishing no doubt to some, but more alarming, in my opinion, is that $43,500,000 of the appropriation for World War veterans and their dependents goes for overhead, there being 24,320 employees. The total amount appropriated for the Veterans' Bureau is $14,415,000 more than the preceding year and there are now 712 more employees in the bureau than a year ago.

The astonishing feature of the appropriation, that of overhead, shows $11.50 of every $100 handled by the bureau goes to pay salaries of the personnel, rent of quarters, transportation of employees in discharge of their duties, office supplies, and so forth.

In my opinion, Congress itself is in part responsible for the existing conditions, laws having been passed that makes administration most difficult. It is only proper to ask, "Has the Congress required the officials to function in a manner where the same result could be obtained with a reduction in personnel if the law was properly amended?"

I doubt if any individual among the executive officials of the Government is charged with more personal responsibility than the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. By that I mean Congress has enacted laws which charge him personally to do certain work, such as reviewing appeals, and so forth, outside of his general duties as head of this great bureau. Under the set-up now in operation the claim for compensation is filed with the regional manager. If the decision is adverse there is right of appeal to the central office board of appeals. Should this board sustain the decision of the regional manager, then, under the law, not rule or regulation, the claimant has the right of appeal to the director, who is charged by law to personally review the papers, his decision being final, except where the payment of insurance is involved, and in such a case the claimant can resort to the Federal court.

I maintain it is a physical impossibility for 10 men, devoting all their time to appeal cases, to give the appeals the consideration they deserve. This paragraph in the law should be amended without delay. The director should be relieved of this duty; he can not do this work and at the same time give his attention to the hundreds of problems which confront him daily. This condition can be charged to Congress.

While the Congress as a whole is responsible, still it must be remembered that no time since the original act was passed has the House had an opportunity to consider any amendment to the veterans' act other than under suspension of the rules, which means 40 minutes for debate and then a vote, with no opportunity to offer an amendment.

In order to carry out the mandate of Congress which requires him to personally review appeal cases the director has set up an advisory group on appeals. This group reviews the papers, prepares a brief, and forwards the case to the director. If the director can do as much as read all the briefs, he is a superman. Thousands of cases are appealed. I have carefully gone over cases handled by the advisory group and in more than one instance have convinced the director the papers were not properly briefed. In one case I recall I showed where the brief was directly in contrast to the facts as shown by sworn affidavits in the file. He was quick to respond in each instance to my appeal for further consideration.

The Veterans' Bureau was created to meet a great emergency. My knowledge of its operation has been gained from personal contact since its very beginning. Every veteran's case that is called to my attention I handle personally. It is my duty as his representative to see that he receives everything he is entitled to under the law.

CONSOLIDATION

The committee on expenditures, of which I happen to be a member, is at the present time considering a bill to authorize the President to consolidate and coordinate governmental activities affecting all war veterans and their dependents.

The hearings on this bill have disclosed that it is now costing the Government in excess of $750,000,000 annually to take care of the veterans and their dependents. The Pension Bureau, a part of the Department of the Interior, the National Soldiers' Homes, looked after by the War Department, and the Veterans' Bureau would be brought under one head by the passage of the bill.

General Hines, Director of the Veterans' Bureau, favors the passage of the bill. He feels it would curtail overhead and improve administration, as well as standardize treatment given to all veterans. He told the committee such a consolidation would result in the largest organization in the Government from the standpoint of personnel employed, magnitude of services administered, number of beneficiaries, and amount of annual expenditures. He feels, however, provisions should be made for the establishment of an executive department, with a secretary, a member of the President's Cabinet, four assistant secretaries, and a general counsel.

Members of all veterans' organizations have been given an opportunity to express their views, and while all agree on consolidation, they differ as to how it should be brought about. Some want a veterans' department, others a bureau under the Secretary of the Interior, and still others would like to see an executive department, with the secretary a member of the President's Cabinet.

A most interesting witness before the committee was Col. Winfield Scott, Commissioner of Pensions. He cited the history of pensions in this country from the time the Pilgrims in 1636 provided that the colony should maintain any disabled soldier. At that time they had trouble with the Indians. He told of the pension law passed by Virginia in 1644, followed shortly by New York and Maryland, while Rhode Island enacted its pension law in 1718.

Starting with the passage of the first national pension law, August 26, 1776, Colonel Scott covered pension legislation up to the time the office of Commissioner of Pensions was created in 1833. Some of the interesting facts brought out by Colonel Scott are that the total number of land warrants issued by the bureau was 598,701, calling for 68,793,870 acres of land; that the office starting with 22 employees reached its peak in 1892 when the force numbered 2,009 employees, and the maintenance cost then was $4,898,655.80; that since 1892 the personnel has gradually been reduced, until now they have 645 employees, who receive salaries amounting to $1,250,000; that they have a working index consisting of 7,069,719 cards and approximately 6,000,000 files representing claims of soldiers who served in various wars and of their widows, which he stated is a complete history of those who bore the brunt of battle in defense of flag and country; that next year's appropriation bill carries $221,000,000 for the Pension Bureau, the overhead being but $1,635,000; that it cost $11.80 to handle a claim before it is paid; that the salaries paid the medical referee is $5,600 a year, and the chief law clerk $4,600, while in the Veterans' Bureau the medical director receives $9,000 per year and the chief of the legal division $9,000 per year.

Colonel Scott stated the records show there are only two surviving soldiers of the war with Mexico, which ended May 30, 1848. One, William F. Buckner, residing at Paris, Mo., was born, according to the Pension Bureau records, January 25, 1828, and the other, Owen Thomas Edgar, who resides at the John Dickson Home, Washington, D. C., born January 31, 1831.

On December 31, 1928, there were on the pension rolls the following: Civil War, 68,788 soldiers, 40 nurses, 191,160 widows; Spanish War, 173,158 soldiers, 393 nurses, 26,949 widows; Regular Establishment, 14,201 soldiers and sailors, 3,570 widows; World War, 46 soldiers, 17 widows; Indian wars, 5,465 soldiers, 3,758 widows; Mexican War, 2 soldiers, 802 widows; War of 1812, 13 widows; in all, a total of 488,362. In the last six months of 1928 the Pension Bureau paid $116,432,903.89 to these pensioners.

While it was disclosed by the testimony of Colonel Scott that it cost $11.80 to handle a claim in that bureau, former United States Senator Col. Rice W. Means, Spanish War veteran and former head of the Spanish War veterans' organization, in reply to a question as to how much it cost to handle a claim in the Veterans' Bureau, said:

> If you could get hold of the figures—now, I am making a wild estimate, but I believe it is $1,000 per claim.

Anyone who attempts to estimate when the peak will be reached by the Veterans' Bureau, in my opinion, is but making a guess.

There has been a great deal of agitation for what might be termed equalization of pensions. I have yet to find the man who can assail the argument. Veterans contend that there is no reason why the soldier or sailor or their dependents who served in the Civil, Indian, or Spanish War should not receive the same consideration accorded those who served in the World War.

Take the pensions of the soldiers, sailors, or marines in the Regular Establishment disabled in discharge of their duties, and the widows and dependent parents of men in this branch who lose their life in line of duty. They come under the general pension law.

What do they get?

The widow of a marine killed in Nicaragua gets $12 a month, as does the dependent mother.

The argument which accompanies the demand for equalization of pensions is sound and can not be disputed.

Then, again, there is a strong demand for a service pension for the World War veterans. They ask for the same consideration now being accorded Spanish and Civil War veterans. The Spanish and Civil War laws provide for a pension for a veteran in the event he is disabled for the performance of manual labor, even though the disability is not the direct result of his service.

This will come in time—how soon, no one can predict—but I venture the assertion that it will not be long before the total amount paid to veterans of all wars and their dependents will total $1,000,000,000 annually.

To show that our expenditures along this line continue to increase, I understand the Commissioner of Pensions has informed the Appropriations Committee that unless $19,000,000 or $20,000,000 is carried for his bureau in the last deficiency bill which will be reported in a few days he will be unable to pay pensions for June. Of course, after he has made the proper showing, he will get the money. Therefore I say it is impossible to even predict when the peak will be reached.

If the consolidation of all Government agencies affecting the veterans and their dependents will mean a reduction in overhead and expedite the consideration of the claims of the veterans and their dependents, it should be brought about. However, care must be exercised to work out the proper plan before authorizing such a consolidation.

The care of the disabled veteran is an obligation the country will never shirk.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday. Is there objection?

SENATE

SATURDAY, January 19, 1929

(Legislative day of Thursday, January 17, 1929)

The Senate reassembled in closed executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

After 4 hours and 25 minutes spent in executive session, the Senate, in closed executive session (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), took a recess until Monday, January 21, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

While the doors were closed the Senate, as in legislative session, transacted the legislative business which follows.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12538) for the benefit of Morris Fox Cherry; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MOBIN, Mr. JAMES, and Mr. MCSWAIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FINAL ASCERTAINMENT OF ELECTORS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, certified copies of the final ascertainments of electors for President and Vice President from the States of Mississippi and New Mexico at the election held November 6, 1928, which were ordered to lie on the table.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers in the files of the Interior Department and its bureaus not needed or useful in the transaction of current business and having no permanent value or historic interest, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. NYE and Mr. PITTMAN members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the following telegram, which was read and ordered to lie on the table:

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 18, 1929.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Senate Chamber:

Kindly read this open telegram to Secretary Mellon at Senate session to-day: "Hon. Andrew Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, Washington: We have read your letter to Senator WARREN concerning appropriation of twenty-five million for prohibition department. We are amazed at your failure to recognize great dissatisfaction with inadequacy of present program and to grasp eagerly opportunity presented by proposed appropriation for immediate development of more adequate program. Why can not appropriation be made subject to such distribution as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine after thorough investigation—part for Coast Guard, part for customs, part especially for Canadian border, part for doubling or trebling present field force, increasing salaries to induce higher-type men to apply for this responsible and hazardous work, part for more thorough stringent surveillance of breweries and distilleries to prevent illegal distribution of high-powered beer and diversion of industrial alcohol, part for intensive nation-wide education campaign, employing best talent to prepare accurate striking posters and circulars emphasizing danger to individuals and to society of use of intoxicants; also, the physical, economic, personal, and social benefits of abstinence and prohibition appealing to patriotic citizenship to abandon and discourage self-indulgent demoralizing lawlessness. It will be difficult for the average citizen to believe that there is much zeal or eagerness on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to secure adequate enforcement if he refuses this opportunity to develop and carry out an adequate program.

"We are convinced that your reply to Senator WARREN has been read with grave concern by that part of the electorate which recently declared its purpose that the eighteenth amendment should stand and be enforced.

"Speaking for those whom we represent, we respectfully request prompt reconsideration and earnest support of the proposed appropriation, otherwise the question inevitably arises, first, Does the Treasury Department sincerely desire efficient enforcement? and, second, Is it unable to develop an adequate program?"

JAMES CANNON, Jr., Chairman.
EUGENE L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary Board of Temperance and Social Service, Methodist Episcopal Church South.
BISHOP THOMAS NICHOLSON,
President Anti-Saloon League.

The bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL—INCREASE OF COMPENSATION TO COMMITTEE EMPLOYEES AND CLERKS TO SENATORS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas submitted an amendment proposing to increase the compensation of Senate committee employees and clerical assistants to Senators intended to be proposed by him to the legislative appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1930, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SHORTRIDGE, the Committee on Privileges and Elections was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 284) for compilation of a revised edition of the document entitled "Compilation of Senate Election Cases," and it was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

ADMINISTRATION OF EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 301), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Director of the Veterans' Bureau be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to furnish the Senate at the earliest possible moment the following information:

First. The names and addresses of all emergency officers in the Army who at the time of the final passage of the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill were disabled, as shown by the records of the bureau, to the extent of 30 per cent or more.

Second. The names of all officers to whom the benefits of that act have been awarded by the bureau since the passage of the act.

Third. The names of all officers who were drawing disability pay because of disabilities of more than 30 per cent at the date of the passage of the Tyson-Fitzgerald Act who have been denied the benefits of that act.

Fourth. The names of all emergency officers drawing pay at the time of the passage of the act because of disabilities of more than 30 per cent whose disability pay has been reduced since the date of the passage of said act.

Fifth. Were examinations held in each case where application for retirement has been filed to determine again the percentage of disability?

GEN. ROBERT E. LEE

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, this being the anniversary of the birth of Gen. Robert E. Lee, of the Southern Confederacy, I request that there may be published in the RECORD a letter from the Forbes Lithograph Manufacturing Co., of Boston, which contains a short sketch of his life.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FORBES LITHOGRAPH MANUFACTURING CO.,
Boston, November 5, 1928.

Hon. COLEMAN L. BLEASE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Gen. Robert E. Lee was born at Stratford, Westmoreland County, Va., January 19, 1807; was appointed to West Point in 1825 and graduated second in his class in 1829. On June 31, 1831, he was married at Arlington, Va., to Miss Mary A. R. Custis, daughter of George Washington Parke Custis, grandson of Mrs. George Washington and the adopted son of General Washington. After years of Army routine he was made captain of Engineers in 1838 and was busy improving the defenses of the country until 1846.

From 1846 to 1849 he served in the Mexican War, being made a colonel for gallantry in action. In 1852 he was appointed Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point, filling this position with great ability. From 1855 until 1859 and 1860, as a commander in the Cavalry Arm of the service, he was engaged in suppressing the Indian uprisings in the West.

At the outbreak of the Civil War he resigned his commission and, April 23, 1861, accepted the command of the southern forces of Virginia, meeting in the years that followed glorious victories and bitter defeat with highest courage and nobility. Mounted on his famous horse Traveller he was, in appearance and reality, a great leader, beloved by every soldier in the ranks. On April 9, 1865, he surrendered the remnants of his gallant army to a superior force and retired to private life.

In October, 1865, he accepted the presidency of Washington College, Lexington, Va., and there on October 12, 1870, he passed away mourned by millions. His last words, spoken as his mind wandered over the scenes of the past, were, "Strike the tent," and a little later, "Tell Hill he must come up!"

We are proud to present the portrait of this great soldier in our series of Famous Americans.

Very truly yours,

THE FORBES LITHOGRAPH MANUFACTURING CO.,
E. F. PAYNE.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE WORLD WAR

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I present articles appearing in the Chicago Daily Tribune and the La Salle County (Ill.) Herold relative to placing the responsibility for causing the World War, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily Tribune, Saturday, December 22, 1928]

WHAT HAS THE UNITED STATES TO DO WITH THE VERSAILLES TREATY?

Senator SHIPSTEAD, of Minnesota, has a resolution for the revision of paragraph 231 of the Versailles treaty, which now reads:

"The Allies declare and Germany acknowledges that Germany and its associates are the cause of the World War, therefore responsible for all damages afflicted on the Allies." The Senator would modify this declaration and forced confession to conform with the views of present-day revisionists of the causes, who contend that Germany was no more responsible for the war than the Allies were.

The United States did not sign this treaty. It made a separate treaty with Berlin after it had rejected the whole work of the peace conference. In its treaty with Germany it reserved to itself all the rights stipulated in the treaty of Versailles, such as they were, but that was all.

The Versailles treaty was rejected as unfair. It proposed conditions to which the United States declined to be a party. This country did not impose a debt of reparations on Germany. It has not been collecting damages from its former enemy. Consequently the treaty of Versailles is no business of the United States. It is none of Mr. SHIPSTEAD'S business as a Senator of the United States, and the resolution is not one which properly could come before the United States Senate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD'S affections, his sense of equity, and his European preferences may be strongly involved, but his idea is malapert, and his resolution would be looked upon abroad as giving another illustration of the Yankee instinct for pestiferous meddling.

The war guilt clause which Germany had to accept as the price of peace is the item of the treaty by which the Allies justify their collections from their enemy and their retention of the Rhineland. It's their affair and Germany's. If the United States as a creditor nation affirms that its debtors have no moral grounds for getting any money from Germany, its reputation for preposterous interference will be something even bigger than it is now.

[Reply to Chicago Tribune editorial by T. St. John Gaffney, former American consul general, which has appeared in many papers throughout the country, including the Chicago Herald]

THE FAIRFAX,
Washington, D. C., December 31, 1928.

The EDITOR CHICAGO TRIBUNE,
Chicago, Ill.

SIR: My attention has been called to an editorial dealing with the Shipstead resolution on war guilt now pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate, which appeared in the Tribune on December 22. The inference to be drawn from the editorial is that, as our Government did not sign the Versailles treaty, the war guilt paragraph of that document is no business of the United States. Let us consider the facts in the case.

The recent death of Robert Lansing is evidence of the imperative necessity of holding without further delay an inquiry on the war guilt problem under the Shipstead Senate resolution. Lansing was the chairman of the partisan commission of 15 which adjudged Germany and her allies solely responsible for the war, and would naturally have been the most important witness in the proposed inquiry.

The joint responsibility of the American Government for this verdict arises from the fact that President Wilson appointed the American Secretary of State, Robert Lansing, and James Brown Scott to represent the United States on this judicial tribunal.

Lansing was also a plenipotentiary commissioner to negotiate peace and Scott was a technical delegate of our Government to the peace conference, so there can be no question as to their official status. While it is true that our Government, for good and sufficient reasons, failed to ratify the Versailles treaty, it reaffirmed the war guilt through the treaty of Berlin of November 14, 1921.

The revelations of recent years have disclosed that the American delegates were particularly active in bringing about the decision and are credited with having drafted its report. This verdict, as now admitted, was based upon insufficient evidence, suppression of the truth, false testimony, and in part fraudulent and forged documents, and is now repudiated by all reputable historians. During his lifetime Lansing was repeatedly challenged to defend his verdict in the light of the new evidence, but he remained silent. His colleague, Scott, is still living and available for examination by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The removal of Doctor Scott by death or his incapacity by illness to give evidence would be an untoward calamity, as he is the only member of the commission of 15 within the jurisdiction of the United States. Some months ago the faculty of Heidelberg University addressed a note to Doctor Scott asking him if he still adhered to his original judgment in the light of the new evidence and material. Doctor Scott replied that as he was at the time the decision was rendered the representative of the American Government he could not withdraw or modify his verdict so long as his Government had not changed its attitude on the subject. Scott therefore puts the matter definitely up to the American Government of to-day, which is fortunately not laboring under the influence of the myths, hysteria, and prejudices of the Wilson administration. It shows, however, how necessary it is in the cause of justice, fair play, and historical truth that the only living American participant in the conduct and proceedings of the entente commission of 15 should be interrogated by the Foreign Relations Committee while he is still available.

The latest decisive judgment on the guilt clause of the treaty of Versailles has been passed by the eminent American historian, Prof. Sidney Bradshaw Fay, in his monumental work, The Origins of the World War, and reads as follows:

"One must abandon the dictum of the Versailles treaty that Germany and her allies were solely responsible. It was a dictum enacted by victors from vanquished, under the influence of the blindness, ignorance, hatred, and the propagandist misconceptions to which war had given rise. It was based upon evidence which was incomplete and not always sound. It is generally recognized by the best historical scholars in all countries to be no longer tenable or defensible."

Furthermore, Prof. Charles A. Beard, the noted author of The Rise of American Civilization, writes in the January issue of Harpers:

"Not a single outstanding scholar among the Allies and associated powers—Renouvin, Fabre Luc, Gooch, Fay, for example—who has examined the evidence in the case believes in the Paris doctrine that the Central Powers and their allies must bear the sole responsibility for plunging Europe into hell.

"Moreover, actors in the drama, such as Grey, Lloyd George, and Poincare, now openly say that the war had its roots in ancient rivalries in which all the beligerents participated."

The verdict of the entente partisan commission, in which Lansing and Scott figured so prominently, and its poisonous result on the spirit of the former warring nations have done more to keep alive hatred and prejudice than any other cause. A true reconciliation among the peoples is impossible until the verdict is annulled and article 231 is expunged from the Versailles treaty.

Very faithfully yours, T. ST. JOHN GAFFNEY,
Former American Consul General.

THE LOSER PAYS

In many ways the following editorial from the Chicago Tribune of Tuesday, January 8, is the most remarkable article with a political bearing and significance that ever appeared in the "world's greatest newspaper."

It gives the lie to Lloyd George, to Poincaré, and to Woodrow Wilson. It proves conclusively that not Germany was alone the cause of the World War; to wit, this same Germany that for almost two years after the armistice was subjected to a blockade which killed tens of thousands of helpless and innocent women and children. This satanic bestiality of the so-called "Allies" was never mentioned in the Tribune's article, although history has put it on record for all times to come.

It is a self-evident fact that the "Allies" are at the present time murdering Germany financially and methodically. But the Tribune nowhere mentions this fact and much less deplores it. The tears of bleeding Germany are the champagne of our American plutocracy.

The object of its revolutionary editorial mentioned above is to demonstrate to Congress the necessity of building 15 more cruisers of 10,000 tons each. And the sum and substance of the Tribune's literary effort in this case is its "argument":

"To be right you must be victorious."

Upon the diabolical reasoning power of this consummation I yield the floor to the editor of the Chicago Tribune.

C. ZWANZIG.

[From Tuesday's Chicago Tribune, January 8, 1929]

THE LOSER PAYS

Victors usually are right. With dominating arms comes domination in opinion, and the old cynicism, "Might makes right," remains in practical affairs hard to disprove.

To her European victors Germany pays to-day $595,000,000 annually. Since the Dawes plan took effect Germany has paid $1,540,000,000 in reparations. Before the Dawes plan ends the German people will pay $6,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 more. This will be her minimum under an agreement whereby the total reparation may be reduced to finite sums instead of infinite. Before the Dawes plan was promulgated Germany paid other reparations. Her Rhineland, her Saar Basin and other territories, her railroad system, are more or less in mortage. Germany pays reparation for defeat, and Germany pays on.

On the "moral" clause in the Versailles treaty this penalty is founded. For war guilt and aggression, the clause says, Germany must pay. That Germany was no more guilty of aggression than the other nations is now historical opinion, but that makes little difference. Germany lost the war, and the loser will stay wrong.

Scholars now in America, in England, in Russia, Germany, and France have shown that Germany's war guilt is at least no greater than that of France and Russia, and perhaps of England; still Germany will pay, and will pay on, no doubt, so long as gold can be squeezed from her. So long as she remains too weak in arms to resist the consequence of defeat, Germany will pay on.

The kaisers and the czars are gone down in the trampled ruck of war. Few will regret them; and if the war did nothing else of value, it broke the pomp and privilege and the antique despotisms of both groups of belligerents. Clattering, romantic, stupid, violent, the old régimes have passed. Subtler minds have outplanned them and made them bear, falsely but appropriately, the burden of the guilt of war. As publicity devices they had great consequence. They were used by friend and enemy with diverse ends, with great failure and with skill.

The world may see in 10 years more what closer students of the war now see, that Germany was only helpless drift and swirling, as other nations were, into inevitable war. Recent books by Barnes and by Fay and other authorities in America and work by foreign scholars indicate that, if blame for the war can be assessed at all, much of it should go to Poincaré, to France, and to Russia for war plans and intrigues months before the shot at Serajevo.

But personal blame for the Great War is irrelevant. Out of a massive set of world tensions and differential developments came the Great War. Out of industrial and social competitions, out of national and political developments, and out of an outworn system in which the huge, new forces of the time could not be organized came war that was inevitable. Beside this greater circumstance personal blame at most means little. But Germany lost, her guilt was officially declared, and Germany pays the reparations.

Less for moral guilt than for defeat Germany must pay this penalty, and those who made the Versailles treaty always knew it well Germany pays for defeat; righteousness perches on the banner of the victor.

For America, the young crusader, the naïve boy ignorant of the making of the war when it was in making, there is one lesson—to be right be victorious.

RADIO DEMOCRACY

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the New Leader, of New York City, of Saturday, January 19, 1929, on the subject of "Radio Democracy."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RADIO DEMOCRACY

Criticism by Hope Smith, counsel of the American Federation of Labor, of the allocation of broadcasting channels by the Federal Radio Commission again brings to the front the issue of equity in radio broadcasting. Mr. Smith declares that the present plan of allocating has worked to the advantage of the trust group and chain stations. WCFL, the American Federation of Labor station in Chicago, Mr. Smith declares, is also plagued with interference by the larger stations.

It is doubtful whether complete equity can be realized in this matter, for the difficulties are deeply rooted in modern society. Power inevitably goes to great wealth. In fact, concentrated capital is enormous power that is certain to be exerted in every phase of life. The daily newspaper is a luxury which the organization with small funds can not have. Those with large funds can have many.

The chain stations in radio broadcasting have enormous power for the same reason. The mere fact that they represent millions of capital gives them an enormous prestige and power which the lesser stations can not have. They can also afford to employ the best talent and give the best entertainment. The superior program carries with it also the broadcasting of opinions over greater areas of the Nation. Naturally the opinions are likely to have a conservative cast, for great wealth is inevitably associated with conservatism.

So by a logic of its own the more important advantages of the radio belong to powerful corporate wealth. This does not mean that the smaller stations like WCFL should not fight for the best conditions that can be obtained. On the contrary, democracy in radio broadcasting should be stressed. It is one phase of the general struggle against reactionary forces that tend to shape all institutions and opinions after a pattern approved by great aggregations of corporate capital and finance.

SENATE

MONDAY, January 21, 1929

(Legislative day of Thursday, January 17, 1929)

The Senate reassembled in closed executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

After three hours and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PRESERVATION AND IMPROVEMENT OF THE NIAGARA FALLS

In executive session to-day, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed from the following convention:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to their ratification, I transmit herewith a convention between the United States and His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions beyond the seas, Emperor of India, for the preservation and improvement of the scenic beauty of the Niagara Falls and rapids, signed at Ottawa on January 2, 1929, and a protocol signed on the same day.

The convention and protocol had my approval and were signed by the American minister at Ottawa by virtue of full powers issued to him by me.

I invite the attention of the Senate to the accompanying report by the Secretary of State on the subject.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 16, 1929.

The PRESIDENT:

With a view to their transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, the undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President a convention between the United States and His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions beyond the seas, Emperor of India, for the preservation and improvement of the scenic beauty of the Niagara Falls and rapids, concluded at Ottawa on January 2, 1929, and a protocol signed on the same day.

In relation to the convention, the undersigned respectfully submits a report, as follows:

Pursuant to correspondence exchanged between the Department of State and the British Embassy at Washington, there was established in 1925 a Special International Niagara Board to study and report upon questions relating to the Niagara Falls and the Niagara River.

With a view to determining how the scenic beauty of the Niagara Falls and rapids could be best maintained and by what means and to what extent the impairment of the Falls by erosion or otherwise might be overcome, the special International Niagara Board was asked more specifically to inquire into and report upon the following questions:

(a) Whether and to what extent the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls has been, is being, or is likely in the future to be adversely affected by erosion or otherwise.

(b) Whether any ascertained or prospective impairment of the scenic beauty of the Falls can be remedied or prevented, and if so, by what measures or works.

(c) What would be the character, general location, sequence of construction, and cost of any works required.

(d) Upon the carrying out of the proposals of the board under the foregoing paragraphs, what would be the flow of water required to preserve the scenic beauty of the Falls and river.

(e) What flow may be expected in the Niagara River from time to time, taking into consideration the conditions, including climatic changes, affecting the lake levels and the outflow of the lakes.

(f) What quantity of water might, consistently with the complete preservation of the scenic beauty of the Falls and river, be permitted to be diverted from the latter temporarily or permanently.

(g) From what sections of the river would it be proper to permit any diversions not already provided for by treaty, and to what extent might additional diversions be permitted in each of these sections.

The board was instructed—

(a) Not to make a recommendation as to the apportionment of any additional water available for diversion.

(b) To make such progress reports as may be appropriate, and to complete its inquiry as expeditiously as practicable.

On December 14, 1927, the Special International Niagara Board submitted an interim report in which it recommended the early construction of works at the United States flank of the Horseshoe Falls, at the Canadian flank of the Horseshoe Falls, and in the Chippewa Grass Island Pool. A printed copy of the board's report is attached. The works recommended for the United States flank and the Canadian flank of the Horseshoe Falls were to consist of excavations and the construction of submerged weirs for the purpose of rewatering the two flanks of the Horseshoe Falls. The works in the Chippewa Grass Island Pool were to consist of the construction of a submerged weir for the purpose of raising the level of the Grass Island Pool, so as to throw more water against the head of Goat Island. The results which the board anticipated from the construction of the works on the two flanks of the Horseshoe Falls were the insurance at all seasons of an unbroken crest line from shore to shore, the maintenance of the present blended green and white color effects of the Horseshoe Falls, and in a measure a modification of the rate of erosion in the bend of the Horseshoe Falls. The works in Grass Island pool would insure an adequate flow in the American rapids and falls and by the Three Sister Islands.

In a letter dated April 9, 1928 (a copy of which is attached), signed jointly in behalf of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario and the Niagara Falls Power Co. of New York, and addressed to the Special International Niagara Board, the commission and the company submitted drawings showing proposed works in the Niagara River which were calculated to conform to the recommendations of the board made in its interim report of December 14, 1927. A description of the proposed works and estimates of the cost of construction accompanied this joint letter to the board. The commission and the company jointly offered to construct at their own expense the initial remedial works shown on the drawings submitted by them, subject to the following conditions:

1. Detailed plans, designs, methods of construction, and sequence of operations will be prepared by the commission and the company and submitted to the board for its approval within three months after notice of acceptance of this proposal. Modification of details, as the work progresses, will be made as directed by the board.

2. The board will use its best efforts to assist the commission and the company to obtain from all governmental authorities, whose consent is required by law, the necessary permits for the construction of the proposed works.

3. Construction of the proposed works on the flanks of the Horseshoe Falls will be commenced not later than 90 days after receipt by the commission and the company of the approval of the board and all other governmental authorities, and, subject to any interruption occasioned by governmental authority, will be completed within two years after commencement, except for such reasonable extensions of time as may be granted by the board.

4. Construction of the proposed weir in the Grass Island Pool will be commenced at such time as may be directed by the board after completion of the works on the flanks of the Horseshoe Falls and after receipt by the commission and the company of the approval of the designs of the weir by the board and all governmental authorities, and, subject to any interruption occasioned by governmental authority, will be completed within two years after commencement, except for such reasonable extensions of time as may be granted by the board.

5. To permit observation of the effects of remedial works, after a substantial beginning shall have been made upon the works on the flanks of the Horseshoe Falls, the amount of water which, under the international treaty, may be diverted for power purposes from the Niagara River above the Falls on each side of the river shall be increased by an amount not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 10,000 cubic feet of water per second during the nontourist season from October 1 to March 31, inclusive, yearly.

6. The board shall have complete supervision and control over the additional waters permitted to be diverted, with power to diminish or suspend such additional diversions.

7. It is understood that diversions for observation purposes, referred to under section (5) hereof, shall be discontinued upon six months' notice given by the Government to the commission and the company after a period of not less than 10 years from the date of authorization.

8. The construction of the works herein specified shall not be considered as effecting any change in the existing ownership of or title to those parts of the bed of the Niagara River upon which they have been constructed.

In a report dated May 3, 1928 (a copy of which is inclosed), which the Special International Niagara Board addressed to the Secretary of State of the United States and the Minister of the Interior of Canada, the board referred to the letter of April 9, 1928, from the Hydroelectric Power Commission of Ontario and the Niagara Falls Power Co. and stated that works which the commission and the company offered to build were those recommended by the board in its interim report. The board stated, further, that if constructed according to the general plans which accompanied the joint letter, modified in detail during construction to secure the effects desired, the works would materially improve present scenic conditions and would demonstrate beyond doubt whether the normally injurious effects of additional diversions for power purposes could be neutralized by the use of such works. The board recommended that the joint proposal of the commission and the company to construct the remedial works should be accepted subject to the following conditions and understandings:

1. Detailed plans, designs, methods of construction, and sequence of operations shall be prepared by the commission and the company and submitted to the board for its approval within three months after notice of acceptance of this proposal. Modification of details, as the work progresses, shall be made as directed by the board.

2. The commission and the company shall secure from all Federal, Dominion, State, and Provincial authorities, whose consent is required by law, the necessary permits for the construction of the proposed works. The board will use its best efforts to assist the commission and the company in obtaining the said permits.

3. Construction of the proposed works on the flanks of the Horseshoe Falls shall be commenced not later than 90 days after receipt by the commission and the company of the approval of the board and all other governmental authorities, and, subject to any interruption occasioned by governmental authority, shall be completed within two years after commencement, except for such reasonable extensions of time as may be granted by the board.

4. Construction of the proposed weir in the Grass Island Pool shall be commenced at such time as may be directed by the board after completion of the works on the flanks of the Horseshoe Falls and after receipt by the commission and company of the approval of the designs of the weir by the board and all governmental authorities, and, subject to any interruption occasioned by governmental authority, shall be completed within two years after commencement, except for such reasonable extensions of time as may be granted by the board.

5. To permit observation of the effects of remedial works, after a substantial beginning shall have been made upon the works on the flanks of the Horseshoe Falls the amount of water which under the international treaty may be diverted for power purposes from the Niagara River above the Falls on each side of the river shall be increased by an amount not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 10,000 cubic feet of water per second during the nontourist season from October 1 to March 31, inclusive, yearly.

6. The board shall have complete supervision and control over the additional waters permitted to be diverted, with power to diminish or suspend such additional diversions.

7. If, upon completion of said remedial works, the withdrawal of the additional 20,000 cubic feet per second or some part thereof shall not, in the opinion of the board, appreciably affect the scenic value of the falls and the integrity of the river, it is understood that diversions for observation purposes, referred to under section (5) hereof, may be continued only so long, not exceeding seven years from date of beginning field construction, as may be necessary to enable negotiations to be undertaken and concluded for the modification of the present international treaty so as to permit permanent additional diversions of such amount as may then be agreed upon.

8. After construction of the works herein specified, they shall be considered as parts of the bed of the Niagara River and subject to the same ownership and control as those parts of the river in which they have been constructed.

According to the boundary waters treaty between the United States and His Majesty's Government concluded January 11, 1909, the diversion within the State of New York of the waters of the Niagara River above the Falls of Niagara for power purposes not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion of 20,000 cubic feet of water per second is permissible. Under the treaty mentioned the diversion within the Province of Ontario not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion of 36,000 cubic feet of water per second is permissible. The proposals of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario and the Niagara Falls Power Co. contemplate a diversion at the rate of 10,000 cubic feet of water per second from the Niagara River above the falls on each side of the international boundary in excess of the amount of water which it is permissible under the treaty of January 11, 1909, to divert.

Representatives of the Canadian Government visited Washington on November 12 to 14 last, when a draft of a convention and protocol to give effect to the recommendations of the Special International Niagara Board was tentatively agreed upon. With a note dated December 3 the Canadian minister at Washington formally submitted to the Department of State a draft of a convention and protocol, and stated that the Canadian Government was prepared to sign the convention and protocol in the form submitted. The draft of convention and draft of protocol were referred to the Secretary of War, who informed the undersigned that he regarded them as satisfactory and that he deemed it desirable that the convention be concluded and the protocol signed.

In pursuance of the authority conferred by the President upon the American minister at Ottawa and the authority conferred upon the Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada by His Britannic Majesty, the convention and protocol were signed by them on January 2, 1929.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 16, 1929.

A true copy of the signed original. M.

The President of the United States of America;

And His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India,

Considering that a Special International Niagara Board was established in 1926 by the Government of the United States and the Government of the Dominion of Canada to study and submit to the two Governments a report upon certain questions relating to the Niagara Falls and the Niagara River, more particularly the questions how the scenic beauty of the Niagara Falls and Rapids could be best maintained, by what means and to what extent the impairment thereof by erosion or otherwise might be overcome and prevented, and what quantity of water might consistent therewith be diverted from the river above the Falls;

And that on the fourteenth day of December, 1927, the said Special International Niagara Board submitted to the two Governments an interim report recommending the construction of certain works in the Niagara River for preserving and improving the scenic beauty of the Falls and Rapids;

And considering that Article 5 of the treaty with respect to the boundary waters between the United States and Canada, concluded between the United States of America and His Majesty on January 11th, 1909, limits the quantity of water which may be withdrawn from the Niagara River above the Falls;

And that the Special International Niagara Board considers it desirable to make temporary diversions of water from the Niagara River above the Falls in excess of those permitted by Article 5 of the treaty of 1909, as a means of observing and testing the efficacy of the proposed works under widely varying conditions;

Have deemed it necessary to preserve and improve the scenic beauty of the Niagara Falls and Rapids, and to that end to adopt the recommendations of the said Special International Niagara Board, and have resolved to conclude a Convention, and for that purpose have appointed as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The President: The Honourable William Phillips, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Canada; and

His Britannic Majesty, for the Dominion of Canada: The Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs;

Who, after having communicated to one another their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

ARTICLE I

The High Contracting Parties agree that remedial works shall be constructed in the Niagara River above the Niagara Falls, designed to distribute the waters of the river so as to ensure at all seasons unbroken crestlines on both the American and the Canadian Falls and an enhancement of their present scenic beauty.

ARTICLE II

Concurrently with the construction and tests of the remedial works and as a temporary and experimental measure, diversions of the waters of the Niagara River above the Falls from the natural course and stream thereof additional to the amounts specified in Article 5 of the Boundary Waters Treaty of January 11th, 1909, may be permitted to the extent and subject to the conditions hereinafter provided:

(1) The additional diversions shall be permitted only within the period beginning each year on the first day of October and ending on the thirty-first day of March of the following year, both dates inclusive.

(2) The additional diversion to be permitted within the State of New York shall not exceed in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of ten thousand cubic feet of water per second.

(3) The additional diversion to be permitted within the Province of Ontario shall not exceed in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of ten thousand cubic feet of water per second.

(4) The provisions of this Article shall terminate seven years from the date of the initial additional diversion authorized under this Convention.

ARTICLE III

The present Convention shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof and by His Britannic Majesty in accordance with constitutional practice. The ratifications shall be exchanged at Ottawa as soon as possible and the Convention shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Convention in duplicate and have hereto affixed their seals.

Done at Ottawa on the second day of January in the year of Our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty-Nine.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS.
W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

PROTOCOL

At the moment of signing the Convention between the United States of America and His Britannic Majesty for maintaining the scenic beauty of the Niagara Falls and Rapids in accordance with the recommendation of the Special International Niagara Board in its interim report dated the 14th day of December 1927, as referred to in the preamble to the Convention, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have agreed as follows:

I

The construction of the remedial works contemplated in the Board's interim report and authorized in Article I of the Convention, the provision for the cost and for the control thereof, as well as the control of the diversions of water authorized in Article II of the Convention shall be carried out in accordance with the recommendations of the Special International Niagara Board as set forth in its report dated the 3rd day of May 1928, forwarding to the two Governments a joint proposal, dated the 9th day of April 1928, made by the Niagara Falls Power Company of Niagara Falls, New York, and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, which report and proposal are set out in the annex hereto.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS.
W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

NEWSPRINT MONOPOLY

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, since the introduction of my resolution (S. Res. 292) in the Senate a few days ago calling for the appointment of a select committee of five Senators to investigate the newsprint monopoly there has been a growing recognition for a thorough investigation. A hearing on this resolution, which has been suggested for January 30, will show the urgent need for an investigation and the necessity of creative legislation.

I call the attention of the Senate to the leading article and editorials appearing in the American Press, the official publication of the American Press Association. The January issue shows that foreign interests are conscious of the fact that they have the newspaper publishers of this country by the throat. While a few large buyers of newsprint may derive a temporary advantage, yet in the end they will feel the effects of monopolistic control. The newsprint problem is far-reaching.

This is not the first time that the Senate has been obliged to consider the welfare of the newspaper publishers when they were at the mercy of the Newsprint Trust. For 20 years this trust has harassed the newspaper publishers. The same companies that took advantage of a war emergency are identified with the present newsprint crisis.

While during this period the newsprint manufacturers have controlled output and prices, it was not until a week ago that they had the effrontery to announce publicly that they had organized the newsprint institution in Canada, which organization will in the future dictate what American publishers will pay for paper.

I ask that the article and editorials from the American Press be printed in the RECORD following my remarks; also from the Financial Post, of Toronto, January 4, 1929, and from the Paper Trade Journal, November 8, 1928, and from the Scranton Republican, January 19, 1929.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Editorials from the American Press, New York, January, 1929]

WE'LL SEE

Will the United States Government sit idly by and permit newsprint manufacturers to fix a price for newsprint that will allow United States publishers to be gouged?

The Newsprint Institute of Canada has been formed after many weeks of conferences among manufacturers to limit production and fix prices. Many of these conferences were held in Canada, but some were held in New York City. What about the Sherman antitrust law?

Naturally, the Canadian anticombines act may not be brought into play because the great market for newsprint lies in the United States. But will the incoming administration allow the publishers of the United States to be forced into paying unfair prices for their newsprint fixed by a manufacturers' combine?

Several United States Senators are already leading a movement intended to bring about a congressional investigation of the newsprint situation and possible court action. More power to them and to the paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, which has promised to call a convention of members for a full discussion of the situation and the "adoption of such measures as may be calculated to conserve the best interests of the newspaper industry."

What will be the outcome?

We'll see.

NEWSPRINT TRUST FORMED TO FIX PRICES AND CURTAIL PRODUCTION—CLAIM MADE THAT PUBLISHERS CAN'T ENFORCE ANTITRUST LAW

Organization of the Newsprint Institute of Canada, if its objectives are realized, will take the newsprint price out of the realm of free competition and put it in the hands of a board of control.

P. B. Wilson, manager of the Newsprint Institute, says the time is not yet ripe for a statement on the function and purposes of the recently formed institute. It is understood, however, that the organization is intended to be the agency for carrying out the agreement expected to be reached by the manufacturers to curtail production and fix prices.

A production limit is reported to have been already agreed upon, and unofficially the majority of manufacturers now in conference in Montreal are said to favor a price of $55 per ton.

The possibility of enforcing antitrust legislation has already been considered in Canada. The Financial Post, of Toronto, for January 4 carried a story headed "Antitrust Act Is Ineffective with Newsprint," the second deck of the headline saying "Fortunately no danger of United States publishers being able to employ act."

In the body of the story appears this quotation: "True, Canada has an anticombine act. It is a Dominion Government law which has been in force about three years. It provides that if a written complaint be made to the Government regarding the operation of any group or combine that an investigation shall be made by the Government, and if it is found that the operations being carried on be against the public interest the Government shall institute proceedings for the prosecution of the offender.

"But only a negligible proportion of the output of the Canadian newsprint mills is sold to Canadian newspapers. The great market is in the United States. Hence there is no doubt that the maintenance and an increase in newsprint prices would undoubtedly be in the public weal."

Newspaper publishers in the United States are objecting, however, to conserving the public weal of Canada by paying unfair newsprint prices fixed by manufacturers' combines.

And some of the conferences held by manufacturers in their efforts to reach a price and limit production so as not to raise too strenuous protests from United States publishers were held in New York City. American publishers hold this constituted a violation of the Sherman antitrust law and are urging a congressional investigation. Several United States Senators are understood to be leading a move to bring about the investigation.

A Senate investigation of the activities of foreign-controlled newsprint manufacturers who are said to have spent $16,000,000 to buy control of an unnamed chain of American newspapers in order to compel these newspapers to enter into long-term contracts for newsprint has been asked by Senator SCHALL, of Minnesota.

The Financial Post's story goes on to say: "It is true that the Canadian newspaper publishers will make an immediate profit from the recent cut in the price of newsprint. Their immediate gains will be substantial, but the ultimate result of the cut will certainly react unfavorably on Canadian newspaper publishers, as it can mean nothing else but a decline in consumer buying power. A decline in consumer buying power, or any factor tending to retard an increase in consumer buying power, naturally has a very direct bearing on the amount of advertising space which will be purchased in Canadian newspapers. Hence the Canadian publishers as a whole are not anxious to see the newsprint producers operating at a reduced scale of profits.

"The provisions of the anticombines act came into play against the Proprietary Articles Trade Association, which was formed to maintain prices on drug lines sold through the retailer. But this situation was decidedly different from that now prevailing with the newsprint industry."

The difference, of course, is that the newsprint is being sold for the most part to United States publishers.

The paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association is marking time until definite announcement as to the agreements reached by the manufacturers comes from Montreal.

Some time ago the paper committee issued a bulletin, signed by Chairman S. E. Thomason, saying: "Should the situation develop to the point where the newsprint price is taken out of the realm of free competition and put into the control of a 'board of control,' or should it appear that the abandonment of the uniform price principle is contemplated, it is the intention of the directors promptly to call a convention of members in New York for a full discussion of the situation and the adoption of such measures as may be calculated to conserve the best interests of the newspaper industry."

J. L. Fearing, vice president of the International Paper Co., which is reported to have signed a contract with Hearst newspapers at a price of $50 a ton, less commissions, maintains that when International's price for 1929 is announced it will involve no deviation from that company's standard price policy.

"What we desire most," says Mr. Fearing, "is a fair and satisfactory solution, but we are not in shape to say anything definite at this time, which fact we regret very much, indeed."

The bulletin issued by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association paper committee says that at a conference in New York, attended by L. A. Taschereau, Premier of Quebec; A. R. Graustein, president of International; Frank Clarke, president of the Anglo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Mills, which has under contract a share of the Hearst tonnage; and David Town, representing the Hearst newspapers, pressure was brought to bear on International to charge a price to other customers higher than the reported Hearst price.

"The paper committee was informed," says the bulletin, "that at this conference it was pointed out to the International Paper Co. that unless it abandoned the intention announced in its telegrams of October 30 and December 5 and established for its other customers the $55 price for 1929 the government of Quebec would find methods to compel this action."

A prominent Canadian newspaper publisher, who asked that his name be withheld, points out the inadvisability of accepting as fact any of the rumors so prevalent in New York and Montreal about the activities of the provincial premiers.

"You must not overlook the very strong sentiment among the people of Canada," says this Canadian publisher, "against the devastation of their forest reserves for the purpose of supplying newsprint to the world at prices which do not permit of scientific woodland operations and adequate reforestation measures.

"I believe that when the smoke of battle has cleared away we will find the Canadian premiers occupying the high ground of a policy which would discourage discrimination against Canadian and American publishers in favor of Mr. Hearst or anyone else, and which will involve such scientific and economic operation of Canadian woodlands, including adequate reforestation measures as will tend to secure for consumers of Canadian newsprint an adequate supply for all time at reasonble prices."

Incidentally, the Hearst contract, the American Press is told, is split up this way: International, 150,000 tons; Anglo-Canadian, 110,000 tons; Lake St. John, 65,000 tons; Brompton, 65,000; Algonquin, 28,000 tons; and Wisconsin River, 22,000 tons.

A NEWSPRINT TRUST?

In the face of attempts to form a newsprint trust to fix prices and cut production, it seems proper to inquire why the law of supply and demand should be flouted in the newsprint industry. If the industry is in as bad shape as newsprint manufacturers would have us believe, why are so many new machines being installed? Does not the answer lie in the fact that for the last year in which figures are available more newsprint firms showed a profit than did those in any other of 17 major lines of business?

Ordinarily, when a line of business is flourishing and high profits are being made, new firms enter the field and old firms expand until the law of supply and demand gets to functioning and makes the profit more nearly equal to that in other lines of business. For a number of years now newsprint prices have been arbitrarily fixed at a figure that allowed a good, fat profit to be made. The period of expansion that has been and is still going on in the newsprint industry is proof enough that the price fixed has been a profitable one. But for one reason or another the association that had much to do with fixing the price collapsed. The way was open for the law of supply and demand to get in its work. At once arose the cry for more price fixing and production curtailing. Granted that overproduction might force some newsprint firms to take a loss, it does not follow that the newspaper publisher should be penalized by prices fixed to protect the newsprint industry from conditions that arose because it was too profitable.

Will it be necessary, we wonder, to enforce the Sherman antitrust law to protect the newspaper publisher from being gouged by unfair prices made in combination in conferences in the United States by Canadian manufacturers?

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the International Paper & Power Co. is unquestionably the controlling factor in the price warfare which has upset the newsprint and newspaper publishing industries.

The Paper Trade Journal, an American publication, under date of November 8, said:

The general opinion is that while there is no hope of a general appreciation in newsprint prices for a long time, present events will go far toward bringing newsprint interests together and hastening the time when the industry will be controlled by two or three big corporations.

The influence of the International Paper & Power Co. in bringing about control through mergers and patents is pointed out in another issue of the Paper Trade Journal of September 15, which reads as follows:

CONTROL OF NEWSPRINT PAPER OUTPUT OPPOSED

In view of the many rumors which are flying around, attention is inevitably directed to the vast program of expansion which the International Paper Co. has pursued during the past few years, and is still pursuing. This company, by its acquisition of enormous forest areas in Canada and Newfoundland and by its development of large plants and stupendous power enterprises, has come to exercise a predominant influence in the newsprint field in North America; so much so, indeed, that the papers are discussing the question as to whether or not the ultimate ambition of President Graustein is to get full control of the entire situation and establish a newsprint trust without parallel in industry and finance.

The Financial Post appears to think that there is something in this suggestion, and in confirmation thereof quotes the rumor that negotiations have already taken place between the International Paper Co. and the Abitibi Power & Paper Co. for a merger, which, if consummated, would bring under one control about 30 per cent of the newsprint industry of North America. In this connection it sees significance in the fact that the International Paper Co. has—so it states—already purchased a minority interest in various companies, including the E. B. Eddy Co., and a controlling interest in the Bathurst Power & Paper Co.

The paper adds that if the above inferences are well founded the present unsatisfactory situation in the newsprint industry must have been foreseen and provided for, adding: "It can be taken for granted, therefore, that the present somewhat unsatisfactory earning power position of the International Paper Co. is no surprise to its management. It is probable, therefore, that the present situation of International Paper is merely regarded by the directors as an incidental step in its progress toward their ultimate objective which, as has been said, may be the control of the whole newsprint industry on this continent. It is impossible to say definitely that Mr. Graustein's one aim is to acquire control of the industry, but the signs and portents all point this way. Moreover, if such be his intention, he is going about it in a businesslike and efficient way. Many newsprint men admire the courage which he has shown in carrying out his plans, although some of them are inclined to feel that his program requires great speculative nerve in its execution. But everyone admires a good gambler.

ANTITRUST ACT IS INEFFECTIVE WITH NEWSPRINT—FORTUNATELY NO DANGER OF UNITED STATES PUBLISHERS BEING ABLE TO EMPLOY ACT

MONTREAL.—Some newspaper publishers in the United States are now beginning to wonder if antitrust legislation can not be enforced in Canada to prevent the newsprint producers coming to an agreement touching production and so setting a price level for 1929 which will, at least, permit the payment of fixed charges and preferred dividends.

For Canadian business as a whole, it seems fortunate that the antitrust bogey, which has so often been used in the United States, has little grip on the popular imagination here.

Any efforts to hamper the Canadian newsprint industry would have a decidedly deleterious effect on Canadian business as a whole, for the newsprint industry is the largest single industry of the Dominion. The thin times through which the industry will pass in 1929 will undoubtedly have a decided bearing on the general business level.

AFFECTS COUNTRY ADVERSELY

The capital invested in the pulp and paper industry as a whole amounts to over $500,000,000 and of this figure the newsprint mills constitute by far the greatest proportion. The industry's annual wage bill is enormous, and, in addition, thousands of settlers are enabled to augment a meager living from farming by selling their pulpwood output to newsprint companies.

Obviously, declining profits among the newsprint mills must mean a very extensive decline in consumer purchasing power in all the provinces, save Alberta and Saskatchewan.

HAS ANTICOMBINE ACT

True, Canada has an anticombine act. It is a Dominion Government law which has been in force about three years. It provides that if a written complaint be made to the Government regarding the operation of any group or combine, that an investigation shall be made by the Government, and if it is found that the operations being carried on be against the public interest, the Government shall institute proceedings for the prosecution of the offender.

But only a negligible proportion of the output of the Canadian newsprint mills is sold to Canadian newspapers. The great market is in the United States. Hence, there is no doubt that the maintenance and an increase in newsprint prices would undoubtedly be in the general public weal.

PUBLISHERS HERE SATISFIED

It is true that the Canadian newspaper publishers will make an immediate profit from the recent cut in the price of newsprint. Their immediate gains will be substantial, but the ultimate result of the cut will certainly react unfavorably on Canadian newspaper publishers, as it can mean nothing else but a decline in consumer buying power. A decline in consumer buying power, or any factor tending to retard an increase in consumer buying power, naturally has a very direct bearing on the amount of advertising space which will be purchased in Canadian newspapers. Hence the Canadian publishers as a whole are not anxious to see the newsprint producers operating at a reduced scale of profits.

The provisions of the anticombines act came into play against the Proprietary Articles Trade Association, which was formed to maintain prices on drug lines sold through the retailer. But this situation was decidedly different to that now prevailing with the newsprint industry.

GOVERNMENT SYMPATHETIC

The governments of Ontario and Quebec are completely in accord touching the efforts of the producers to maintain the proper scale of output commensurate with the demand and in their efforts to obtain higher and more satisfactory prices for their production. Moreover, the two Provinces would hardly brook Federal interference with the industry, as both have taken a stand which they consider to be in the best interests of both Provinces and in the best interests of the Dominion as a whole.

The two provincial governments are in a position to enforce an even scale of production at the various mills, because many of the licenses to cut wood on Crown lands are issued on an annual basis if an individual producer fails to stick to his agreement, the Province, at its pleasure, could cancel important rights.

It is generally realized by the public that the broad interests of the country as a whole are best served by conserving the valuable forest resources and in not permitting pulp wood to be cut down and sold in the form of newsprint for a mess of pottage. With newsprint prices at their present level this is just what is occurring. Moreover, there can be no doubt that the Federal authorities approve of the present efforts to better the position occupied by the industry.

THE PAPER MANUFACTURING PROBLEM

From Washington there comes a story that is almost incomprehensible; a story which has been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for general information by United States Senator THOMAS D. SCHALL, of Minnesota.

This story is to the effect that a vast fund of $16,000,000 has been raised by foreign newsprint manufacturers to effect the defeat of a bill introduced by Senator SCHALL to bring about the manufacture of paper from farm waste such as cornstalks, flax, rice, and wheat straw, and sugar-cane pulp.

When one first saw in the newspaper reports stories about the speed with which paper could be manufactured from cornstalks there was wonder why this was not being done, why extraordinary effort was not being employed to produce paper which could be used for all purposes, including newsprint, at a minimum of present prices.

Admitting the possibility of exaggeration on the part of Senator SCHALL, it is highly improper to even attempt to subsidize newspapers, even small newspapers, in favor of a product competing with American manufacture.

On January 7 last Senator SCHALL introduced in the Senate a resolution calling attention to the use of this $16,000,000 fund to finance American newspapers and directing the appointment of a committee of five Senators to investigate the activities of this group of foreign citizens seeking to control the white paper supply in this country, and determine whether such activities would have the result of creating a monopoly in the supplying of paper to publishers of small daily newspapers.

We regard this as a matter of the deepest interest and the greatest public importance. There is an unending supply in America of cornstalks, wheat straw, sugar-cane pulp, and flax and rice straw. Paper could be made from these materials cheaply, and it has been shown with the greatest dispatch.

Not only that, but use of such material for paper making would mean that this tremendously rapid leveling of our forests would cease, because newsprint, and not lumber, is the great need that causes the felling of trees at a rate that threatens to leave no worth-while trees standing. So forest conservation would be promoted by Senator SCHALL'S bill.

Congress should outlaw the effort of foreign paper makers to tie up, in a sinister way, the owners and publishers of American newspapers, and should strongly encourage the work of perfecting manufacture of paper from farm waste, because it is the answer to one of the biggest problems now confronting the makers of the newspapers which are in practically all our homes.

MORRIS FOX CHERRY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12538) for the benefit of Morris Fox Cherry, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

EQUALIZING RANK OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF ARMY AND NAVY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9961) to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE OREGON CAVES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3162) to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg., and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MCNARY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, accede to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MCNARY, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. KENDRICK conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL SECRETARIES TO THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Executive Office for the fiscal year 1930, in the sum of $10,000, to provide an additional secretary to the President, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed (S. Doc. 207).

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1930, in the sum of $10,000, to provide an additional secretary to the President, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed (S. Doc. 208).

OIL PORTRAIT OF THE PRESIDENT (S. DOC. NO. 206)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, in the sum of $5,000, for the purchase of an oil portrait of the President, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MAINTENANCE OF EXECUTIVE MANSION AND GROUNDS (S. DOC. NO. 205)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1930, in the sum of $50,000, to provide for alterations in the Executive Office and other improvements, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL-BANK NOTES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury referring to his annual report for the fiscal year 1928, submitted to the Congress last December, and stating in part: "I have concluded that it would be inadvisable to submit to Congress at this time a program looking to early retirement of our national-bank note circulation. Accordingly, when the new size paper currency is issued on or about July 1, 1929, the Treasury Department will be prepared shortly thereafter to make available national-bank notes in the reduced size," which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers on the files of that bureau no longer useful in its current work or of historical value, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania and Mr. SIMMONS members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WATERMAN presented resolutions adopted by the Lions Club, the Rotary Club, and the Chamber of Commerce of Grand Junction, Colo., favoring the passage of the bill (S. 2829) to provide for aided and directed settlement on Federal reclamation projects, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. BLAINE presented a resolution adopted by Romulus Carl Berens Post, No. 6, the American Legion, of Stevens Point, Wis., favoring the passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Wisconsin State Union, American Society of Equity, at Plymouth, Wis., protesting against the making of appropriations for further preparedness of the Army and Navy, and also any further activities of the armed forces of the United States in Nicaragua, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Wisconsin State Union, American Society of Equity, at Plymouth, Wis., favoring the curtailment of further development of lands for agriculture through irrigation and drainage; favoring changes in the taxation system to remove part of the burden on the farmer, and favoring revaluation of farm land on the basis of the earning capacity of the land, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WARREN. I report back favorably from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments the bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1474) thereon. I give notice that I shall undertake to call up the bill for action on an early day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 4704) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report to Congress on the advisability and practicability of establishing a national park to be known as the Tropical Everglades National Park, in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1475) thereon.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9570) to provide for the transfer of the returns office from the Interior Department to the General Accounting Office, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1476) thereon.

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3268) for the relief of John G. DeCamp, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1477) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7200) to amend section 321 of the Penal Code, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1478) thereon.

He also, from the Special Committee Investigating Presidential Campaign Expenditures, pursuant to Senate Resolution 214, agreed to April 30, 1928, submitted a report (No. 1480).

Mr. McNARY from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 4604) for the relief of James L. McCulloch, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1479) thereon.

Mr. PHIPPS, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 4710) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Grand Valley reclamation project, Colorado, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1481) thereon.

Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3893) for the relief of Francis L. Sexton, reported adversely thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 5452) to amend the trading with the enemy act so as to extend the time within which claims may be filed with the Alien Property Custodian; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. EDGE:

A bill (S. 5453) authorizing the payment of Government life insurance to Etta Pearce Fulper; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 5454) for the relief of Harry W. Bellis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 5455) granting a pension to William Muncey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FESS:

A bill (S. 5456) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Ragan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BINGHAM:

A bill (S. 5457) granting compensation to William T. Ring; and

A bill (S. 5458) granting compensation to the daughters of James P. Gallivan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5459) for the relief of Darby M. Callaway (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 5460) for the relief of Samuel A. Welsh (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5461) for the relief of John D. Miller (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5462) to preserve the right of the public to fish in waters on public lands hereafter patented; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 5463) granting a pension to McJimpsey Campbell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 5464) granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co., to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Monongahela River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 5465) authorizing V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Choptank River at a point at or near Cambridge, Md., suitable to the interest of navigation, between Dorchester County, Md., and a point opposite thereto in Talbot County, Md.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COUZENS:

A bill (S. 5466) authorizing the President to present in the name of Congress a gold medal of appropriate design to Edward S. Evans; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 5467) to preserve the national battle flags; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5468) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Monroe (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 5469) granting an increase of pension to Bertha Mead; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 5470) granting a pension to Hannah F. Clarke (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5471) to provide for the return of unused premiums collected on policies issued on the lives of seamen during the World War; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. STEPHENS:

A bill (S. 5472) to amend the immigration act of 1924, as amended, with regard to the issuance of immigration visas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 5473) granting a pension to Mary H. Goldberger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HEFLIN:

A bill (S. 5474) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish certain additional cotton statistics; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. WATSON (for Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana):

A bill (S. 5475) granting a pension to Lucy C. Senges; to the Committee on Pensions.

LEVY AND COLLECTION OF COTTON TAX

Mr. HEFLIN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 302) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to furnish to the Senate such facts and figures regarding the levy and collection of the cotton tax that will show when the tax was levied and what States paid it, and the amounts that were paid by each of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. I should like to know whether it will lead to debate.

Mr. HEFLIN. There will be no debate. It is merely a resolution calling for information.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have incorporated in the RECORD a memorandum by Senator FRANK L. GREENE, of Vermont, formerly Representative GREENE, then of the House Military Affairs Committee, explaining the intent of Congress in regard to section 24c of the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920, regarding class B officers of the Regular Army and the whole structure of the Army promotion list.

There being no objection, the memorandum was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROMOTION OF OFFICERS UNDER THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT OF 1920

By FRANK L. GREENE, Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives

The inequality of promotion in the various arms of the service in the Regular Army of the United States grew to such serious proportions that for many years previous to the passage of the Army reorganization act approved June 4, 1920, the Congress was constantly urged to take up the matter and provide some remedy for it in legislation.

The inequality arose from the fact that there were separate rosters of commissioned officers for each branch of the service and the officers in each branch were promoted only as vacancies occurred on the list of their own arm or branch, regardless of the vacancies that might occur in other parts of the Army. In some parts of the Army, therefore, promotion might be very slow for long periods, whereas in the same time another arm or several other arms might have greatly accelerated promotion.

The result of this was frequently an unjust and discouraging discrepancy in the promotions of men who entered the Army on the same day, for instance, but who were assigned to different arms of the service. In exactly the same number of years of experience one officer might be several grades ahead of the other, all gained by sheer good fortune in circumstances and not through any pretence of superior merit or dessert whatever.

The best solution that years of experience and study appeared to have evolved was the so-called single-list idea, which, stripped of technicalities, meant the arrangement of all the commissioned officers of the Army on one roster regardless of their branch of the service, one name following another as nearly as might be in the order of seniority of service. Then all promotions were to be made in the order that the names stood on this roster, regardless of an officer's present grade or arm of the service, whenever a vacancy occurred above his name.

It was apparent that in the first assembling of the names on a single list, and for some time thereafter, the names, while following each other in the order of actual or constructive seniority in the service, nevertheless could not follow each other in strict order of grade, and for the very reason that brought about the single list in the first place, i. e., some men of long service were in grades inferior to men of shorter service. Placed on the list in the order of seniority of service some lieutenant colonels would lead colonels, some captains would lead majors, some second litutenants might even lead some captains.

But as each succeeding promotion advanced the senior to a vacancy in the strict order of his seniority regardless of his present grade, even permitting him to jump a grade if necessary in order to do so, it was plain that within a very few years practically all the names on this single list would automatically become rearranged so that the period of service and the grade of office would coincide, and officers would be arranged so that the oldest in service would have the highest grade, the next oldest would be next in files to him, and so on down through the list to the junior.

In the actual establishment of the single-list idea in the act of June 4, 1920, it was necessary to create two lists at the start, one that assembled all officers on a single list in their respective grades in the order of their seniority in each grade, which list would be a roster of the commissioned personnel in existing grade and rank, and in effect something like a duty roster, perhaps, and the other that assembled commissioned officers on one list in the order of their seniority in the service regardless of grade, which was to be known as the promotion list, and by means of which promotions would be made in the way already indicated. But, as has been suggested, in time the single list as a duty roster and the single list as a promotion list would come to be identical.

How this scheme was worked out in the new law is told in sections 24, 24a, and 24c of the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920.

Section 24a creating the promotion list plainly says:

"The names on the list shall be arranged, in general, so that the first name on the list shall be that of the officer having the longest commissioned service; the second name that of the officer having the next longest commissioned service, and so on."

Then follows a detailed plan for the construction of such a list, making explicit provision for cases arising under exceptional conditions known to exist under the law as it then was, for the purpose of reconciling them with the new single-list idea.

It was plain at the outset that the most practical way to make up this new single list for promotion purposes was to divide the roster of the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army into two parts, the first to include all officers already in the Regular Army April 6, 1917, the date of our entry into the World War, and the second to include all officers of the Regular Army commissioned since that date. The first part would thus comprise all the elders, and therefore the most glaring instances of discrepancies in comparative grades of officers of equivalent service that long experience under the old system had produced among them. The second part would include young men whose terms of service all ranged from not over about three years at the most down to as many months, perhaps. There were some slight discrepancies in comparative grades or relative positions in the files among these juniors, owing to the fact that they had entered the Regular Army during the haste of war time and sometimes under circumstances not making for as deliberate and well-considered details of policy as in normal times, to say nothing of the effect of some old laws now found to be out of touch with new conditions. The senior of these officers in age was yet very young, and the seniors in point of military service were only seniors over the least of the juniors by a very few months, generally speaking. So that this rearrangement in grades and files would not unjustly affect their standing with regard to one another in the order of promotion because they were all in the same class of comparatively limited period of service.

Thus, while the Army reorganization act, sections 24 and 24a, went into much carefully prepared detail to provide a means for taking care of the many exceptional cases that made discrepancies in grade among officers of the same period of service on the first part of the list and had to lay out a scheme of arbitrary construction in some cases in order to effect an approximate equalization, it was a comparatively simple matter to lay out a plain and understandable policy of law to operate on the second part of the list. The law simply said:

"Third. Captains and lieutenants of the Regular Army and Philippine Scouts, originally appointed since April 6, 1917, shall be arranged among themselves according to commissioned service rendered prior to November 11, 1918, and shall be placed at the foot of the list as prepared to this point."

And in section 24a this commissioned service was defined to be "all active commissioned service in the Army performed while under appointment from the United States Government, whether in the regular, provisional, or temporary forces, except service under a reserve commission while in attendance at a school or camp for the training of candidates for commission; also commissioned service in the National Guard while in active service since April 6, 1917, under a call by the President; and also commissioned service in the Marine Corps when detached for service with the Army by order of the President."

Having in mind, therefore, the plain provisions of the law already quoted, i. e., "The names on the list shall be arranged, in general, so that the first name on the list shall be that of the officer having the longest commissioned service; the second name that of the officer having the next longest commissioned service, and so on," these captains and lieutenants originally appointed since April 6, 1917, were to be "arranged among themselves," not by grades or by seniority in grades, but in the order of their seniority of commissioned service, regardless of grades.

Thus far, it will be observed, the single list was to be prepared out of the commissioned officers already in the Regular Army at the time of the passage of the Army reorganization act, or the date when it took effect.

Now there must be provision for introducing into their proper places in this single list those former emergency officers of the World War whom it was proposed, under the terms of section 24 of the act, to take into the Regular Army. So here again, in the case of those emergency officers taken into the Regular Army in what are known as field grades, from major to colonel, both inclusive, and whose place would, therefore, be in the first part of the single list, it was necessary for the law to lay down certain arbitrary rules because it was obvious that the new officers could not be intermingled with the old officers already in the Regular Army on that part of the list if it were to be done by adjusting them in the files according to relative lengths of commissioned service, as they did not match up length of service with that group. Provision was, therefore, made for incorporating them into the first part of the list by arbitrary methods in each grade.

With the cases of the emergency officers taken into the Regular Army under the new law in the grades of captain and first and second lieutenant, however, the business was simple enough. The law provided:

"Fourth. Persons to be appointed as captains or lieutenants under the provisions of section 24 hereof shall be placed according to commissioned service rendered prior to November 11, 1918, among the officers referred to in the next preceding clause (the junior regulars who had been commissioned in the Regular Army since April 6, 1917); and where such commissioned service is equal, officers now in the Regular Army shall precede persons to be appointed under the provisions of this act, and the latter shall be arranged according to age."

Here again it was made plain that these emergency officers taken into the second part of the single list were to be arranged, not by grades, but among the Regulars already on that list, and who had already been rearranged "among themselves," not by grades, but "according to commissioned service rendered prior to November 11, 1918." On such a basis the two groups could instantly blend and intermingle without any arbitrary provisions or the creation of any constructive service reckonings at all, because the service of the two groups was all performed in the same period.

Moreover, such an arrangement would automatically arrange these two groups of young officers into equivalent grades compared with each other, regardless of the grades held by either during the war. For instance, the emergency officer during the war was carried on no general lineal or promotion list with all of the other similar officers of the service, and did not have to take his chances of promotion by passing step by step up the files of such a great list to his seniority. Not only that, but he often came into the emergency service originally at a grade higher than second lieutenant and after that was promoted here and there in the field as occasion served and necessity demanded, regardless of whether any other emergency officers were then to be promoted or not. Consequently it would not be fair to compare the grades of these officers one with another as a certain indication of their relative merits and qualifications. A man might get to be a captain on one sector, perhaps, or even a major or higher, whereas exactly the same kind of a man, or better, serving somewhere else never drew a chance to get above second lieutenant, or maybe first. In this way and for this reason the average rank held by emergency officers in the war was considerably higher than that held by the young Regulars on this second part of the list, and whose commisisoned service began since April 6, 1917, too. These latter young men had to enter the Regular Army as second lieutenants, if they entered it at all; their names were all on long lineal lists and they could only be permanently promoted from grade to grade by moving slowly up the files of those lists, step by step, and reaching a new grade only when every man ahead of them had been disposed of as a casualty or by promotion. Plainly, in arranging for the entrance of the new emergency officers into this list to give them the benefit of the rank held by them in the war and match it up with the permanent rank held by these young Regulars to see which should have precedence would be grossly unfair.

Therefore if the young Regular officers were to line up among themselves in the grades and files according to their relative seniority among themselves, it was only fair that the emergency officers who were to come into the second part of the list with them should do the same thing among themselves; in short, that both groups should match up their periods of service with each other and with the other group, and thus the whole second part of the list would start clear and clean and exactly in the spirit of the new single-list idea from the very outset. And as thereafter all candidates coming into the commissioned personnel were to be placed at the foot of the list in accordance with the date of commission, in time, as this now junior or part of the single list aged to become the senior part of it, the whole of the original intention would be complete and the single list and the promotion list would at last be identical.

It is plain, then, that all of these officers taken into the Regular Army since April 6, 1917, whether officers already in at the passage of the Army reorganization act or emergency men to be taken in under the terms of that act, were to be thrown into a pool together, so to say, regardless of present rank for the Regulars or grade at which taken in, if emergency men. And that thereafter the automatic operation of the law assigning promotion by seniority of commissioned service would separate so many of the elders into the grade of captain, so many of the next eldest into the grade of first lieutenant, and the remainder into the grade of second lieutenant.

And to this end section 24 of the act provided that after the emergency officers were taken into the Regular Army in such numbers that "not less than one-half of the total number of vacancies caused by this act, exclusive of those in the Medical Department and among chaplains, shall be filled" by them, such appointments to date from July 1, 1920, the "vacancies remaining in grades above the lowest which are not filled by such appointments shall be filled by promotion to date from July 1, 1920, in accordance with section 24c."

Here is another emphasis of the intention of the law that, at whatever grade the emergency officer might be appointed to the Regular Army under the terms of the act, as soon as the requisite number of appointments had been made promotions of the entire roster as it was then carried on the promotion list should take place, to date from the very same day of original entry into the Army under the act. And we have seen that this promotion list shall have the names of officers "arranged, in general, so that the first name on the list shall be that of the officer having the longest commissioned service," etc., and further, that as provided in section 24c here cited, it was to be "the promotion of officers in the order in which they stand on the promotion list," not in the order of their grades.

Every one of the boards of officers scattered throughout the country examining candidates for Regular Army appointments was advised of the law, of course. Every one of the candidates was himself presumed to know the terms of the act of whose provisions he was proposing to obtain the benefits. These examining boards were numerous, and necessarily candidates could not all pass before the same board and receive appointment in grades as the result of competition among themselves and in view of their relative standing. Each case of appointment would have to stand alone and be judged on its merits. Because one candidate might be admitted as a captain and another as a second lieutenant need not necessarily indicate that the second man had not been found worthy to be admitted as a captain. It might be that the first man would be of an age when, if he went into the Army at all, it must be in some such grade as captain. It might be that when the two should be afterwards compared, if they ever came to be, the second lieutenant would be found to be equally deserving of the captain's grade. But the appointing board would have the record of each candidate and the grade to which originally appointed would make no difference with the general result in the end, because the law provided that upon the very same date as that of original appointment there was to be a general promotion that would even off all inequalities in the contemplation of the policy of the law through the automatic operation of the rule of promotion by seniority of service, each officer retaining at least the grade to which he was originally appointed, but perhaps gaining in files or grade if, in the matching up of seniority of service, he came out among the personnel in advance of his present file or grade.

So it could not be true that under the law, or a wrong interpretation of the law (either way), a man once taken into the Regular Army in a certain grade might find himself afterwards arbitrarily "jumped" by one taken in at a lesser grade. Both would have come in on the plain text of the law that provided for exactly what took place.

The effect of the law as it was passed was intended to be the same as if it had provided that in the generality of cases the emergency men taken into the Regular Army under its terms and assigned to the second part of the single list should have been given commissions with the grade left blank; that all the Regulars in the grades of captain and lieutenants on the same part of the list should have the grade stricken out of their commissions; and that then all of the them, Regulars and emergency men, were to be lined up in the order of their seniority of commissioned service, and grades bestowed upon them in that order. The law called for so many captains; therefore that many of the seniors should stand aside as captains. The law called for so many first lieutenants; therefore that number of those next in seniority should stand aside as first lieutenants; the remainder to be second lieutenants, of course.

At all events, that is exactly what the law was planned to do and what those persons concerned in framing it in committee room and explaining it to the Congress understood at the time it would do. Indeed, at one stage of the proceedings in the House of Representatives during the debate on this act (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 16, 1920, p. 4412) an amendment was proposed providing that "no officer shall be promoted over another occupying a higher grade," the very point at issue in this case, and after a careful explanation by the proponents of the act the amendment was promptly voted down.

EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two opinions of the Attorney General of the United States in regard to the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, they will be printed in the RECORD.

The opinions are as follows:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, January 19, 1929.

Hon. LAWRENCE D. TYSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYSON: I have just received two very important opinions from the Attorney General of the United States, each as of January 18, 1929, in which he construes the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735, 736), and particularly certain language contained therein.

The opinions quote the questions presented by me to the Attorney General and are, therefore, fully self-explanatory.

For your information I inclose a copy of each opinion.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 18, 1929.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 1, 1928, requesting my opinion as to the meaning of the language:

"* * * who have been, or may hereafter, within one year be rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau for disability resulting directly from such war service * * *," contained in section 1 of the Tyson-Fitzgerald emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735, 736), which reads:

"That all persons who have served as officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, other than as officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who during such service have incurred physical disability in line of duty, and who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be, rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau for disability resulting directly from such war service, shall, from date of receipt of application by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, be placed upon, and thereafter continued on, separate retired lists, hereby created as part of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, to be known as the emergency officers' retired list of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, respectively, with the rank held by them when discharged from their commissioned service, and shall be entitled to the same privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided for by law or regulations for officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who have been retired for physical disability incurred in line of duty, and shall be entitled to all hospitalization privileges and medical treatment as are now or may hereafter be authorized by the United States Veterans' Bureau, and shall receive from date of receipt of their application retired pay at the rate of 75 per cent of the pay to which they were entitled at the time of their discharge from their commissioned service, except pay under the act of May 18, 1920: Provided, That all pay and allowances to which such persons or officers may be entitled under the provisions of this law shall be paid solely out of the military and naval compensation appropriation fund of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and shall be in lieu of all disability compensation benefits to such officers or persons provided in the World War veterans' act, 1924, and amendments thereto, except as otherwise authorized herein, and except as provided by the act of December 18, 1922: Provided further, That all persons who have served as officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, other than as officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who during such service have incurred physical disability in line of duty, and who have heretofore or may hereafter be rated less than 30 per cent and more than 10 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau, for disability resulting directly from such war service, shall, from date of receipt of application by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, be placed upon, and thereafter continued on, the appropriate emergency officers' retired list, created by this act, with the rank held by them when discharged from their commissioned service, but without retired pay, and shall be entitled only to such compensation and other benefits as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulations of the United States Veterans' Bureau, together with all privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulations for officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who have been retired for physical disability incurred in line of duty: And provided further, That the retired list created by this act of officers of the Army shall be published annually in the Army Register, and said retired lists of officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, respectively, shall be published annually in the Navy Register."

In this connection you desire to be advised upon the following questions:

(1) Has an officer who received a 30 per cent permanent partial disability rating prior to the passage of this act, but whose rating since the passage of this act has been less than 10 per cent permanent disability, any rights under the provisions of this act as long as his rating remains less than 10 per cent permanent?

(2) In a case where an officer has heretofore been rated 30 per cent permanently disabled for disability incurred in line of duty directly resulting from war service, and the file now shows that the rating was in error under the law or the facts, or both, may the bureau reexamine and rerate the applicant?

(3) Where an officer has heretofore been rated 30 per cent or more permanently disabled for a disability incurred in line of duty directly resulting from war service and such rating was correct under the law and the schedule of disability ratings in effect at that time, but such rating would not be the same under the schedule of disability ratings in effect at the present time, is there authority to place the man on the retirement list on the strength of the former rating, or must a rerating be made under the present disability rating schedule?

(4) In a case where an officer has been rated 30 per cent or more permanently disabled under the laws, regulations, and schedules of disability ratings in effect at the time the rating was made, for a disability incurred in line of duty directly resulting from war service, but the evidence now shows that he is not at the present time permanently disabled to a degree of 30 per cent or more, must the old rating be accepted and the benefits of the retirement act be accorded? Or should he be reexamined and rerated under the law and schedule of disability ratings in effect on May 29, 1928, or that in effect on the date of administrative determination?

The Veterans' Bureau, it appears, in determining the permanency of a disability and the percentage thereof, considers all the elements, including the progressive character of the disability, and once a permanent rating and the percentage thereof has been determined, it always remains the same unless the determination was based upon an erroneous finding of fact or a misconception of the law, and the subsequent change in the physical condition of an officer presupposes that the original rating was based upon an erroneous finding of fact in that the progressive character of his disability was incorrectly determined.

Hence, testing the language—

"who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau for disability resulting directly from such service"

by the rule of construction that Congress is presumed to use words in their known and accepted meaning, unless that sense is repelled by the context, it is clear that the words—

"who have been * * * rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability"— includes only those emergency officers who have been correctly rated at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability prior to the passage of the act. Those are excluded who, prior to the passage of the act, have been rated at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability and subsequently have been reduced in rating to less than 30 per cent permanent disability.

It is also clear that the words—

"or may hereafter, within one year, be, rated in accordance with law" include only those who are correctly rated at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability within one year after the passage of the act. Whether the rating has been made prior to the passage of the act or is made within one year thereafter, it must be in accordance with the schedule of ratings in effect at the time it was or is made, otherwise it will not be "in accordance with law."

The legislative history of the act confirms this conclusion. The meaning of the language—

"who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be, rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability"—

was explained to their respective Houses by Senator TYSON and Representative FITZGERALD. The former was a member of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and the latter was a member of the House Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and sponsored this act. These committees had charge of the bill S. 777, which became the act under consideration.

In explaining to the Senate the meaning of this language, the coauthor of bill S. 777, Senator TYSON, said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, pt. 5, p. 4687, March 14, 1928, 70th Cong., 1st sess.):

"An officer is to be retired who has not less than 30 per cent of permanent disability according to the ratings of the United States Veterans' Bureau. Officers who are found to be below 30 per cent are not retired under the provisions of the bill."

The occasion for the explanation of this language to the House by Representative FITZGERALD, arose in the following manner:

Mr. MILLIGAN of Missouri, made the statement that (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, pt. 8, p. 8456, May 11, 1928, 70th Cong., 1st sess.):

"There is a provision on page 1 of the bill that includes officers who to-day have no disability whatever, officers to-day who are drawing no compensation from the Government, who are recognized as having no compensable disability. Yet they are included in this bill. We find that in lines 6, 7, and 8 on page 1 of the bill in the following language: 'who during such service have incurred physical disability in line of duty, and who have been or may hereafter within one year be rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau.'

"The words 'who have been' include cases of officers who to-day have no disability but who some time since their discharge have had a rating of 30 per cent permanent disability. You include those men whom the records show have recovered."

In reply, Mr. FITZGERALD said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, pt. 8, p. 8457, May 11, 1928, 70th Cong., 1st sess.):

"It has been called to my attention by the gentleman from Missouri that this bill is so drawn that there is a chance that a man who has once received a rating of 30 per cent would be entitled to its benefits even though he had recovered. I wish to say that is a fallacy; it is very specious, although my good friend may have justification for placing that construction upon the language of the bill. We use your knowledge of legal phrases and common sense. If a man has been rated permanently disabled, what does that mean? It means rated honestly, fairly, and legally as permanently disabled. If a mistake has been made and has been corrected, the Veterans' Bureau will never grant retirement because of a known mistake since corrected. If a man is not rated now as having a 30 per cent permanent disability, although he had been once so rated erroneously, he would not get retirement, though my good friend so misapprehends it. The change, necessarily a correction, would show that the original rating was not correct."

The following discussion then ensued (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, pt. 8, p. 8457, May 11, 1928, 70th Cong., 1st sess.):

"Mr. MILLIGAN. What is meant by the words in line 7, on page 1, 'who have been'?

"Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That means those who have been correctly rated, but because a mistake has been made that would not justify them in retiring a man.

"Mr. MILLIGAN. Has the gentleman gone to the Veterans' Bureau for an interpretation?

"Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; I have not, but that must be so.

"Mr. MILLIGAN. I understand they do not so interpret it.

"Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. If they have made a mistake and have corrected it, that mistake would not warrant them in putting a man under the provisions of this bill, and no man would be retired because of a mistake.

"Mr. MILLIGAN. I will say that these officers have been informed by those who are promulgating this legislation that they are included.

"Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I am very sorry if that is so, because I am sure that that is a misrepresentation.

"Mr. BURTNESS. What about a case which at one time received a permanent rating, as an illustration, of 35 per cent, and then it is cut down to 25 per cent permanent? The permanent rating as such remains, but the percentage has been cut from a figure sufficient to come within this bill down to one that would not permit the bill to operate on such an individual. Would he not under this language be included?

"Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I fear not, because that is a correction. If a mistake has been made and a correction has been made, I am sure he could not be included under this bill. Under this bill, if it becomes a law, and under the language of this bill, retirement would be given only as a result of a correct or final rating of 30 per cent or more of disability.

"Mr. BURTNESS. If I understand correctly, it may not necessarily be a mistake.

"Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. It would necessarily have to be a mistake, because a man may have a 100 per cent temporary disability and at the same time a 30 per cent permanent disability, but the permanent degree can never change.

"Mr. BURTNESS. A person may have a permanent rating and gradually a man's condition is aggravated so that the permanent rating changes, not in its permanency, but in its percentage, and it is increased from time to time. I have secured increases for a great many such individuals myself.

"Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. But the permanent rating should always be the same. All elements should be considered, including the progressive character of the disability, and the permanent rating, if correctly made, should remain unchanged.

"Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly; I agree with the gentleman, but the percentage may vary, depending on the circumstances."

However, assuming that the percentage of a permanent rating may be changed from time to time, a reading of the entire act in the light of its legislative history inevitably leads to the conclusion that Congress intended the words "who have been * * * rated in accordance with law" to include only those emergency officers who on the date the benefits of the act are awarded to them have a correct rating of not less than 30 per cent permanent disability; that is, their physical condition must support their old rating of not less than 30 per cent permanent disability or justify such a rating under the schedule of disability ratings in effect at that time, for otherwise an emergency officer who before the passage of the act had a rating of not less than 30 per cent permanent disability, but who now has been reduced to a rating of 10 per cent permanent disability, or even to no disability at all, would enjoy the benefits of the act, while an emergency officer who now has a rating of 29 per cent permanent disability would not be entitled to its benefits.

It is inconceivable that Congress intended the act to have such effect and its purpose precludes any such conclusion. It was enacted to enable emergency officers who are now rated at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability to support themselves and their families which they are unable to do because of reduced earning power resulting from their disabilities. Congress unquestionably did not intend to give a bonus of 75 per cent of his pay at the time he was discharged from the service to an emergency officer who now has no disability whatever simply because he once was given a 30 per cent permanent disability rating.

In the final analysis Congress intended that nothing less than a correct rating of at least 30 per cent permanent disability should form the basis for conferring the benefits of the act; that is, that on the date the benefits of the act are awarded the officer's physical condition must support his old rating of not less than 30 per cent permanent disability or justify such a rating under the schedule of disability ratings in effect at that time.

My opinion, therefore, is that your questions should be answered as follows:

1. No. An officer who has received a 30 per cent disability rating prior to the passage of the act, but whose rating under the same schedule since the passage of the act has been less than 10 per cent permanent disability is not entitled to the benefits of the act for the reason that he never has had a correct rating of 30 per cent permanent disability. The reduction of his rating from 30 per cent permanent disability to less than 10 per cent permanent disability indicates that the former rating was erroneous.

2. Yes. The answer to this question is based on the same reason given under the answer to the above question.

3. No rerating must be made if a correct rating of not less than 30 per cent permanent disability has heretofore been made.

4. Assuming the administrative determination (i. e., the rating in question) was made before May 29, 1928, the officer may be reexamined and rerated in accordance with the schedule in effect when the rating was made in order that the error as to the permanency or degree of his disability may be corrected and his rating established "in accordance with law"; and if such reexamination and rerating lowers his rating to less than 30 per cent permanent disability, but his physical condition would justify a rating of not less than 30 per cent permanent disability under the schedule of disability ratings in effect on and subsequent to May 29, 1928, he may be reexamined and rerated in accordance with such schedule, so that he may come within that class "who * * * may hereafter, within one year, be rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability."

Respectfully,

JNO. E. SARGENT, Attorney General.

Hon. FRANK T. HINES,
Director United States Veterans' Bureau,
Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 18, 1929.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter and inclosures of November 3, 1928, requesting my opinion as to the meaning of the language (1) "rated in accordance with law," and (2) "resulting directly from such war service" contained in section 1 of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735, 736), which reads:

"That all persons who have served as officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War other than as officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who during such service have incurred physical disability in line of duty and who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be, rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau for disability resulting directly from such war service, * * * shall receive from date of receipt of their application retired pay at the rate of 75 per cent of the pay to which they were entitled at the time of their discharge from their commissioned service, * * *."

You submit the following classes of cases:

"1. Cases wherein the disabilities have been connected with the service during the World War under the statutory presumption of service origin for tuberculosis, neuropsychiatric, and other specified conditions contained in section 200 of the World War veterans' act, as amended, or section 300 of the war risk insurance act, as amended.

"2. Cases wherein the disabilities have been connected with the service during the World War through direct evidence, as, for instance, medical records of the Army, but in which nothing tangible can be found under which a finding that the disabilities were directly the result of war service can be based.

"3. Cases wherein the disabilities have been connected with the service during the World War upon medical presumption.

"4. Cases wherein the disabilities have been connected with the service during the World War through a presumption of soundness contained in section 300 of the war risk insurance act, as amended, and section 200 of the World War veterans' act, as amended.

"5. Cases wherein a disability was noted at time of enlistment which increased in degree during service, but wherein it has been impossible to show that the aggravation was directly the result of war service and in line of duty as distinguished from the natural progress of disease."

and inquire (1) whether such disabled emergency officers are entitled to ratings for permanent disabilities under the war risk insurance act as amended (40 Stat. 373; 42 Stat. 153, 1522), or the World War veterans' act as amended (43 Stat. 607, 1305; 44 Stat. 793), and (2) whether their disabilities were incurred "in line of duty" and resulted "directly from such war service."

When the emergency officers' retirement act was enacted on May 24, 1928, the Veterans' Bureau was operating under the World War veterans' act as amended. Hence, the language "rated in accordance with law" refers to the World War veterans' act as amended, rating schedules, regulations, and general orders pursuant thereto not inconsistent with the provisions of the emergency officers' retirement act. It may also have reference to the war risk insurance act. For example, if prior to June 7, 1924 (the date of the World War veterans' act), a disabled officer had been rated correctly, under the war risk insurance act, rating schedules, regulations, and general orders in effect at the time, at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability, and such officer has never been reexamined and rerated under the World War veterans' act, he is clearly one of those within the meaning of the language, "who have been * * * rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability."

The emergency officers' retirement act provides, in effect, that no one shall be entitled to its benefits unless he has (1) "incurred physical disability in line of duty" (2) "resulting directly from such war service."

The phrase "in line of duty," as used in section 300 of the war risk insurance act (40 Stat. 611), was interpreted by Attorney General Palmer in an opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury (32 O. A. G. 12).

Section 300 of the war risk insurance act provides (40 Stat. 611):

"That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the line of duty, by any commissioned officer or enlisted man or by any member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department, the United States shall pay compensation as hereinafter provided; but no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by his own willful misconduct: Provided, That for the purposes of this section said officer, enlisted man, or other member shall be held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service. * * *."

In construing the above section Attorney General Palmer said (pp. 19, 22, 23):

"The mere fact that an injury or disease is coincident in time with service is not sufficient to class it as suffered or contracted 'in line of duty.' It must have been caused by the presence of its victim in the line of duty when it was received or contracted. But the relation of causation is sufficiently shown when it appears that the victim was at a place and doing what was required or permitted by his duty as a soldier, and that, between his presence and conduct and the injury or disease, no adequate and sufficient cause, for which he is responsible, intervened * * *."

"While in the active service and submitting to its rules and regulations he is, in general, in the line of duty, and an injury suffered or disease contracted under these circumstances is suffered or contracted in the line of duty unless it is actually caused by something for which he is responsible which intervenes between his services or performance of duty and the injury or disease. * * *."

I think the above interpretation is the correct one, and applies equally to the phrase as used in the emergency officers' retirement act.

Section 300 of the war risk insurance act, as amended, was repealed by section 200 of the World War veterans' act of 1924, as amended. Section 200, as amended by the act of July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 793, 794), provides:

"For death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the military or naval service on or after April 6, 1917, and before July 2, 1921, or for an aggravation or recurrence of a disability existing prior to examination, acceptance, and enrollment for service, when such aggravation was suffered or contracted in or such recurrence was caused by the military or naval service on or after April 6, 1917, and before July 2, 1921, by any commissioned officer or enlisted man * * * the United States shall pay to such commissioned officer or enlisted man * * * or, in the discretion of the director, separately to his or her dependents, compensation as hereinafter provided; but no compensation shall be paid if the injury, disease, aggravation, or recurrence has been caused by his own willful misconduct: * * * That for the purposes of this act every such officer, enlisted man * * * shall be conclusively held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service, except as to defects, disorders, or infirmities made of record in any manner by proper authorities of the United States at the time of or prior to inception of active service, to the extent to which any such defect, disorder, or infirmity was so made of record: Provided, That an ex-service man who is shown to have or, if deceased, to have had prior to January 1, 1925, neuropsychiatric disease and spinal meningitis, an active tuberculosis disease, paralysis agitans, encephalitis lethargica, or amœbic dysentery developing a 10 per cent degree of disability or more, in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (4) of section 202 of this act, shall be presumed to have acquired his disability in such service between April 6, 1917, and July 2, 1921, or to have suffered an aggravation of a preexisting neuropsychiatric disease and spinal meningitis, tuberculosis, paralysis agitans, encephalitis lethargica, or amœbic dysentery in such service between said dates, and said presumption shall be conclusive in cases of active tuberculosis disease and spinal meningitis, but in all other cases said presumption shall be rebuttable by clear and convincing evidence; * * *."

It will be observed that the phrase "in line of duty" which appeared in section 300 of the war risk insurance act does not appear in section 200 of the World War veterans' act, as amended. Instead there appear the words "in the military or naval service" and "no compensation shall be paid if the injury, disease, aggravation, or recurrence has been caused by his own willful misconduct." Considering this language in the light of what Attorney General Palmer said about the meaning of the phrase "in line of duty" as used in section 300 of the war risk insurance act, it appears that the words "in the military or naval service" are not any broader in scope than the words "in line of duty." Nor does it appear that Congress intended by the use of the words "in line of duty" to exclude disabled emergency officers from the benefits of the emergency officers' retirement act who have been or may hereafter be awarded compensation and rated, under sections 200 and 202 (4) of the World War veterans' act, at not less than 30 per cent permanent for "injury suffered or disease contracted in the military or naval service."

When the first emergency officers' retirement bill was introduced into Congress almost 10 years ago it contained the words "in line of duty." At that time the Veterans' Bureau was operating under section 300 of the war risk insurance act, which section also contained the words "in line of duty." During each succeeding Congress emergency officers' retirement bills were introduced, each of which contained the words "in line of duty." All of them proposed to confer their benefits upon those disabled emergency officers who had been, or might thereafter, within a specified time, be awarded compensation and receive a certain rating under sections 300 and 302 (2) of the war risk insurance act. In 1924 section 300 of the war risk insurance act was repealed by section 200 of the World War veterans' act. The words "in line of duty" were left out of section 200 and instead were inserted the words "in the military or naval service." Notwithstanding this change in phraseology, the original or similar bills were reintroduced each succeeding Congress subsequent to the repeal of section 300 of the war risk insurance act without any change in the words "in line of duty."

Although these bills were reintroduced by those who were Members of Congress when section 300 of the war risk insurance act was repealed by section 200 of the World War veterans' act, there is nothing to indicate that after the repeal of section 300 those Members, by continuing to use in such bills the phrase "in line of duty," intended to deny their benefits to any disabled emergency officer who had suffered injury or contracted disease "in the military or naval service."

That Congress intended to confer the benefits of the emergency officers' retirement act upon all disabled emergency officers who suffered injury or contracted disease "in the military or naval service" and "who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be," awarded compensation and rated, under sections 200 and 202 of the World War veterans' act, at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability, is clearly indicated by the legislative history of the act which will be referred to hereinafter.

Hence, all disabled emergency officers "who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be," awarded compensation and rated, under sections 200 and 202 of the World War veterans' act, at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability, are entitled to the benefits of the emergency officers' retirement act unless excluded therefrom by the phrase "disability resulting directly from such war service."

Notwithstanding this legislation had been pending for over nine years and the act was passed on May 24, 1928, the language "resulting directly from such war service" appeared for the first time in Senate bill 777 (which became the act under consideration), by amendment on March 15, 1928. On the latter date, Senator HALE offered several amendments, including one embodying the language "resulting directly from such war service," the effect of all of which he said would be "to bring the officers of the Navy and Marine Corps under the provisions of the bill (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, pt. 5, pp. 4799, 4800).

Up to the time of such amendments only emergency Army officers came within the scope of the bill. The Secretary of the Navy thought that emergency Navy and Marine officers should be entitled to the benefits of the act, and he proposed to Senator HALE, chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, that they be included. In a letter to the Senator dated April 8, 1926, he said:

"The Navy Department believes that if the bill * * * is to be enacted that it should be amended so as to include former temporary and reserve officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who feel that they are entitled to retirement on account of physical disability alleged to have been incurred in line of duty during the World War. Accordingly, the Navy Department recommends that the following changes be made in the bill * * * so as to make the same applicable to former temporary and reserve officers of the Navy and Marine Corps.

"(1) In line 2 of the title of the bill, after the word 'Army,' insert a comma and add the words 'Navy and Marine Corps.'

* * * * * * *

"(5) In line 9, page 1, insert after the comma at the end of the line the words 'for disability resulting directly from such war service.'

* * * * * * *

"(16) In lines 19, 20, and 21, page 3, strike out the last proviso and substitute therefor the following:

"'And provided further, That the retired list created by this act of officers of the Army shall be published annually in the Army Register, and said retired lists of officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, respectively, shall be published annually in the Navy Register.'"

There is nothing in the files of the Navy Department to indicate why that department considered it necessary to insert the language "resulting directly from such war service" into the act to enable emergency Navy and marine officers to obtain its benefits. Nor is it clear how that language could in any wise assist in accomplishing that result. In view of the purpose of the amendment "to include former temporary and reserve officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who feel that they are entitled to retirement on account of physical disability alleged to have been incurred in line of duty during the World War," the language "resulting directly from such war service" would seem to be redundant.

That Congress did not intend that language to deny the benefits of the act to any disabled emergency officer who otherwise would be entitled to the same by reason of having "incurred physical disability in line of duty," although the disabled emergency officer's case might be within one of the five classes mentioned in your letter, viz, statutory presumption, medical presumption, etc., is evidenced by the legislative history of the act, as set forth in the margin. It may be presumed that while Senate bill 777 was pending and at the time it was enacted into law, Congress knew that there were disabled emergency officers in the five classes set forth in the letter of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to the Attorney General, dated November 3, 1928, who had been awarded compensation and rated, under sections 200 and 202 of the World War veterans' act, at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by reason of having suffered injury or contracted disease "in the military or naval service." While this legislation was pending Congress from time to time called upon the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to submit lists of all disabled emergency officers who were rated at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability. The lists furnished contain the names of all emergency officers within the five classes set forth in the director's letter of November 3, 1928.

On March 14, 1928, Senator TYSON, coauthor of Senate bill 777, in explaining its provisions to the Senate, said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, p. 4687):

"I will state for the information of the Senate that a list of those who will be retired under the terms of the bill has been prepared by the United States Veterans' Bureau. Including all the officers of the Army and of the Navy and of the Marine Corps who have now been found to be 30 per cent permanently disabled there will be 3,251, and the actual expense to the Government, if the bill is enacted into law, will be $4,985,100 annually. We are now paying out in annual compensation to these officers $2,841,960. Deducting that from the total under the bill would leave $2,143,140 annual increased cost of retirement."

On March 15, 1928, Senator BINGHAM, member of the Committee on Military Affairs, made the following statement (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, p. 4745):

"It is always difficult to speak in the abstract, but when we have concrete cases before us it is easier. Whenever we pass bills granting claims of any amount whatsoever to different persons, or when we pass an omnibus pension bill, we give to the country the names of the beneficiaries in order that the people, whose taxes we are expending, may know exactly who is benefited by the legislation. I have before me, Mr. President, the names of all those officers who were rated as permanently disabled at 30 per cent or more, together with the amount they are now receiving, their percentage of disability, and the amount which they would receive under the bill. I should like to have this list printed in the RECORD, without any reference to the nature of their disability, because I esteem their disability a private and personal matter, in which the public is not or ought not to be interested. I ask unanimous consent to have the list printed in the RECORD."

At the conclusion of which the President of the Senate ordered the list printed in the RECORD.

On March 30, 1928, Senator BINGHAM read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, dated March 23, 1928, and accompanying estimate of the cost of the bill. The estimate bears the following heading:

"Emergency officers rated on a permanent basis at 30 per cent or more, showing amount of compensation and cost of retirement December 31, 1927."

Under the heading appears a table showing the grades and the number of officers in each grade who will benefit by the act, the total number being 3,251. Then follows a statement which indicates that the table has been revised to March 21, 1928. The last statement following the table reads:

"This statement excludes the following arrested tuberculosis cases receiving a statutory $50 award where the tuberculosis has been evaluated according to the rating schedule at less than 30 per cent permanent partial: Army, 1,134; Navy, 66; Marine, 3." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, p. 5666.)

On page 4 of House Report No. 1082 on Senate bill 777, submitted by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, there appears this statement:

"The number of disabled emergency officers to be benefited by this proposed act is estimated by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau under date of March 21, 1928, to be 3,251."

On page 4 of Senate Report No. 115 on the same bill, submitted by the Committee on Military Affairs, it is said:

"The number of disabled emergency Army officers to be benefited by this proposed act, together with its costs, are shown in the appended letter and table from the Director of the Veterans' Bureau dated January 19, 1928, which are made a part of this report."

In the letter to Senator REED of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, dated January 19, 1928, which was made a part of Senate Report No. 115, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau said (p. 6):

"The committee is advised that according to a recent study made in connection with this legislation it is estimated that there are at present 3,030 ex-emergency officers of the World War who are permanently disabled to a degree of 30 per cent or more and who are now receiving compensation totaling $216,436 monthly. The cost of retiring these men at 75 per cent of their pay rate would be $388,137.50 per month, or $4,657,650 annually, the total increased annual cost being $2,060,418. This statement does not include 960 officers who are now drawing compensation of $50 per month under statutory awards for arrested tuberculosis. These cases, if rerated under the schedule of disability ratings and found to be actually disabled to a degree of 30 per cent or more, would increase the cost approximately $118,931.50 per month, or $1,427,178 per annum.

"Were the bill amended to provide for the retirement of disabled ex-emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps as well as those of the Army, it is estimated that the total number of officers affected would be raised to 3,225, the monthly payment of compensation for that number now being $231,999, and that the cost of retiring this total number at 75 per cent of their pay rate would be $411,593.75 monthly, or an annual cost of $4,939,125, an increased annual cost of $2,155,137."

At the time this letter was written there were 3,030 emergency officers permanently disabled to a degree of 30 per cent or more. Also, at that time Senate bill 777 only contained the language "incurred physical disability in line of duty," the language "resulting directly from such war service" not having been incorporated into the bill until March 15, 1928, and then only for the purpose, as the Secretary of the Navy and Senator HALE stated, of including within the provisions of the bill "former temporary and reserve officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who feel that they are entitled to retirement on account of physical disability alleged to have been incurred in line of duty during the World War." This amendment having passed the Senate, the director submitted another list, revised to March 21, 1928, which showed an increase to 3,251 in the total number of officers permanently disabled to a degree of 30 per cent or more, instead of a decrease, as would be expected if the insertion into the bill of the language "resulting directly from such war service" had been for the purpose of denying the benefits of the act to some disabled emergency officers who otherwise would be entitled to the same by reason of having "incurred physical disability in line of duty."

The increase indicates as the director states that he did not exclude from the list, on account of the incorporation into the bill of the language "resulting directly from such war service," the five classes of cases set forth in his letter of November 3, 1928, viz, statutory presumption, medical presumption, etc.

No contention was made during the debates in either the Senate or the House that Senate bill 777 did not include cases of statutory presumption, medical presumption, etc. On the contrary, Senator REED of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, which had charge of Senate bill 777 in the Senate, pointed out to that body that the bill clearly included those who are by law presumed to have contracted their disabilities in the service. His statement follows (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, p. 4731):

"Take just such cases as this: I had a friend who came to Washington on November 6, 1918, a civilian, with no military training whatsoever. He was given a commission as a lieutenant colonel in the Judge Advocate General's Department of the Army, and he was a member of the World War Army for exactly six days, because he was discharged the day after the armistice. Under the present legislation, which is intentionally liberal so as to make it easy for soldiers who suffer constitutional diseases traceable back to war time to connect their injury with their service, it is provided that insanity or tuberculosis occurring prior to January 1, 1925, is conclusively presumed to be due to one's war service. Apply that to this lieutenant colonel who served six days in uniform in Washington. If that man were to have gone crazy prior to the 1st of January, 1925, he would now go on retirement pay at $2,625 a year. * * * Now I want to call your attention to another case in Pennsylvania, which we will leave nameless for obvious reasons—another physician. He lives down near Philadelphia. He is now 54 years old. He never got anywhere near the front. He never left the United States. He is classed permanently totally disabled because he has diabetes; and the bets are a hundred to one that if he had never seen the Army, and if there had never been any war, he would have had the same case of diabetes that he has to-day. This bill advances that gentleman—and I am not making fun of him at all—from $100 to $150.

"Senator FRAZIER. If this man is given total disability for diabetes, it must be because the examining physician decided that it was caused by his service in the Army.

"Senator REED of Pennsylvania. It is because the first symptoms of diabetes occurred while he was holding his commission. It was an injury incurred in line of duty, therefore, or a disease contracted within the meaning of the law, and he gets the compensation, although the Senator knows, as I do, that the chances are a hundred to one that he would have had the same diabetes if there never had been any war at all."

In this connection the following statement of Senator BINGHAM is very significant (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, p. 4697):

"But under the terms of the bill, even though a man may have served here in Washington but a week before the armistice and acquired tuberculosis since then and gets a 30 per cent rating of disability as many of us easily could, if he had had luck enough to get a commission as lieutenant colonel he would get for the rest of his life $225 a month instead of $30 a month."

Representative ROYAL S. JOHNSON, chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, which had charge of Senate bill 777 in the House, explained at length to the House the differences between the original bill of 10 years before and Senate bill 777, in the course of which explanation he emphasized the fact that the bill included those disabled emergency officers who are by law presumed to have suffered or contracted their disabilities in the service. His statement, so far as material here, is as follows (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 69, pp. 8444, 8445, 8446):

"Its history, as has been said by other Members, begins early after the war, when the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] introduced the original measure. That measure, however, differed in form from this one, as shown in the RECORD published this morning. Later I introduced the bill in an entirely different form from the measure presented to the House to-day, affecting not nearly so many men and having very vital differences from the present proposed law.

"My reasons for introducing that measure are as clear to-day as they were 10 years ago. Together with a great many other men in the United States now living I happened to serve with some of the men affected, and in a hospital in France, in the fall of 1918, I saw different classes of officers being given entirely different compensation.

"The original measure was introduced to take care of what we knew at that time were battle casualties, and they should be taken care of by every country in this world, and particularly by this, the greatest and wealthiest country in the entire world. But conditions have changed again. In this Congress, the House and the Senate, in trying to do what ought to be done for disabled men, have been very liberal in some other degrees by presuming disabilities. For instance, the law has read, and now reads, that anyone who contracted tuberculosis, mental diseases, sleeping sickness, and some other diseases, whose technical names I shall not use, would be presumed to have secured those diseases in the service in line of duty if contracted prior to January 1, 1925. So the bill as it now reads, Senate bill 777, would take into this retirement list a large number of men that I do not believe any medical testimony in the world would say had received their diseases in line of duty and from the service. I have always thought—though I have not discussed the matter on the floor of the House to any great extent, because we have not had much discussion on this legislation—that probably not over 25 per cent of the men who were presumptively connected under the veterans' act and its amendments to be disabled, secured their disabilities in the service, but that it was better to compensate the other 75 per cent that medical testimony would not say had secured their injuries in line of duty than to allow the 25 per cent that medical testimony said might have secured their injuries or diseases in line of duty to go without compensation. For that reason I have favored the enactment of these presumptive statutes. But, as matters now develop, I think this proposed law needs amendment, and I am going to offer amendments if no one else does so (which he did but they were rejected).

"I now want to discuss some of the concrete cases under this law. It is very easy to talk about a law from an academic viewpoint, and theories sometimes are helpful. Concrete illustrations are the most instructive. There happen to be five men in the second congressional district of South Dakota—and every one of them is my close, personal, intimate friend—who served in the Army with me, and with many of them I served in the National Guard from the time I was 18 years old. They are all affected by this act.

"On page 4780 of the RECORD—and I presume that is in the minority report also—you will find a list of these men. One is Col. William Adam Hazle, who lives in my own city, whose office is right across the street from mine. * * *

"Right across the street from him is Alfred D. Haugen. I have known him for years. * * *

"In the same city lives Lester Kirkpatrick. * * *

"Another gentleman on this list was presumpted into a service-connected disability under one of the laws that I sponsored, and I do not think any medical testimony in the world would say that this gentleman did necessarily receive his injuries in the service, and yet this law would materially increase his pension."

Other Senators and Congressmen expressed the same view; none expressed a contrary view.

The legislative history of the act clearly indicates that Congress intended the language "incurred physical disability in line of duty" in section 1 of the emergency officers' retirement act to have the same meaning and effect as the language "injury suffered or disease contracted in the military or naval service" in section 200 of the World War veterans' act as amended and also that Congress believed and intended the effect of the words "resulting directly from such war service" to be merely, as Senator HALE stated, "to bring the (emergency) officers of the Navy and Marine Corps under the provisions of the bill," and not to limit the meaning, or change the effect, of the words "incurred physical disability in line of duty" by denying the benefits of the act to any emergency officer who otherwise would be entitled to the same by reason of having "incurred physical disability in line of duty."

Congress intended to confer the benefits of the act upon all emergency officers who suffered injury or contracted disease "in the military or naval service" and "who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be, rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability," and also intended to confer the benefits of the act upon all emergency officers who entered the service with a disability which increased in degree during such service and "who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be, rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent" more than they were disabled at the time of entry into the service, and where it is impossible to show that the aggravation was suffered or contracted in the service as distinguished from the natural progress of the disability or disease, the presumption is that the aggravation was suffered or contracted in the service.

My opinion, therefore, is that those disabled emergency officers of the first four classes mentioned in your letter of November 3, 1928, "who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability," are entitled to the benefits of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, and those of the fifth class, "who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent" more than they were disabled at the time of entry into the service, are likewise entitled to the benefits of the act.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. SARGENT,
Attorney General.

HON. FRANK T. HINES,
Director United States Veterans' Bureau,
Washington, D. C.

RATES FOR ELECTRICITY

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Hon. Alvin C. Reis, a member of the Wisconsin Legislature, published in the December, 1928, La Follette Magazine, on the subject, Ontario Points Way to Cheap Electricity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

ONTARIO POINTS WAY TO CHEAP ELECTRICITY—WISCONSIN LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE ON TRIP TO CANADA DISCOVERS THE TRUTH ABOUT LOW RATES—FACTS REVEALED ARE STARTLING

By Alvin C. Reis, member of Wisconsin Legislature

[Alvin C. Reis, Progressive floor leader of the lower house of the Wisconsin Legislature, and a member of a special committee appointed to investigate the power question, has just returned from a trip to the Government power plants of Ontario, Canada. Mr. Reis has recorded his findings in this article for La Follette's Magazine. Keeping in mind the situation in Wisconsin, Mr. Reis has made a comparison with existing conditions in Canada. Some of his findings are startling. It is one of the most readable and comprehensive articles on this subject which has been prepared.—Managing Editor.]

The greatest battle, not only of the 1929 session of the legislature but of the next quarter of a century, in Wisconsin will be to control and conserve for the people of this great State the water powers which God has put here.

Electric power is the greatest economic problem of a tangible nature before the American people to-day. The most far-reaching and intensive monopoly, barring none, is developing throughout the Nation in the business of producing and distributing electric power.

The national power situation may be summarized in one sentence: Twelve corporations representing ten billions of dollars control 65 per cent of the electric power of the entire United States. Three control Wisconsin.

Within the last two years it has been announced right here in our own section of the country that one single utility company had perfected mergers and consolidations which give it control of the utility service in 1,269 cities, towns, and villages.

RATES ARE EXTORTIONATE

Water power means more to the people of Wisconsin than to the people of almost any other State, with few exceptions. Forty-eight per cent of all electric power produced by public utilities in Wisconsin comes from water power. On the other hand, in Illinois, for instance, only 4⅕ per cent of electric power is water power. The rest is steam power. The problem of water power, in other words, is twelve times as important to the State of Wisconsin as it is to the State of Illinois.

What is the solution to this most important of all problems facing Wisconsin? The solution is that the State of Wisconsin must hold all of its remaining water powers and must recapture from the present owners those powers which have already been alienated, and must keep all of those water powers for the benefit of Wisconsin's people and their posterity.

THE ONTARIO SOLUTION

One other great government whose people and whose children and children's children can have the benefit of the waters which nature put there has taken action. The Province of Ontario, Canada, has invested $300,000,000 in the most gigantic and most successful water-power project in the world, and the government of the Province of Ontario to-day sells electricity to its people cheaper than the people of any other place in the world receive it.

The last session of the Wisconsin Legislature created a special legislative committee to investigate the water-power problem and report to the 1929 session. We have returned recently from an extensive trip through Ontario, and I am going to give you the results of my findings.

Let us start from Madison. The rate to the domestic consumers in Madison is 7½ cents per kilowatt-hour as the primary rate and 6½ cents as the secondary rate and then it drops for the large user. The ordinary domestic consumer does not get out of the first and second brackets. His rate averages 7 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Madison's rate is lower than the average in this section. The general manager of the Wisconsin Power & Light Co. stated before the committee at one of its hearings in the capitol that the average price paid to that company by the domestic consumer in its territory was 9.4 cents per kilowatt-hour.

ELECTRICITY IN ONTARIO

The first city in the Ontario system which you strike in entering Canada is Windsor, which is right across the river from Detroit. The rate at Windsor which the domestic consumer pays for his electricity is 1.6 cents per kilowatt-hour; 7 cents in Madison; 9.4 cents in the central part of Wisconsin; in contrast, 1.6 cents in Windsor, Canada, under a system operated by the provincial government and its municipalities.

The interesting fact about this figure of 1.6 cents is the reflection from it. The average consumption of electricity in a home in Madison or throughout this part of Wisconsin is from 25 to 30 kilowatt-hours per month. The consumption in Windsor, Canada, last year, was 189 kilowatt-hours per month. Seven times the use made of electricity by the home owner. Seven times the comfort. Seven times the cleanliness—and, in great measure, seven times the happiness in living.

Windsor and the border cities have a population of 100,000. There are 22,000 electric meters installed in homes. Counting every man, woman, and child and assuming the size of the average family, it is almost safe to say that the 22,000 homes which have electricity in this population of 100,000 cover just about every home that is in that city.

Another fact is even more startling. Of the 22,000 homes which use electricity, 19,000 have electric stoves. How many electric stoves have you ever seen in any city in Wisconsin?

If I asked you: "What do you use electricity for?" you would probably say: "For lighting my house." The main thing and practically the only thing that electricity means to the consumer in Wisconsin is lighting. We refer to our "electric light" bills. The official report of the Windsor power commission shows that the greatest use for electricity in Windsor is not lighting, but cooking.

USED FOR COOKING

In Madison and in general throughout Wisconsin the peak load, by which is meant the heaviest load that the power company has to supply, comes between 5 and 6 o'clock at night, at least in the wintertime, which is just the time when the lights are going on and when the factories or part of them have not shut down. The peak load at Windsor, Canada, throughout the year is between 11 o'clock and 12 o'clock noon when the housewives are cooking their dinners.

The great use of electricity in Windsor for cooking is not due to gas being expensive, for gas is as cheap there as it is here; but electricity is so much cheaper.

There is another interesting fact about Windsor. In the 22,000 homes which have electricity there are 5,000 electric water heaters. Have you ever seen an electric water heater in Wisconsin?

It may be noted in this connection that Madison's electricity comes from Prairie du Sac, which is 25 miles away, and sells for 7 cents to the domestic consumer. The electricity at Windsor comes from Niagara Falls, Canada, which is 238 miles away and sells at 1.6 cents to the domestic consumer. The distance of transmission is ten times as great, but the electricity sells for about one-fifth the price.

PRODUCING POWER IN ONTARIO

We went to Niagara Falls, Canada. We saw the tremendous Queenstown plant of the Ontario government, the largest and most magnificent water power generating plant in the world, in which the people of Canada have invested $76,000,000. It took 6,000 men three years to build this plant and canal. Here in a single plant is generated as much water power as is produced in the entire State of Wisconsin among all its plants.

It might be supposed that the reason for cheap power in Ontario is the existence of this single generating plant of such tremendous capacity and great operating efficiency.

And it is some reason, but how much? The cost of producing the power at the Queenstown plant in Ontario is about 3 mills per kilowatt-hour. This is very cheap. But the cost of producing water power in Wisconsin averages only 7 or 8 mills per kilowatt-hour. This difference of one-half cent does not explain the difference between a rate of 1.6 cents at Windsor, indeed, a rate of only 1.2 cents at Niagara Falls—and such rates as prevail in Wisconsin: 7 cents, 9.4 cents, 14 cents, and 16 cents.

There is a very interesting fact to be observed in this connection. Across the Niagara River at Niagara Falls is the International Bridge. The lighting of the Canadian half comes from the Canadian Government power plant. The lighting of the American half comes from a private American power plant. It is said to cost $4.10 per hundred watts installed per year to light the Canadian half. It is said to cost $12.31 per hundred watts installed per year to light the American half. The same bridge, the same river. Three times as much to light the American half as the Canadian half.

There is another interesting observation at Niagara Falls, Canada. A few hundred yards from the Canadian Government's plant is the plant of a privately owned Canadian power utility. Both plants are on the Canadian side of the river. The Canadian Government plant sends its electricity to Windsor, as I have said, 238 miles away and sells it at a price of 1.6 cents. This private Canadian utility sends its electricity to Buffalo, N. Y., 28 miles away, and sells it at good American prices, 6 cents or 7 cents. The same river, the same falls, the same power and plants within a few hundred yards of each other, on the same side of the river, shipping the same electricity, costing three or four times as much in an American city as it costs in a Canadian city ten times as far away.

TRANSMISSION OF POWER IN ONTARIO

If it is not production cost which creates the difference between Ontario and Wisconsin prices on electricity, it might be supposed that the difference lies in the cost of transmission and distribution. Reference may be made to the fact that in Ontario there is one big government system, one single set of transmission lines, no duplication of transmission lines, fewer transmission lines, and naturally the cost of getting the current to the consumer would be cheaper. A monopoly, it is said.

The answer is that we have the monopoly in Wisconsin, only it does not belong to the Government, it belongs to private interests. Three power companies control Wisconsin and they each have a practical monopoly within their own territory. Insull does not go into Byllesby's territory, Byllesby does not invade North American territory, North American does not intrude upon Insull's territory—to any appreciable extent. The duplication of lines is a theory. There is no more duplication of lines between Prairie du Sac and Madison than there is between Windsor and Niagara Falls, Canada, but the lines are ten times as long in Canada and the electricity at the end of the line is five times as cheap. The balance is fiftyfold in favor of Canada.

Let me say one thing on the cost of transmission. Recently I spoke at Boyd, Wis., which is served by the Northern States Power Co. Boyd is 18 miles from Chippewa Falls, where the Northern States Power Co. produces its power. The rate at Boyd is 14 cents. The rate at Chippewa Falls is 10 cents—4 cents difference for transmission of 18 miles, Windsor, Canada, is 238 miles from Niagara Falls, Canada, where the power is produced. The rate at Windsor is 1.6 cents. The rate at Niagara Falls is 1.2 cents—four-tenths of a cent difference for transmission of 238 miles.

Canada shipped the electricity thirteen times as far for one-tenth the cost! Do you mean to tell me there are one hundred and thirty times as many transmission lines between Boyd, Wis., and Chippewa Falls as there are between Windsor, Canada, and Niagara Falls?

The conclusive answer to the plea that the large overhead monopolistic operation of its transmission system is the thing which makes Ontario rates so cheap, was found when the committee reached the little city of Orillia in north central Ontario. Orillia has no connection with the provincial government's hydro system. Orillia is a little city of only a couple of thousand and has its own power plant. This plant is situated far away from the city and we had to go up the river for two hours in order to reach it. The city bears the entire cost of all the transmission and distribution system itself. And what do you think the rate at Orillia was?

The rate was 1 cent flat, with 10 per cent off for cash.

It is true that Orillia has no capital charges to pay on its generating plant, as that was paid for by the Federal Government in conjunction with Government locks which are operated in connection with the plant. But even considering the cost of generation as 8 mills—which is the average for Wisconsin—the most difference that saving the capital charges on generation could mean would be 5 or 6 mills, bringing the price back to 1.6 cents—which is the normal price for Ontario, large plant or small plant.

I met a man who had just come out of the Orillia Public Service office after paying his bill. I asked to look at his bill and when I saw it I asked him to give to me, and I have it.

There are two remarkable things about that bill. The first is that in the month of May he consumed in his home 1,330 kilowatt-hours. You will remember that the average consumption in Wisconsin is from 25 to 30 kilowatt-hours per month. He had consumed forty-five times that much in his home, not a factory. The second remarkable thing is that 1,330 kilowatt-hours cost him $12.77.

I suggest that each of you take your last month's electric bill and then figure out what it would cost you if you used forty-five times as much.

ELECTRICITY SO CHEAP IT IS WASTED

I asked this man how in the world he could use that much electricity in a month and he said they simply used it for everything, cooking, heating, washing, and ironing. And he added, "And I am frank to say to you that we waste it. We never turn off the lights. Nobody in Canada does any more. It is too much trouble."

And that appears to be about the truth. You travel that road from Windsor, Canada, to Niagara Falls, Canada, and the country stores are lighted up in a blaze of glory, inside and outside. Clusters of lights. And the filling stations! If you are on a straight road you can see them for miles away. Around all four gables are rows of lights so close that you could scarcely get another set of bulbs between them. They are 3 or 4 inches apart. From a distance these gasoline stations show up like lighthouses.

In fact, the greatest problem now facing the Canadian Government's water-power project is that the people are squandering electricity. The Government is no longer able to supply the load. It is bringing down 80,000 horsepower from the Ottawa River far up north, because the electricity has gotten so cheap that the people are using it for every conceivable purpose and in some cases, as has been said, are not even taking the trouble to turn it off. The members of the Provincial commission at Toronto told us that they could reduce the rates even lower, but that they are afraid to do so because the people will squander just that much more electricity and the Government will be unable to supply the demand with its present facilities.

GOVERNMENT GIVES REFUNDS

There are several other interesting facts relative to the conduct of the Ontario hydroelectric project. Recently the hydroelectric commission sent out 10,000 checks to farmers giving them a refund of eight months' service on their rural lines. The commission found that in spite of the rates charged they could not help building up a surplus, and since the Government is not in the business for profit but aims to sell only at cost, it has sent back, as I have said, to 10,000 farmers its checks covering a refund of eight months' service paid in cash. Incidentally the farmers in Ontario are using electricity—for pumping water, cutting wood, cutting silage, churning butter, even milking cows; and the farmhouses have electric ranges. Thirty-five cities did substantially the same thing that the hydroelectric commission did in the rural districts. These 35 cities gave their consumers receipted bills for six months' service. The city of Chatham, looking back over its last five years of operation, found that it had overcharged its customers to such an extent that it gave them a refund of 11 months' service. Eleven months free service in five years, practically one year in five free; and this in spite of the fact that the rate at Chatham is the standard rate throughout the Niagara system, namely, 1.8 cents.

ONTARIO LOCAL POWER COMMISSION

Mr. Sharp, chairman of the local commission at Midland, said to us in these words: "If we give them electricity any cheaper we will practically be giving it to them for nothing. We would give it to them more cheaply, but we are afraid to do so because we do not believe we could supply the load."

Mr. Lange, who is chairman of the local commission at Kitchener, said to us in these words: "If we could charge Buffalo rates for our electricity, the people of Kitchener would not have to pay a cent in taxes. We could make enough money off the operation of our water-power service to pay the entire cost of our city government."

You may be interested to learn about the personnel of these local commissions. In each city there is a local power commission consisting of four men who are elected and the mayor, ex officio.

Mr. Lange, who is chairman of the government ownership commission at Kitchener, is the largest manufacturer of leather in Canada. The other members of the committee are Mr. Cross, a button manufacturer; Mr. Doerr, a candy manufacturer; Mr. Kranz, an insurance man and the mayor, ex officio. We found in general that the members of these local government ownership commissions were the outstanding manufacturers of the city. In other words, Canadian manufacturers have some brains. They recognize that cheaper power means economy for them, and the public recognize that cheap power means not only cheaper electricity and more electricity in their homes, but it also means that the cost of operation of Canadian industries is less, and hence the price of the Canadian products to the public should be less.

WHY LOW PRICES IN ONTARIO?

What is the real reason for the Canadian Government's ability to sell electricity at low prices? I will not say that it is the reason, but I will call it a reason.

Guy Tripp, chairman of the board of directors of the Westinghouse Co., is authority for the statement that 80 per cent of the cost of producing electricity from water power is fixed charges. Mr. Gano Dunn, from a result of his compilations, says that 77.4 per cent of the cost of producing electricity by water power is fixed charges.

Fixed charges mean principally dividends on stock and interest on bonds (and normally depreciation, and perhaps some other elements, according to some methods of accounting, but the main factors in fixed charges are the capital charges, dividends on stock, and interest on bonds). And I repeat that 80 per cent of the cost of producing electricity by water power is the fixed charges.

Now, that is not true of any other business. In the ordinary manufacturing business the elements which go to make up the cost are principally labor and material. In the mining business it is practically all labor and transportation. Go into an ordinary manufacturing plant and you will find swarms of working men and piles of material.

Go into a power plant and you will find nothing sitting there but an investment. In the enormous plants along the Menominee River in Wisconsin you will find generally only one man around, and he really isn't necessary in most cases except as a watchman. The lower plants are run from the plant up above on the river. They are classed as automatic or semiautomatic. There is no labor cost. There is no material cost. There is no operating cost to any extent. Practically the whole cost of that electricity is paying the charges on the investment, the dividends on the stock, and the interest on the bonds.

REDUCES FIXED CHARGES

What, then, is the point? It is this: The Canadian Government, or the government of the State of Wisconsin, or the Government of the United States (which was recently authorized by Congress to take over Muscle Shoals) can borrow money at from 4 to 5 per cent. The private utility in Wisconsin is entitled to earn a return on its investment of 7, perhaps 8, per cent (and, indeed, under the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court is entitled to earn this on its reproduction value). Now, this difference between 4 or 5 per cent and 7 or 8 per cent—we will say an average of 3 per cent difference—would make a saving in rates in Wisconsin of $5,000,000 annually. The valuation of Wisconsin electric-power utilities in 1926 was $139,000,000. Three per cent on that would be $4,170,000, and the valuations have recently been increased to such an extent that 3 per cent thereon will net $5,000,000 which could be saved to the consumers in rates each year if the State government financed electric powers instead of private utilities having the right to earn their rate of return upon them.

But that is not the important factor. The important one is this: That this 3 per cent amortized over a period of less than 20 years will retire the entire investment. Two per cent amortized over 25 years or so will retire the original investment completely.

CUTTING DOWN CAPITAL INVESTMENT

When you get rid of your original investment you then get rid of these fixed capital charges which apparently are the principal item in the cost of water power. If you retire your original investment down to only one-half you have still cut down your capital charges by one-half and are able to cut your rate accordingly.

And that is exactly what the Canadian system is doing. The provincial government system, which is the producing system, is financed on a debenture issue covering 40 years in some cases and 30 years in others. The local distributing systems are financed normally on a 20-year debenture basis, and part of that bond issue is retired annually. Indeed, 70 cities have completely retired their original investment and are absolutely debt free. They have no capital charges. Some have cut their indebtedness substantially but not entirely. For instance, the city of Midland has an investment of $250,000 and has $60,000 in bonds outstanding against it. Now, the 5 per cent which it has to earn on $60,000 is the same as about 1 per cent on a quarter of a million. In other words, if Midland was operating a private utility in Wisconsin, it would be entitled to earn 7 per cent on a quarter of a million, or even more if you consider reproduction value, but in Canada, with its investment appreciably retired, all it has to earn is the equivalent of 1 per cent on a quarter of a million—a saving of 6 per cent on a quarter of a million, thus practically wiping out its fixed charges. The city of Barrie has an investment of a quarter of a million and only $18,500 against it. All it has to earn is one-third of 1 per cent on its investment. The city of Owen Sound has an investment of $400,000. It has $50,000 outstanding against that, but it has built up a sinking fund of $40,000 and has $29,000 in the bank, so that it could pay off its obligations to-morrow and be absolutely free of capital charges.

Two hundred and fifty-two municipalities of Ontario in addition to the rural power districts are now linked with the Government water-power system. These municipalities, with total assets of $82,000,000 at the present date, have only $47,000,000 out against this figure.

Incidentally, it may be added that in the early years when the Government water-power system was new, the cities came in by a vote of their citizens of only 2 to 1, sometimes a bare majority; but to-day they are coming in by votes of as high as 14 to 1 and in some places by unanimous vote. And may it not be remembered that bankers and manufacturers and business men as well as poor people have votes.

WHAT ONTARIO IS DOING

To summarize, the Ontario water-power project, which is the greatest in the world, is doing three things:

First, it is setting aside a sinking fund to completely pay for its present system in a certain number of years and thus to render it free of capital charges which are the principal part of the cost of water power.

Second, it is setting aside a depreciation fund to entirely rebuild the present system when it needs rebuilding.

Third, in spite of setting aside these two funds, it is selling electricity at about one-third to one-fourth the price that prevails in Wisconsin.

Therein lies the happy outlook for Ontario. The rates in Ontario are going to go lower, as the investment continues to be wiped out and their fixed charges become lowered. In Wisconsin the holders of the $139,000,000 (or whatever the figure may be) in stocks and bonds in electrical utilities will never grow less—if anything they will mount higher and higher—and the fixed charges—the 7, the 8 per cent—will go on forever, as long as these utilities are in private hands.

WHAT WILL WISCONSIN DO?

What is the State of Wisconsin going to do? At the last session of the legislature it was my privilege to introduce joint resolution 81A amending the constitution to allow the State of Wisconsin to recapture and operate its water powers as a government project just as is done in Ontario, just as Congress has authorized the Federal Government to do at Muscle Shoals. That resolution passed the assembly 70 to 13. It was killed in the senate 20 to 10.

The defeat of that resolution in the senate led one newspaper to say editorially: "When conservation interferes with personal profits for some one the mock conservationists sneak to cover."

That resolution to amend the constitution must be passed by two successive legislatures and then be approved by the people. The ultimate accomplishment can therefore not come before the legislative session of 1933. Is it worth while to work on this problem?

WISCONSIN'S GREAT PROBLEM

The history of Wisconsin may be wrapped up in our water powers. Forty-eight per cent of the power supplied by public utilities in Wisconsin to-day comes from falling water. The electric lighting of half our cities is due to Wisconsin's rivers. Seventy-six per cent of the paper mills of Wisconsin are turned by water.

Wisconsin may also point to the unique fact that the first water-power plant in the world was built at Appleton in 1882.

We face this fact: Wisconsin has no coal. Wisconsin has no oil. Our sole natural source of mechanical enegry is water power.

What is the water-power situation in Wisconsin to-day? There are 48 water-power sites, and only 48, left in Wisconsin. Two-thirds of our water power has already been developed and is under control. One-third remains undeveloped—an unharnessed, as yet unutilized pool of power. Wisconsin, eighth State in the Union in amount of developed water power, stands first among the east North-central States in the quantity of remaining undeveloped potential power.

Wisconsin is to-day among the greatest of agricultural States. Producer of almost 80 per cent of the cheese of the Nation, 55 per cent of the canned peas—our 3,000 cheese factories, 800 creameries, and 164 canneries are demanding cheaper and more reliable power, particularly in the face of the fact that the national coal supply is constantly decreasing, with ever-increasing price and freight rates becoming ever more prohibitive.

Our industries from Milwaukee to Ashland and from Green Bay to La Crosse will need during the next 25 years more economical and stable power, and let it be borne in mind that a recent report of the tax commission shows that Wisconsin, thirteenth among the States in area and twenty-second in population, stands as the eighth in the number of manufacturing plants and amount of capital invested in manufacturing.

One million horsepower! That is the gift of nature to Wisconsin. No coal, but God has given us the Fox and the Wolf, the Chippewa and the St. Croix, the Flambeau and the immortal Wisconsin.

A writer in the New York Times uses these words: "Our great rivers have come to us like gods incarnate. Their rushing waters speak to us. To those who listen they make audible prophecy. They tell us what in the majesty of their power they are going to do with us and with our history."

In the beautiful plant of the Ontario government at Niagara Falls, Canada, the most picturesque of its kind in the world and a monument to the ability of its own government engineers, 300 feet above the roar of the rushing waters, on a tablet of bronze, are inscribed these words in Latin: "Dona naturae pro populo sunt"—"The gifts of nature are for the people!"

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR BROADCASTING STATION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have in my hand a statement from Hope Thompson, of Chicago, representing the American Federation of Labor and the Broadcasting Station WCFL. It is a very interesting statement, which I think ought to be printed in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

We wish to express our approval of the statement and attitude of Judge Robinson, chairman of the Federal Radio Commission, before this committee. We are in accord with the views he expressed.

The radio act of 1927 evidently contemplated that the commission could, within the first year of its existence, complete the substantial part of its duties as enumerated in section 4 of the act. On that assumption the act provided that the greater portion of the power and authority of the commission should at the end of the first year be vested in the Secretary of Commerce. Presumably Congress believed the administration of the act after the first year would be largely a routine matter which could readily be taken care of as a subordinate part of the duties of the Secretary of Commerce.

Before the first year had expired it was apparent that the work of the commission was so incomplete that Congress extended the previous authority for another year.

It is now proposed to extend this authority for yet another year.

We believe this should be done, provided the personnel of the commission shall be so changed as to assure an administration of the law in accordance with its true intent.

It is evident to all who are familiar with radio that the task originally assigned to the Federal Radio Commission is far more difficult, intricate, and important than it was assumed to be two years ago. The work of the commission seems to be increasing and unfolding as the art and the industry develop. Instead of having completed the major duties vested in it by the act, the commission is daily confronted with new problems, new controversies, old problems unsolved, old controversies unending, and perhaps an occasional criticism.

Like Sisyphus, the commission is doomed to a perpetual struggle to roll the stone up the hill, but never to reach the top.

We believe that at the proper time, but not now, Congress should create a permanent commission in charge of wireless and possibly wired communications. In the meantime it is of urgent importance that the Federal Radio Commission continue to function without interruption, confusion, or delay.

We appreciate the extraordinary difficulties and problems that have confronted the commission and the magnitude of the work it has had to do. We have no desire to indulge in fruitless criticism. Rather, in the hope of making a small contribution to the usefulness and efficiency of the commission, we call attention to the following matters, which we think it can and we hope it will do if granted another year of its present authority:

1. A substantial amount of engineering tests and surveys are necessary in order that the commission may have accurate information regarding radio interference, efficiency in the use of channels and frequencies, the relative advantages of high and low power, the utilization of short-wave frequencies, and many similar matters. The law can not be efficiently administered by anybody until a vast amount of accurate scientific data has been assembled.

2. Proceedings before the commission are quasi judicial. A hearing on an application for license usually involves two or more contestants, with witnesses, lawyers, decision, and appeal. For practical purposes, such a hearing is substantially equivalent to a hearing in court, with five judges on the bench. The issues involved may be of very great value to the litigants. If an appeal is taken, it must be on the record and evidence taken at the hearing. In view of all this, it would seem highly improper for a commissioner to permit one of the litigants to confer with him privately in regard to the controversy, to urge his claims, and possibly to present matters which are no part of the record or evidence in the case. So long as this custom continues, decisions will be subject to suspicion.

3. A study of the present allocation of broadcasting facilities, coupled with our own experience, convinces us that the commission has been influenced by matters not in the record. It can not be otherwise if the commissioners visit, or are visited by applicants or persons on their behalf, listen to their statements and persuasive arguments, and give consideration to privately acquired information or secret complaints. It is our belief that the commission should set up a system of procedure which will reduce to a minimum the attempts privately to influence its action, and which will insure that all decisions of the commission are based solely on the law and the evidence of record in each case.

4. The radio act provides for five commissioners, one to be chosen from each zone. But the duties and authority granted are granted to the commission as a body. Certainly it was not the purpose of Congress to authorize or permit the procedure now in practice, whereby each commissioner takes practically exclusive charge of radio affairs in his zone. This practice should be abandoned and a proper procedure set up by the commission in order that the spirit and purpose of the law may be carried out.

5. In allocating channels, power, and time of operation to broadcasters we think the commission has failed properly to apply the sole test provided by the radio act, viz, "the public interest, necessity, and convenience."

Many exclusive, cleared channels, with high power and unlimited time of operation, have been granted to great corporations and metropolitan newspapers. In fact, nearly all desirable channels have been so parceled out, leaving the proverbial "chips and whetstones" for all the rest of the country.

General Electric Co., Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., and Radio Corporation of America own some 11 stations with aggregate power of about 320,000 watts and have been granted seven cleared channels. These three great corporations already have a stranglehold on the radio industry by reason of some 2,000 patents which they have cross-licensed to each other. Whether or not they are violating the antitrust laws, as some allege, it seems too evident for argument that it is not in the public interest, necessity, and convenience to hand over to them so large a portion of the limited broadcasting facilities, while denying any adequate facility to other applicants, some of whom represent reputable and substantial citizens in very large groups.

Westinghouse Co. owns five stations, all in the National Broadcasting chain, on cleared channels, and three of them with high power. In fact, it has so many it leases KYW to the Chicago Herald-Examiner. This is a 5,000-watt station, located in the heart of Chicago in violation of the rules of the commission, and over our protest. It blankets our station, WCFL, which has 1,500 watts power. Another Westinghouse station, KDKA, at Pittsburgh, with 50,000 watts power on a cleared channel adjacent to WCFL, causes a great deal of interference with our progress.

Other illustrations might be cited of what appears to us to be a misapplication of the test of public interest, necessity, and convenience, as, for instance, the granting of so many exclusive channels with high power to influential metropolitan newspapers; the consideration amounting, as we think, to favoritism, shown for chain stations, of which there are now 108 stations in 78 cities in the National Broadcasting Co. and Columbia chains. In Chicago eight high-powered, cleared-channel stations are in these chain systems. All of these chain programs come out of New York. All of these stations—or practically all—are operating for profit, either directly or indirectly. There are many stations in the country which are not operating for commercial profit; but they have practically all been restricted to very limited facilities.

With full appreciation of the statement published by the commission on August 23, 1928 (F. R. C. report, p. 166), on this subject, it is our opinion that the commission has gone far astray in interpreting this crucial "public interest" clause in the statute, and even further astray in working out its proper application in the granting of licenses.

We believe this subject should receive a much broader consideration than has yet been apparent. We regard radio broadcasting as the most effective means known to man for influencing public opinion, for instruction, and education, as well as for entertainment. We believe it is destined to produce far-reaching results in the thinking, the habits, the culture, and the general welfare of our entire population. If this be true, then it follows that grave and serious consideration must be given to the sources from which radio programs emanate; the probable future sources and control of such programs; the probable effect they will have on the character and habits of the people; the diversity of programs generally, whether or not they give adequate opportunity of expression to and supply the needs of all the various fields of interest within the Nation, and many similar considerations.

Up to the present time it seems to have been assumed that if a station furnished entertainment popular with many people it was ipso facto, operating "in the public interest, necessity, and convenience," and that the station with the greatest number of listeners was the "best" station. Acknowledging that there is much to justify those who hold to this view, and with a full appreciation of the important element of entertainment in a radio program, we submit that popularity is an inadequate test for "public interest, necessity, and convenience." The most popular of entertainments is a prize fight. Next to that a ball game. The most popular books are usually sex novels. We offer no criticism of those things, but we do not regard them as standing first in the test of public interest, necessity, and convenience. We believe that radio is too great, too close to the daily lives of all of the people, to be devoted almost entirely to popular entertainment.

Some stations may well be devoted entirely to this kind of programs. Probably all stations should furnish some of it. But we think the public interest requires that radio cover many fields of human interest; that some stations may well be devoted to subjects that do not interest the multitude, and yet be rendering a greater public service than some others that entertain a great audience. The public interest may be more truly served if 10,000 people listen to a scientific lecture, than if 1,000,000 weep over "Old Pal."

To further illustrate: Suppose there were only 89 printing presses available in the United States for all kinds of printing, and these were under Government control, licensed to users. Would these presses be licensed solely, or chiefly, for printing "best seller" novels? Would any degree of "popular demand" for sporting news and murder stories prove that such publications were in the public interest, convenience, and necessity, to the exclusion of books of science, history, biography, and economics?

Certainly a wise licensing authority would make a broad study of the needs of all the people; it would allocate a reasonable service to entertainment, to news of the day, to books of all kinds; it would give opportunity for expression to every reputable and substantial class or group. It would not let any single user monopolize even one of these precious printing presses, even though he promised to print what he considered a "diversified" output. Such a licensing authority would not say to the millions of organized working men and women of the country: "You can not use any of these printing presses to promulgate your principles, ideals, and policies; they are all needed to supply the public demand for books of entertainment and metropolitan newspapers." Those printing presses would be treasured as the sacred heritage of all the people.

We think of the 89 radio broadcasting channels in the same way. We believe the Federal Radio Commission has yet to perform its greatest service in a true interpretation and application of the "public interest, necessity, and convenience" in the administration of the radio law. It is our hope that this will be done within the coming year and that there will be substantial changes in the allocation of broadcasting facilities.

6. The Federal Radio Commission has before it most serious problems relative to radio facilities outside of the broadcasting band. While less obvious to the layman, and almost unknown to the people generally, these so-called long and short wave channels are becoming daily more significant and may quite possibly overshadow the broadcasting band in their commercial value. This is a field requiring great study and statesmanship if the public interest is to be adequately protected.

It would be unfortunate if these great functions of the Federal Radio Commission, now in process, should be hindered or delayed. They should be in the exclusive care of the ablest men available with ample funds and adequate authority.

7. A further reason for continuing the commission another year is to keep the whole radio situation fluid under the control of Congress.

The art is new. It is developing rapidly. It is different from anything else in human experience. It is rigidly limited as to the number who may engage in it.

We believe it to be of the very first importance that there be more time for development, for study of the art and its problems, and for a better evaluation of all the elements involved before any permanent administration is established or any final policy adopted.

Another reputable witness on behalf of the National Association of Broadcasters has urged an early stabilization of administration. The National Association of Broadcasters may be designated as "the happy family." They have got what they wanted. They have no serious complaint. Now they want stabilization of administration and longer license periods. Why do they want this? The reason they give is for the purpose of protecting "capital investments" and "future commitments." We emphatically disagree. We see in this suggestion the advance guard of an army to protect "vested interests" in radio. The very suggestion is a warning. For our own station we claim no "vested rights" to continue broadcasting. We built our station with full knowledge of the law and of the possibility that an order of the Federal Radio Commission may render our investment worthless. That is a chance we and all other broadcasters took and shall take in future. The thing we most fear is that the claim of "vested rights," subtly suggested, and persistently urged, may result in "freezing" the broadcasting set up so that, notwithstanding the letter of the law, the result will be virtually to turn over to a few great corporations this immeasurably valuable public franchise in perpetuity.

Some broadcasters are now urging in court that any restriction of their broadcasting operations is an invasion of their "property rights." In effect they deny the power of Congress to regulate this new form of interstate commerce, at least without compensating them for alleged damages. We affirm that a broadcaster has no more property right to the use of a cleared channel, even if he was the first to use it, than had the man who first floated a raft on the Mississippi River to claim that river as his private highway.

General Electric Co., with a high-powered, exclusive channel station at Oakland, and another at Denver, is now in court demanding that its "property right" to operate a third station in New York with 150,000 watts power on a third cleared exclusive channel, be protected!

It is clearly evident that, even if the legal right be denied, there will be an almost irresistible demand, on alleged equitable, moral, political, and other grounds, that stations now on the air with high power and cleared channels be permitted to continue, and the theoretical short-time license will gradually metamorphose into a perpetual franchise.

We regard it of the utmost importance that the whole matter be kept fluid until Congress has had time adequately to study the subject and to enact suitable legislation. The whole matter is of such great and growing importance, the development of radio so rapid, and its possibilities so bewildering that we believe there should be a broad and extended study of the subject by Congress before the administration of the law or the law itself is permanently stabilized.

8. We believe the commission has most seriously misinterpreted the public-interest clause of the statute in establishing 40 cleared channels and permitting the use of so much high power. We have applied for a permit to build a 50,000-watt station and for the use of a cleared channel. If such high power is to be used by others, we want the same privilege, otherwise we shall be smothered. If cleared channels are to be granted to corporations, then organized labor, with millions of members and a real message for the world, wants a cleared channel. But we believe excessive power and many cleared channels are not in the public interest. They are in the interest of the corporation that owns them; they add to its power and prestige; they help to smother and destroy other stations; they bring good advertising contracts. But they are not in the public interest as they are now being operated, and in the present state of the art, and with private competitive conditions as they now exist in the industry. We do not say there should not under any circumstances be cleared channels and high power. It is probably desirable that there should be a few such stations; but we think they should be very few, and that exceptional care should be taken to make sure they are established and operated "in the public interest, convenience, and necessity," in the truest and broadest meaning of that clause of the statute.

We are ready to abandon our own high-powered station, even after it is built, and to accept part time with other stations, provided all are treated alike.

We believe the demand for ever greater and greater power will continue. Applications are now pending for 100,000 and 150,000 watts power. We think it is monopolistic, inefficient, unnecessary, unfair to other broadcasters and to the public.

In our judgment, and with all due respect for experts and radio engineers, the public will be better served throughout the years if the number of cleared channels shall be greatly reduced and the power of all or nearly all stations limited to relatively low wattage.

This statement is made as applying to the present state of the art and the present competitive conditions in the industry. Changes in either of these may justify cleared channels and high power.

Even if it could be scientifically demonstrated, which we think has not yet been done, that cleared channels and high power afford greater efficiency in the aggregate use of the limited radio facilities, still there remains the question as to whether or not a more than compensating loss may result from monopolistic control, from centralizing the source of radio programs, from depriving many communities, groups, and fields of interest of any opportunity for self-expression. Efficiency may take too great a toll.

We believe the certain tendency of high power, cleared channels, and chain hook-ups is to centralize and monopolize the industry; that the ultimate result will be to eliminate the smaller stations, to force all the rest into chains and central control, and so to place in the hands of a few great corporations the power to select the entertainment, choose the speakers, and determine the kind of messages that shall flow daily into the homes of the land. The power to do this insures the power to dominate the thoughts, habits, and culture of the Nation.

Granted that their musical programs are superb; that their talent is the best in the world; that at the present time there is no harmful propaganda. Still, is it in the public interest, necessity, and convenience for all the people of this Nation to be dependent for their radio programs on the city of New York and on a few great corporations? And for those corporations to control this marvelous new means of communication?

Quite likely the great majority of radio listeners prefer the chain programs. They care little who sings the song or tells the story. They have little information about it, except that it gives them pleasure. They have no true appreciation of its power to direct the thinking, the habits, and the culture of the Nation. They have no vision of the place radio will occupy in the coming years. Their interests and the interests of posterity must be guarded by those of you who have been "act as watchmen on the walls."

Organized labor of America is blowing the ram's horn.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that the deficiency appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] to the substitute amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the committee amendment on page 16, line 16.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I understand there are under consideration three amendments to the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that it is true—that there are three amendments. First is the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who proposed as a substitute a lesser amount than that contained in the original committee amendment. There is a further amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], which proposes the same language as the original except that it cuts off $1,000,000 from the appropriation, so that the amount proposed is $24,000,000 instead of $25,000,000. Then there is a third amendment, offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], which puts the proposal in different language but with a lesser amount of money than the original amendment contemplated.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have sought an opportunity to discuss the pending amendments. I understand they are open to debate.

I want to invite attention to the matter along lines which I suggested the other day. I observe that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] proposes to appropriate $250,000 for the dissemination of information and an appeal for law observance and law enforcement. Mr. President, in my opinion, our Republic has come to a very sad state of affairs when it is proposed in a legislative body to appropriate money out of the Public Treasury to disseminate information appealing for law observance and law enforcement. That proposed amendment is the greatest indictment that has ever been brought against the people of any nation. It is also an indictment against a law which does not have the sanction of the public conscience. That is not my opinion alone, and I submit the amendment itself is proof of the assertion I have just made. The amendment is an attempt to charge the people of the country with being law violators—a charge not only against a part of the people but a charge against all of the people.

Can it be that there are Members of the Senate or others within the United States who proclaim themselves "holier than thou" and who propose to make their pretended holiness a subject for an educational campaign? The amendment fails to recognize either the origin of law or the development of law.

I presumed before the amendment was called to my attention that the subject of a political campaign was a matter within the voluntary action of the people themselves and that such a campaign would be financed by the people. But here comes a proposal to appropriate a quarter of a million dollars out of public funds in order to disseminate information, not as to the evil use of a thing, not as to the misuse of something in the interest of public health, but to issue public documents denouncing the widespread disobedience of law, such information to be disseminated by a political organization holding an official position, whose prejudices may be for the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act or whose prejudices may be against the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act.

Mr. President, this is the first time in the history of America when it has been proposed to place in the hands of a governmental department the authority to go forth and lecture the people of America. It is a misconception of the relationship of the people to their Government, and before I conclude I shall direct my remarks along that line. Moreover, this proposed amendment seeks to provide a million dollars with which to pay the expenses in connection with travel of Federal officers and employees "in attending meetings of sheriffs and chiefs of police and other meetings in the interest of law enforcement." In other words, it is proposed by this amendment to appropriate out of the public funds the traveling and other expenses and the salaries of Federal officials, so that, perchance, they may go to meetings of the Anti-Saloon League or the Ku-Klux Klan or the Lord's Day Alliance to aid them in their political propaganda. The amendment specifically provides for the payment of expenses in connection with travel of officers and employees, not only in attending meetings of sheriffs and chiefs of police but other meetings, indeed, any meeting in the interest of law enforcement. Could there be a more effective weapon placed in the hands of public officials than that with which to control the public opinion of America according to the personal views of such officials?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin, I presume, is speaking of the so-called Jones amendment, is he not?

Mr. BLAINE. I am speaking of the Jones amendment. I can not subscribe to that doctrine, and before I conclude I shall endeavor to outline the reasons why I can not subscribe to it.

I observed the other day that the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] directed the attention of the Senate to certain information which he submitted. That information purported to show the advance of the cause of prohibition upon the theory that the more prosecutions there are, the greater the number of men and women who are put in jail, the more fines there are collected, the greater is the success of the law. In my conception of a well-ordered community the fewer men and women who are put in jail, the fewer the fines that are imposed, the better is the evidence that the law is a just one. The information submitted by the Senator from Texas, however, proves conclusively that jails, imprisonment, fines, prohibition spies, agents provocateur have not deterred violations of the Volstead Act. It is a strange philosophy that would suggest that the greater the number of prosecutions the greater is the evidence of the law's efficiency. There is no relation whatever between the efficiency of law and the imposition of a large number of penalties. The less frequent the prosecutions the greater is the evidence as to the efficiency of any law, whether it be the prohibition law or any other rule of action prescribed by a legislative body.

Mr. President, there is something fundamental about this proposition. We are not going to get at the root of this question by appropriating more money for the enforcement of national prohibition.

There are two categories of crimes. One category includes those transgressions against organized society that involve a condition or, more properly speaking, a custom which has grown into written law that recognizes something as criminal per se that is bad of itself. That category of crimes or offenses was never created by any legislative body in this world; it developed out of the law of custom. From time immemorial, from the cave man on through the ages down to the time of the development of modern civilization, custom has determined that which is wrong in itself, that which is criminal per se. That is true of all crimes involving violence, involving cheats and frauds, involving the violation of the sanctity of human life. They were crimes to the same extent without the written statute as with it.

Through the growth and development of social organization, involving social compacts, certain measures became necessary for the protection of those compacts, and out of that necessity grew customs. In the higher developed state of civilization penalties for the violation of those customs is expressed in the written word; but the written word, the written law, does not add one iota of power and strength to those customs. All that written law does is to provide rewards for the obedience of the rules so established by custom and to prescribe punishment for their violation.

As has been said by the great writer on the origin of law, Mr. Carter, of the New York bar, law is custom; all custom, however, may not be the law. So that under the law or the custom that grew up in the gradual development and advancement of mankind it was regarded as wrong per se to kill a member of the organized community, of the social compact; and when there was no written law providing for the punishment of that offense against custom, the custom provided its own system of punishment.

And so with all other crimes or offenses. Take the case of stealing: When one tribe stole the domestic animal of the other tribe, or individuals within a tribe stole the common property of the tribe, punishment was inflicted, not by any written law, but by the custom of the organization, the undeveloped social compact. So with cheating, and fraud, and violence as against the person and as against the virtue and the chastity of members of the tribe.

Then we developed our legislative system. Then came the written law. Then came the writing of these customs into the law of this social compact. The written law provided its rewards and its punishments; but in all the development of law, in high and low estate, custom, of necessity, has been the basis for law.

Those customs included within their prohibitions that which was wrong of itself, that which the great majority found necessary for its self-defense, its self-preservation, and the preservation of the individual members. But it was a long process. Customs grew slowly, gradually, but certainly. But custom so developed never placed its taboo on those things which were not wrong per se, which were not wrong of themselves. Custom never indicated a prohibition or a rule against human action that was not conceded by everyone to be wrong, unrighteous.

Then came our modern machinery of legislation. We accepted the customs as law. We wrote into the books prohibitions against murder, against frauds, against cheats, against violence; but every one of those customs recognized as the fundamental basis for their sanctity and their force the agreement among men, the agreement of mankind, that what was prohibited was wrong. Consensus of opinion denounced those wrongs. It was the early inception of our written law; and all the written law did, as I have suggested, was to provide rewards for obedience to law and punishments for disobedience to law.

Then there began to develop in organized society a multitude of busybodies, men and women who wanted to do something to people and not for people, and then began a veritable diarrhea of legislation. Organizations grew out of the notion of some individual or out of the prejudice of some individual, and that individual proceeded to organize and to enforce his prejudices and his notions upon the body politic. And so these busybodies brought their grist to the legislative mill, and there it has been ground out, until to-day no country is so afflicted with legislation creating new sins and new crimes as is America. The end is not yet.

In modern times some of these organizations are undertaking to develop new crimes and new sins—things that are not wrong in and of themselves, things that are not criminal per se, things that do not violate any custom, until those new crimes and those new sins are written into legislation in violation of the unwritten law of customs.

What are some of these things? I am speaking of modern times. Humanity has been afflicted with these movements for the last 500 years. What are some of their aims and purposes?

The abolition of tobacco.

The prohibition of all Sunday sports.

Tabooing Sunday concerts or entertainments.

Prohibiting Sunday newspapers.

Prohibiting the opening of any store of any kind on Sunday.

Movements to prohibit motion-picture shows. These are quite modern movements. The earlier movements were to prohibit the legitimate theater from presenting the drama on Sunday.

Drastic restrictions of Sunday travel.

Even going into the domestic affairs of men and women in imposing somebody's notion on how the marriage ceremony might be performed—yes; even suggesting that there should be a single standard of morality wherein the best of us could be no better than the worst of us.

Then they intruded themselves into the private affairs of men and women to have certain forms of dress designated by law or prohibited by law. There were other movements to prohibit criticism of the preachers.

They have even gone into the realm of the wooers in their wooing, and determined how courtship must be conducted. Attendance at divine service has proven a fruitful source for legislation and regulation. In their urge for legislation they scarcely forgot the weather.

What are some of these modern reform movements and organizations? We have the Lord's Day Alliance, the Women's National Sabbath Alliance, the International Reform Bureau, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the National Anti-Divorce League, the Anti-Saloon League. If one will take the telephone directory of the city of Washington, he can name similar organizations almost by the score. It seems to be the pastime of these organizations to bring their grist to the legislative mill and here have it ground out and the law fed to the people, not as custom has proclaimed but as may be the misguided notion of some individual.

I want to quote just briefly two passages from that great Irish historian, Lecky, in his History of England of the Eighteenth Century. It is first stated that in Great Britain, where was born individual liberty, there were no official spies, no mercenary informers. The Englishman spoke with complacency, even with pride, of a substantive law that was not the decree of absolutism. Then it was recognized as the perfection of civil liberty. The historian Lecky says:

> This is the most perfect state of civil liberty of which we can form any idea. Here we see a greater number of laws than in any other country, while the people at the same time obey only such as are immediately conducive to the interests of society; several are unnoticed, many unknown, some kept to be revived and enforced upon proper occasions, others left to grow obsolete even without the necessity of abrogation.
> There is scarcely an Englishman who does not every day of his life offend with impunity against some express law and for which in a certain conjuncture of circumstances he would receive punishment.
> But the law in this case like an indulgent parent still keeps the rod though the child is seldom corrected.

This amendment providing for an additional $25,000,000 for the enforcement of the prohibition law is not merely the keeping of the rod, but it purposes to impose upon the people of this country the prohibition law, by force, and through a spy system. I shall discuss that in greater detail before I conclude.

I want to go back to the historian Lecky. He says:

> Few people do more mischief in the world than those who are perpetually inventing crimes. In circles where smoking or field sports or going to the play or reading novels or indulging in any boisterous games or in the most harmless Sunday amusement are treated as if they were grave moral offenses young men constantly grow up who end by looking on grave moral offenses as not worse than these things. They lose all sense of proportion or perspective in morals, and those who are always straining at gnats are often peculiarly apt to swallow camels.

Mr. President, that is the situation in which America finds herself at the present time. I desire to apply these observations on fundamentals to the proposed amendments. Let us have just a brief survey of prohibition as it relates to civilization.

There are two ways by which prohibition has been attempted. One way has been by legislation, the other through religious edict. The most outstanding examples of countries having prohibition either by legislation or by religious edict are Turkey and the United States of America. Every nation that has adopted prohibition as a national policy, either through legislation or religious edict, and has continued that policy through several decades, has become a decadent nation. That is the historical background, in brief. Let us search for the reasons just a moment.

The reasons do not lie in the fact that drink is prohibited That of itself is a very inconsequential element in the consideration of the prohibition question. There are other elements of far greater importance and yielding a far greater influence in relation to the question than the mere matter of the use or refraining from the use of liquors. I am not concerned about that aspect of the problem in this debate, but I am concerned about that which flows from this type of legislation which prohibits or undertakes to prohibit something which in and of itself is not a crime, is not a sin, and was not considered a sin until it was designated as such by legislative mandate. It not only was not a sin or crime but a custom so long in practice that it became necessary in the adoption of prohibition to overturn the custom of centuries and overnight turn our backs upon that custom.

What grows out of that kind of condition? What would naturally grow from that condition? I think the answer is plain. We had it in the Colonies three or four hundred years ago. It does not make any difference whether the prohibition is against the use of liquor or is against some habit that has prevailed through long centuries of practice until it has developed into a well-defined custom. It is not essential in the consideration of the question to enter upon a discussion of the use or misuse of that which has been prohibited. We have only to take another step until the same prohibition may apply to the use of other things, as it did during the colonial days.

I am not going to discuss the question of the degree to which men may go in eating, drinking, or dressing without doing themselves personal harm. That is not the question. That was not the question in Massachusetts, where some of the settlers, both Puritans and Pilgrims, believed in the feasibility of establishing what one author has described as "the kingdom of heaven on earth," nor was that the question when, through a method of legislation, there was an attempt to suppress "vain disputes which persons may beget as to religion."

Of course there was a legislative attempt to suppress such disputes in the name of peace and unity for the Colonies. But all of the peace and unity was to be followed only by the bitterest persecutions.

Then the people were commanded by legislative edict to "provide plentiful provisions of godly ministers." I come down through history to colonial legislation when the tobacco decree prohibited the use of tobacco even as to the drinking of the juice. Just to what extent there was that use of tobacco I do not know, but it was all prohibited, and any use of tobacco was prohibited, and as frequently as the legislative body passed such prohibitory law just as frequently was it violated.

In the colonial days the church controlled the electorate, and by law no one not a full member was allowed to vote. Severe punishments were inflicted for violations or attempted violations. Notwithstanding the Puritan's urge for more laws, there was no one who liked his tobacco so well, his drink so well, and hated his neighbor, who belonged to a different church, so much. While the laws were imposed upon themselves they repudiated the new-made sins.

What was true in one of the Colonies was true in all of the Colonies. The prohibitions extended to all of them, some in greater degree, some in lesser degree; but they all felt the heavy hand of the legislative miller in turning out the grist of new crimes and new sins.

But the opportunities for mischief-making in those days, Mr. President, were no greater than they are in these days. They went into every avenue of life. They regulated the dress of the women and if, perchance, some who still had the sense of artistic beauty chose to border their neckbands with a little touch of lace they were told the kind of lace they might use; but the restriction in most cases provided for the lawful use of only the most ugly adornment.

Restrictive laws were carried still further. The servant might drive his master to church, but beyond that he was compelled to sit in silence for the remainder of the Sabbath. Young men and young women were regulated as to the manner in which they should conduct their courtship. Every device of which the human mind was capable was resorted to in order to destroy the individual liberty of every human being and to reduce men and women to a standard where the best could be no better than the worst.

Then came into existence this category of sins and crimes—created by man and sanctified by legislation—until the moral stamina of the Colonies was threatened. The differences between those days and these days are not very great. The colonists soon made up their minds that one-half of the people, or less than one-half of the people, could not put all the other people in jail. The colonists knew that those things which were prohibited—their harmless Sunday amusements and entertainments, the expression of the artistic attainments of the young women and the older women in devising garments in which they at least might look natural instead of ugly—could not be prohibited indefinitely.

There is no legislative body now, there never has been a legislative body, and there never will be a legislative body that can succeed in making an act a crime and sin which is not in fact a crime and a sin.

So what happened to the taboos of the colonial days? I have briefly reviewed the results which flowed from the excesses of legislation, which were more sinful and more harmful than all of the new-found, new-made sins and crimes which were invented by legislation. What happened to them? That which will happen to any law that does not find its sanction in the conscience of the people, arrived at through a long process in the formation of a custom.

An individual may indulge in excesses; they may be harmful to himself; but so long as they do not offend against some one else his punishment is one that should come from his own act, and it does so come without legislative mandate.

I can conceive that the prohibition of the eighteenth amendment might be extended to prohibit gluttony. I know of nothing which is more obnoxious than the personal habits of a glutton; but that personal sin, if it may be called a sin—I would prefer to call it "a personal vice"—brings its own punishment. If I do not like to be with him, I have the privilege of absenting myself from the presence of one who choses to indulge himself in gluttony. All such sins and crimes with which man is cursed are of his own choosing; and he has the opportunity to bring upon himself reward or punishment as he may be able to control his own appetite, whether it is an appetite for meat, for drink, or for dress.

What happened in the colonial history of our country when the personal affairs of mankind were subjected to punishment? I shall recall the fact that when the lawmakers found their petty prohibitions, impositions, and inquisitions ineffective, they provided for more severe penalties. They attempted to make the restrictive laws more drastic. They did not propose to leave a single loophole through which the colonial dames and gentlemen might escape. So they met in special session to repair every hole, every defect, in their legislative enactments; and still the law was not observed.

Then, because these ladies and gentlemen so flagrantly violated the sacred rules that had been laid down to regulate and determine the conduct of men and women, they proposed to make the penalties more severe, to change the fines into sentences to prison, to bring into effect the whipping post and the stocks and the hanging by thumbs. In fact, they adopted the most cruel punishments that could be devised.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment to ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. Is the Senator referring now to the prohibitive experiment made in England in the eighteenth century?

Mr. BLAINE. No; I was referring to the Colonies.

Mr. BRUCE. I happened to be out of the Chamber when the Senator began that part of his remarks.

Mr. BLAINE. The same thing took place in the Colonies in more or less severity.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; I know it did. The experience of colonial Georgia is being repeated, as I understand, at the present time.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to pay a tribute to Georgia before I get through, if the Senator from Georgia will accept it; and I hope he will. I do not ask him to be bound in advance, however.

The culprit still existed. Then these same legislative bodies designed an espionage system and provided funds for spies to search out the crimes and the sins that had been manufactured by legislative bodies. But the spy system did not succeed. The contest went on between legislator and subject. The more numerous the restrictions, the severer the penalties; the more cruel the punishments, the swifter became the race; and thus, while the contest apparently was an unequal one, the people won. So these silly prohibitions and restrictions were either repealed or they went into decay through disuse, or, more often, the prohibitions were so openly violated that the violations of the prohibitions became the custom of the Colonies, and finally their law.

It was well, Mr. President, that that was so; for had the men and women of those colonial days yielded to the legislation of that day, their moral fiber would have been destroyed, and there could have been no America. Had a weak, spineless, indifferent people yielded to the nonsense of that day, we would not have had a people with sufficient courage and moral stamina to build this Republic.

But this urge for legislation and mischief-making did not cease with the colonial days. The struggle has been going on. I presume it will continue to go on. The decalogue of crimes has not been finished. There are other new crimes and sins to be created. There are a great many people who would like to create more and more and more. The eighteenth amendment is not the last. No one knows when the end may come to this urge—more laws, more legislation to create more sins, more crimes, more spies.

But the urge for the type of restrictive legislation to which I have referred is more serious than the mere creation of new sins and crimes. In their zeal for prohibition and like legislation, the proponents in and out of legislative bodies propose to extend a system of tyranny in disregard of the constitutional guaranties.

Prohibition has introduced into America the most vicious system of tyranny. The cossacks of Russia under the régime of the Czar, and the Black and Tan of the days before the Irish revolution, were no more to be detested than the spies and agents provocateur engrafted upon the American system.

Rome in her palmiest days, infested with 10,000 spies, became a decadent nation for a thousand years. Spy government is bad government. A government that must depend upon force is a weak government. There is a limit to all force. A government that must depend upon spies for the enforcement of its laws is facing a danger not unlike that of other countries under a spy system.

In the debate on this proposition it has been urged that the present prohibition law is not sufficiently enforced because of lack of enforcement agents. Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, has been criticized severely for his failure to enforce the law. Here is a proposition where those who contend that Mr. Mellon has failed to enforce prohibition in the same breath declare that nonenforcement is due to lack of prohibition enforcement agents. No one who knows me can charge that I am a friend of the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not believe that Mr. Mellon has impartially enforced the prohibition law. I do not believe that he can enforce the prohibition law.

This law is characteristic of all that type of legislation which proposes to make a sin and a crime out of something which centuries have held to be sinless. The prohibition law is that type of law which breeds the very things that have been charged against Mr. Mellon. The enforcement of this law admits in the very nature of things abuses that can not be remedied so long as the law exists. The law admits of the gravest abuses for political purposes.

The prohibition law is one which affects the individual, a law which says that he must not indulge in drink; a law which says he must not touch a prohibited beverage; a law that deals wholly and exclusively with the individual use of intoxicating liquors; a law that has no sanction in custom; a law that has no sanction in the conscience of the people; a law, therefore, filled with opportunities for its abuse in any attempted enforcement of it; a law which political organizations may use to promote candidates for office and promote party success; a law that permits coercion and coercive methods in controlling large portions of the electorate of our country. It is a law which can be used in secret and a law the nonenforcement of which can be accomplished in secret.

What is bound to come out of that kind of a law? No good thing can come out of it. The most evil consequences flow from it. The Secretary of the Treasury may be so far removed from responsibility that not even a suggestion could be made as to his personal direction of its enforcement, yet the same abuses exist. Place in the hands of the official head of the Anti-Saloon League the enforcement of this law, make him responsible for it, give him the power, and he will be unable to prevent the abuses that flow from the law.

Let us look into just one or two features of this law along that line. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington proposes to pay the traveling expenses of Federal prohibition agents in their conferences with State and local officers. During this debate some of the Senators have related their own personal experiences. I am going to take a similar privilege.

I had the honor of serving my State as governor. I remember that the President of the United States called a conference of the governors to meet at Washington. As I understood, at that conference it was proposed that the governors should take another oath of office, that they should pledge themselves to the kind of enforcement that might be suggested to them. I declined the offer. I had taken my oath under the dome of the capitol of the State of Wisconsin. I was bound by that oath, and I did not propose to take another oath.

Shortly after that conference the State of Wisconsin was asked to go into a conference with the Federal director of prohibition in that State. I was consulted. I said that I would regard such a conference as unfriendly to me. We did not join the conference. I knew that at the prior session of the legislature, the gentleman who was in charge of the enforcement of the Federal prohibition law was a member of our lower house, that he voted for every prohibition measure and to provide more drastic legislation, and I was reliably informed that he was hauled to his hotel in a taxicab after casting his prohibition votes. There is no harm in being hauled home in a taxicab, but the gentleman was in no condition to get home any other way.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. BLEASE. The Senator does not think that is the only prohibitionist who ever got drunk, does he?

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no; I am not thinking on that subject now. If a man leaves me alone, I do not regard it as any of my personal affair whether he drinks or remains sober.

Mr. BLEASE. But that was not the point to my question. I understood the Senator to say that this gentleman advocated prohibition but drank liquor. The Senator does not think that is an unusual matter, does he?

Mr. BLAINE. No; but that was not the point I was making. My State had been asked to join in a conference on prohibition enforcement over which that gentleman was to preside. I preferred not to join in such a conference.

My misgivings were justified, because it was not long after when that gentleman was sentenced to the Federal penitentiary for accepting a bribe as an official in the Prohibition Department of the Federal Government. They ask that the respective State authorities are to cooperate with the Federal department when not one, but many, of the Federal enforcement officers have served in Federal prisons for violation of the very law they had taken an oath to enforce! Nor have the Federal spies improved.

Mr. President, this does not surprise me. This is the result of a spy system of Government. Men who go into prohibition enforcement are not men of the highest character. There is no man of honor who desires to stoop to the practices of a spy. If perchance some honorable man should enter the service it is not long until he has lost his honor. There is no more detestable, despicable character than a spy. In war, when a spy is discovered or captured he is taken before the firing squad. Spies in peace times are as reprehensible as are spies in war times. These men who go into the enforcement bureau—oh, I do not damn them, I have sympathy for them—are creatures of environment and of a system. The training of the spy is along those lines that bring out the very worst characteristics of mankind, and so the spy, whether he is under the prohibition law or any other law, becomes a victim of the spy system. We are bound to have corruption, we are bound to have bribery. The whole system begets bribery and begets debauchery. No government can stand up under a spy system of government.

So, my objection to the Federal prohibition law and my objection to an increased appropriation under the existing law is my objection to the spy system of government. Yet there are honorable Members of this body who, condemning Mr. Mellon for his nonenforcement and condemning the enforcement agencies under him, are yet willing to appropriate $25,000,000 more to create a veritable army of more spies to produce more corruption and to engage in more bribery.

The prohibition law is not impartially enforced, because it is subjected to all the manipulations of politicians. It is charged, and has been charged in the public press in my own State, that those who vote right will receive immunity and those who vote wrong will be prosecuted.

I think it was suggested on the floor of the Senate—I confess that I could not find it in the RECORD the next day, however—that the oath of office of a Senator implied that he should support an appropriation for the enforcement of national prohibition. I find no such implication in the oath. I find no such duty devolving upon a Senator. The Constitution makes no such requirement. My own opinion is that if prohibition enforcement can be made effective it must be through local enforcement. My own opinion is that there is no law relating to police regulation, such as we understand it is within the power of the State to make, and such as the prohibition law, that can be effectively enforced by any centralized government. The Government of the United States was constructed along entirely different lines. Our Constitution provides that—

> The enumeration of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

And it provides further:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

The whole design of our Government as conceived by the Constitution builders, as conceived by Jefferson, as conceived by the fathers, was to leave police powers to the States. Those men were familiar with the origin and development of law, and with the organization of governments; and they knew that in the very nature of things it was necessary to create States and subdivisions of States in order that there should be effective law enforcement under the police power.

Why? The answer is plain; the reason is fundamental. The sanction for law abides in the people; there is no other sanction for law. Unless a great majority of the people believe in a law—I do not mean believe in it through coercion, but through conviction—unless the law has their sanction, there can be no enforcement. So Jefferson and the other Constitution builders appreciated that the police powers of government must rest in the States—to-day 48 States of the Union—and the States, in turn, delegate that power to local communities, to towns, cities, villages, counties, parishes, where the power may best serve the purpose of law enforcement. That is the logical arrangement of government. It is the only arrangement that can be made if we are to have any kind of enforcement of any law.

The Federal Government was designed along the lines of a Federal system. Therefore to it was intrusted the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and the duty to take care of that which is Federal; to it were given all of those powers necessary to make a Federal Government possible. The Constitution builders recognized the weight of that necessity. That idea was the only one which could be read from our constitutional provisions until the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, when we departed from the theory of government observed by the fathers and recognized by history.

The difficulties, therefore, in the enforcement of prohibition come about because of the violation of the fundamentals out of which our structure of Government grew. Because we have departed from that system we have brought about the very evils that have been described on the floor of this Chamber. The centralized Government is too far away from the people, and so the centralization of power brings abuses and justifies the very criticism that has been made upon this floor. As the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] said the other day, if I correctly understood his remarks, this thing of political control goes far deeper than the mere appointment of prohibition officers. It goes to the very proposition that under the prohibition law or any law of a similar character, which breaches the police powers of the States, the centralized Government may use that law for coercive purposes in political campaigns. That is another curse growing out of prohibition.

Out of the same situation grows another evil. In the earlier part of my remarks I called attention to a quotation from the historian, Lecky. It is recognized, I think, by all except the officers of the Anti-Saloon League, who desire to keep the prohibition question alive so that they may continue to receive their fat emoluments, that, as the debate has demonstrated, there is practically no enforcement, and my opinion is there can never be enforcement. This situation breeds disrespect for all law.

(At this point Mr. BLAINE yielded to Mr. CAPPER to request the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 180, which was considered and passed.)

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, I should like to ask him if he knows what the program is? It is now 5.30 o'clock, and I wonder if we can not arrive at some agreement to take a vote on the so-called Harris amendment to the pending appropriation bill?

Mr. BLAINE. I have not as yet concluded, and I can not promise at what time I may conclude.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin may have time to finish his remarks.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not asking for that privilege.

Mr. WARREN. I hope it will be accorded to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, before the interruption I suggested that the general, universal violation of the prohibition law was bringing about disrespect and violation of all law. The secret of that is well known. I want to read just a few lines from a very able author on this question of sanction for law.

Speaking of laws by which the most innocent actions of individuals are made crimes, and quoting from Mr. Towner, who wrote two very splendid volumes on the philosophy of civilization, he says:

> The psychological effect is tremendous. Popular feeling differentiates murder from all lesser crimes. It was so in republican Rome, where human life was notably safer than in any contemporaneous state where inquisitorial criminal procedure was employed to punish all offenses. It was equally so in England during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The complacency with which Goldsmith viewed unpunished violations of a multitude of penal statutes did not extend to murder. In all English literature during this period murder occupies a position by itself. Hood's poem, Eugene Aram, is a fair example. School boys shivered as they declaimed the lines:
>
> "And Eugene Aram walked between
> With gyves upon his wrists."

That psychology is no longer possible under a system of legislation that creates a multitude of sins and crimes, contrary to the human conception of ancient customs. So, as Lecky said, we lose all sense of proportion or perspective in morals, and those who are always straining at gnats are often peculiarly apt to swallow camels; and so the more serious crimes are looked upon with the same complacency as are the lesser crimes—sins which have been created by law, and law only.

I am not surprised, in fact I am not discouraged, as I listen to the criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury. I think I have made my remarks sufficiently emphatic to indicate clearly that I have no faith in the rectitude of the present enforcement of prohibition. I think the case against Mr. Mellon has been established. There has been no impartial enforcement of the law. The law has become a political instrument, to be used and abused as those in power may choose.

You may appropriate millions upon billions, but you will not change that which characterizes the law to-day and that which condemns its enforcement.

Nor do I look upon its nonenforcement as a weakness of government. I have endeavored to demonstrate that this type of legislation is not capable of enforcement. I know there are those who will protest against that philosophy; but let me call your attention to a few pertinent facts of history.

I recall the history of the Civil War. I recall how some of the northern armies marched through the South into the State of the distinguished Senator from Georgia, into Mississippi, into Alabama, into South Carolina; how homes were pillaged, cities burned, and the little belongings of the inhabitants carried away. Then following the success of the northern armies came the surrender of General Lee and the signing of the terms and conditions of surrender. There was a conquered people, their lands laid waste, their cities destroyed, even some of the choicest and dearest personal possessions of their women carried away; and then what? Then came the force bill, and with the force bill went the carpetbaggers. They went into the fair South, political puppets, subservient to the worst gang of political marauders that ever controlled America, there took possession of the State governments, and endeavored to force upon a conquered people their whims and their prejudices and their oppression.

What happened? There were yet men of honor in the South, conquered as they were; but when the conquering powers attempted to impose upon them a repressive government, an unjust government, an unholy government, the glory and the honor of the men of the South, through their courage, beat it back.

Sometimes it became necessary for them to resist the oppressors by force, sometimes by nonresistance; but the force bill and some of the so-called reconstruction bills, with the decree of carpetbaggers, were laws that found no sanction in the hearts of the people either in the South or in the North. Those legislative acts were held as naught by all the Nation. Thank God that the red blood in the veins of the North and South made it possible to throw off the curse of that oppression! The laws of Congress, the commands of the carpetbaggers, and all the tyranny that was attempted upon the Southern States was as naught, because those laws found no sanction in the customs of civilization or in the conscience of the people of America.

So with your prohibitory laws, in the enforcement of which you attempt to destroy every constitutional guaranty. Why, the zeal of some men is such that they would break down the constitutional guaranty against search and seizure. They would break down the constitutional guaranty against the invasion of the home. They would break down the constitutional guaranty of the right of trial by jury. There are some so violent in their zeal for the enforcement of this unholy and unjust imposition that they would call out the armies and the navies to enforce it.

Mr. President, when a people are confronted with that sort of thing, the spirit of our fathers, the brave men of the North and the South, returns to us. Tyranny, whether in the name of prohibition or any other name, will never be able to make its power felt in America.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I want to ask the Senator whether his attention has been called to the fact that there has been a fourth individual in the last day or so sentenced to imprisonment for life in the State of Michigan for violation of the Volstead Act?

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, yes; some, in their zeal, would advocate prison sentences for life, some would advocate hanging. They are already advocating that the death penalty be imposed.

Mr. BRUCE. In that connection, I will ask the Senator to allow me to refresh his memory to the extent of reminding him that in the recent essays written pursuant to the competition that was invited by Mr. Durant, not a few of the essayists even advocated torture, and whipping, and all sorts of extreme physical penalties, for violation of the Volstead Act, all of which, it seems to me, tends to bear out the famous historic statement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] that the Volstead law is a jackass law.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make the point of no quorum?

Mr. BLAINE. I choose to conclude my remarks for the day so far as they apply to the particular question I am now discussing. I would like to close that part of my remarks without the interruption caused by the call of a quorum.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator may be given time to complete what he wishes to say.

Mr. BLAINE. I thank the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HEFLIN. Considering the tenor of the debate, I am sorry that the other Members of the Senate are not here. They would be enlightened and inspired, and I would like to have them come in and hear the debate.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, following my remarks upon the impotency of legislation, the sanction for which does not abide in the people, as I have demonstrated by the recitation of very recent history, I want to discuss the question of repeal.

If I understand the origin of law, if I have any conception of what constitutes the sanction for law, I conceive that there are four ways by which a law may be repealed. A law may be repealed indirectly, and in effect, by a common consent, by permitting the law to become a mere rod to be placed back of the clock, but to be used sparingly, if at all. That is one method for the repeal of a law, and a method that has been often practiced in America and in all English-speaking nations.

Another method is by nonresistance, a method which I have described as applied to the force law, and some of the reconstruction laws following the Civil War.

There is another way—that is, by revolution, by the overturning of the government. That method has been observed in many countries and at many times. We have had that method observed in very recent history.

The period of revolution that impresses us the most obtained in Europe about the time of the French Revolution, out of which grew the overthrow of many governments.

There is the fourth method—that is, by direct repeal by the legislative body creating the law.

There may never come the day when repeal of the Volstead Act or renouncement of the eighteenth amendment will be by legislative act, but if the debate on this amendment is any measure of the prospect of repeal by nonresistance and by common consent, the time is drawing near when the Volstead Act will be effectually repealed and prohibition held as naught. The "noble experiment" is going the same way as the noble experiments of the colonial days.

As I sat here and listened to the debate on this proposition it appeared to me that the repeal of the Volstead Act and the nullification of the eighteenth amendment are being effectuated by the method of nonresistance, and by common consent that the law shall not be observed. So I conclude that any law can not be enforced when one-half of the people must put the other half in jail.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURATION

During the delivery of Mr. BLAINE's speech—

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Order of Business No. 1476, being Senate Joint Resolution 180. It is the joint resolution which authorizes the necessary arrangements to be made for the inauguration of the incoming President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the joint resolution be read.

Mr. CAPPER. I will say to the Senator it merely authorizes the inaugural committee to use certain grounds and equipment and to build reviewing stands. It is similar to joint resolutions which have been adopted in past years to provide for the presidential inauguration. The passage of the joint resolution is asked for by the inaugural committee and the District Commissioners and the legal department of the Government.

Mr. MOSES. Let me ask the Senator if that is the joint resolution which was brought to his attention by Commissioner Dougherty?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; it has the approval of Commissioner Dougherty.

Mr. MOSES. The joint committee on arrangements is very familiar with the joint resolution. As the Senator from Kansas has stated, it is one of the routine measures in connection with the inauguration ceremonies.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall have to object if the consideration of the joint resolution leads to any debate.

Mr. MOSES. There will not be any, I will say to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator if the joint resolution was reported unanimously by the committee?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; and it has been on the calendar several days, but I have been unable to secure consideration for it because of the executive session. The failure to act on it is delaying the inaugural program in the city.

Mr. MOSES. The joint resolution is in the same form, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee, that was employed in connection with the passage of similar joint resolutions for the inaugurations of 4 years ago and 8 years ago and as far back as 16 years ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WARREN. I will have to object if it shall lead to debate; otherwise, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect in March, 1929, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in section 4, page 5, line 10, after the word "Company" to insert "the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., and radio broadcasting companies," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is hereby authorized to grant permits, under such restrictions as he may deem necessary, to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies for the use of any reservations or other public spaces in the city of Washington under his control on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect in March, 1929: Provided, That in his opinion no serious or permanent injuries will be thereby inflicted upon such reservations or public spaces or statuary thereon; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said city of Washington under their control as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands or platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid, including such as may be erected in connection with the display of fireworks, shall be under the supervision of the said inaugural committee, and in accordance with the plans and designs to be approved by the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the Architect of the United States Capitol: And provided further, That the reservations or public spaces occupied by the stands or other structures shall after the inauguration be promptly restored to their condition before such occupation, and that the inaugural committee shall indemnify the War Department for any damage of any kind whatsoever upon such reservations or spaces by reason of such use.

SEC. 2. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the inaugural committee for said inaugural ceremonies to stretch suitable overhead conductors, with sufficient supports wherever necessary, for the purpose of connecting with the present supply of light for the purpose of effecting the said illumination: Provided, That if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illuminating or other purposes over any park or reservation in the District of Columbia the work of erection and removal of said wires shall be under the supervision of the official in charge of said park or reservation: Provided further, That the said conductors shall not be used for conveying electrical currents after March 8, 1929, and shall, with their supports, be fully and entirely removed from the streets and avenues of the said city of Washington on or before March 15, 1929: And provided further, That the stretching and removing of the said wires shall be under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall see that the provisions of this resolution are enforced, that all needful precautions are taken for the protection of the public, and that the pavement of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed is replaced in as good condition as before entering upon the work herein authorized: And provided further, That no expense or damage on account of or due to the stretching, operation, or removal of the said temporary overhead conductors shall be incurred by the United States or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized to loan to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies such hospital tents, smaller tents, camp appliances, ensigns, flags, and signal numbers, etc., belonging to the Government of the United States—except battle flags—that are not now in use and may be suitable and proper for decoration, and which may, in their judgment, be spared without detriment to the public service, such flags to be used in connection with said ceremonies by said committee under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the said Secretaries, or either of them, in decorating the fronts of public buildings and other places on the line of march between the Capitol and the Executive Mansion and the interior of the reception hall: Provided, That the loan of the said hospital tents, smaller tents, camp appliances, ensigns, flags and signal numbers, etc., to said committee shall not take place prior to the 23d of February, and they shall be returned by the 9th day of March, 1929: Provided further, That the said committee shall indemnify the said departments, or either of them, for any loss or damage to such flags not necessarily incident to such use. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the inaugural committee for the purpose of caring for the sick, injured, and infirm on the occasion of said inauguration such hospital tents and camp appliances, and other necessaries, hospital furniture and utensils of all descriptions, ambulances, horses, drivers, stretchers, and Red Cross flags and poles belonging to the Government of the United States as in his judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the inauguration: And provided further, That the inaugural committee shall indemnify the War Department for any loss or damage to such hospital tents and appliances, as aforesaid, not necessarily incident to such use.

SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to permit the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the Postal Telegraph Co., the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., and radio broadcasting companies to extend overhead wires to such points along the line of parade as shall be deemed by the chief marshal convenient for use in connection with the parade and other inaugural purposes, the said wires to be taken down within 10 days after the conclusion of the ceremonies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAINE having concluded his speech for the day,

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] does not care to discuss his amendment further, and I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow; that a vote be had on the pending amendment, and all amendments thereto, by 1 o'clock to-morrow; that a vote be had on the McKellar amendment at not later than 3 o'clock to-morrow; and that after 3 o'clock all debate be limited on the bill and amendments to 10 minutes.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I can not consent to all of those conditions, and I make this suggestion: There are very few Senators present at this time; there are many Senators, perhaps, interested in this matter, although I do not know, as I have not conferred with them, and I think that in fairness to the absent Senators, the Senator from Kansas is taking in altogether too much territory. Therefore I would object.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I want to make another suggestion.

Mr. WARREN. I would find fault with the Senator from Kansas because he does not ask enough. I do not know what my friend the Senator from Wisconsin could want more than to allow Senators after a while to express their opinions through their votes. He must be aware of the fact that every Member of the Senate knows how he is going to vote. Why keep Senators waiting two or three days?

Mr. BLAINE. I am not in that fortunate situation where I know how the Members of the Senate are going to vote or how many may want to debate the proposition.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, no notice was given of a meeting to-night, and I think it would be unfair to hold for a night session the Senators who are here.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. Just a moment. I hope the Senator from Wyoming who is in charge of the bill will give notice now that upon to-morrow he will insist upon Senators staying and have a night meeting, if necessary, until we can dispose of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I shall certainly ask when we meet to-morrow that we shall remain in session until the bill has been disposed of.

Mr. CURTIS. I shall take it upon myself to notify Senators in person, or have them notified, that they will be asked to remain to-morrow until the bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. HEFLIN. I believe that if the Senator would leave out the 10-minute limitation, we might agree on the vote at 1 o'clock and the vote at 3 o'clock. We can probably get an agreement to-morrow on a 10 or 15 minutes' limitation. I would not combine that with the other two requests. I believe we can agree on the other two. I will agree, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BLAINE. As to the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas that the Senator from Wyoming ask that the bill be taken up at 12 o'clock to-morrow and proceeded with until it is disposed of, I shall not object to that; but I do not want a unanimous-consent agreement in regard to it. I am perfectly willing, however, to go ahead and finish this measure if it takes all winter.

Mr. WARREN. I take it from that that the Senator is willing, when we start work to-morrow, to remain at work until we finish the consideration of the bill, although it may be as late as we are working to-night or even later. So far as I am concerned, it would not matter if the Senators wish to debate the bill until any hour in the night. I should enjoy it, of course, as I have already enjoyed being here many hours last week and several hours this afternoon listening to Senators debate the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I suggest that we might be able to get an agreement to vote on the pending amendment and the substitute amendment therefor and all amendments thereto, omitting any reference in the agreement to the McKellar amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. At not later than 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MOSES. Meeting at 12 o'clock?

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest that the Senator make it a quarter after 1. We might have a quorum call and that would take some time.

Mr. BLAINE. My understanding is that there are other Senators who wish to debate the pending question. That was my understanding this afternoon. I do not know that I should have undertaken to consume so much time to-day.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator object to the last suggestion made?

Mr. BLAINE. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming is good, that we recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. Then the Senate will have charge of the matter, and if it is necessary to remain in session at night to finish the consideration of the bill, I think we will be willing to stay here for that purpose.

Mr. MOSES. We can do that anyway without any agreement.

Mr. BLAINE. The attendance is too small now to agree otherwise.

Mr. MOSES. Even with or without the acquiescence of the Senator from Wisconsin, we can do that.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, I may be able to persuade the leaders to follow me in the matter.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wonder if the Senator from Wisconsin would object to voting on the Harris amendment not later than a quarter after 1 to-morrow?

Mr. BLAINE. I object to any unanimous-consent agreement for voting.

Mr. MOSES. It is not a final vote on the bill, the Senator understands.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand, but the only important issue is the amendment and not the bill itself.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no; the question involved in the contention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is quite as important.

Mr. HEFLIN. That involves the refund of taxes. There is quite a big fight involved in that matter.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not debated that question yet, and the Senator from Tennessee has not debated it.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the Senator from Tennessee is going to debate it before it is disposed of.

Mr. GEORGE. That is why I suggested that the two be not coupled together, because the McKellar amendment will necessarily call for quite a good deal of discussion. Might we not have a limitation of debate to-morrow on the particular amendment now pending and all amendments to it?

Mr. MOSES. Recalling the attempt for negotiations between the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] the other day with reference to fixing a time for a vote on the nomination of the Secretary of the Interior, possibly they can agree now to arrange for an hour to vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think 1 o'clock is rather too early. I would suggest to the Senator that he make it 3 o'clock and a limit on debate to 15 minutes.

Mr. MOSES. Why not 2 o'clock?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not object to 2 o'clock, but let us limit debate to 15 minutes.

Mr. BLAINE. If we had a larger attendance at this time I would not object, but I do not want to barter away the rights and privileges of the absentees. I am disposed to object to the proposals for unanimous consent in toto.

Mr. WARREN. I wish the Senator might do that, not so much because I care whether it is 1 o'clock or 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock, but I think we would accommodate many more Senators in that way than otherwise.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Blaine	Curtis	McNary	Sheppard
Bingham	Fess	Metcalf	Simmons
Blease	Frazier	Moses	Smith
Bratton	George	Neely	Steiwer
Brookhart	Hale	Norbeck	Trammell
Bruce	Harris	Nye	Tyson
Burton	Hastings	Phipps	Vandenberg
Capper	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Copeland	Jones	Sackett
Couzens	McKellar	Schall

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is necessarily detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. GLASS answered to his name when called.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. BRATTON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LARRAZOLO] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it is apparent that no quorum is going to be obtained at this time. I move, therefore, in accordance with the agreement already entered into, that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being under unanimous-consent agreement, until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 22, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, January 21, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We believe that the steady, sustained mercy with which we are blest has its fountainhead in Thee, O God. Yesterday has gone, to-day is here. In our labors inspire us to pursue the good and the wise with energy and devotion, that they may bring blessing to our fellows and ennoblement to ourselves. As selected servants and leaders of the people, Oh, may we carry their needs in our hearts. Let us be very, very sure that we live to serve them. We most earnestly ask for the master mind and for the master heart; then mercifully lead us to put ourselves in line with the best possible progress. Whatever may betide, we pray not to allow us to lose heart beneath a gray sky. Whatever fails us, whatever may thrust itself upon us, we thank Thee that it shall not be able to separate us from the love and mercy of our Heavenly Father, who blesses our common devotion, our common effort, and our common sacrifice. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

DEATH OF A FORMER MEMBER

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes to announce the death of a former Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce the death on Wednesday, January 16, 1929, at his home in Grand Rapids, Mich., of a former Member of the House, Capt. Charles E. Belknap.

Captain Belknap had a distinguished career. He rendered honorable and conspicuous service to his city, State, and Nation, both as a soldier and in civil life. Born at Massena, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., October 17, 1846, he came to Grand Rapids in 1855, where he lived until his death. He enlisted as a private in the Civil War in August, 1862, before he was 16 years of age, and served throughout the remainder of the war. He was successively promoted to sergeant, sergeant major, second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain, being commissioned captain January 22, 1864, when he was barely 18 years of age. His three commissions were by special mention for merit by Gen. Phil Sheridan.

He was a Member of this body from 1889 to 1893 during the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses and served his city and State in other official positions. Whether in public or private life he was always active in every movement to promote the welfare of the public. He was an authority upon the pioneer history of his city and State and was constantly called upon to write and speak about it. For many years he was an active and inspiring leader in the Boy Scout movement and was remarkably alert and active in mind and body up to the very beginning of his last illness a few months ago. He was wont to speak of himself as being 80 or 81 years young and he lived the part. His wide circle of acquaintances, old and young, had an affectionate regard for him. He has been referred to as "Grand Rapids's best-loved citizen." He will be greatly missed by the community in which he lived for so many years and of which he was such a component part.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Memorials I offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman of Idaho presents a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 295

Resolved, That on Wednesday, February 20, 1929, immediately after the approval of the Journal, the House shall stand at recess for the purpose of holding the memorial services as arranged by the Committee on Memorials under the provisions of clause 40a of Rule XI. At the conclusion of the recess the Speaker shall call the House to order and then, as a further mark of respect to the memories of the deceased, he shall declare the House adjourned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the proponent of the resolution a question, why the date has been fixed for Wednesday, which is Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. FRENCH. I will say to the gentleman that Wednesday, February 20, is so near the end of the session that under the rule it is no longer Calendar Wednesday. It is within two weeks of the end of the session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I see. Still reserving the right to object, I am curious about the way Calendar Wednesday is so frequently set aside that certain committees are never reached on the calendar. The committee of which I have the honor to be chairman has not been reached on Calendar Wednesday call for several years.

Mr. FRENCH. I will say to the gentleman, so far as our choosing this day is concerned, it does not interfere with Calendar Wednesday, because the last Calendar Wednesday, under the rules, would be a week prior to this date.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That relieves the gentleman from Idaho from any disloyalty toward this very sacred day.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have not the floor.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman has any legislation pending before his committee that he desires to get through and the committee is not reached on Calendar Wednesday, he might see what can be done toward obtaining a special rule. If it is very important legislation, let us see if we can not attend to it under one rule or another.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have had several requests, some of them in writing, before the Rules Committee and the steering committee for the consideration of legislation which has been on the calendar for one year.

Mr. SNELL. May I ask the gentleman a question? The gentleman came to me several days ago and said he was going to rewrite and then present the legislation. The gentleman said that he himself was going to rewrite it in a week.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly; but I would like to have an assurance from the committee.

Mr. SNELL. You can not consider it without its being rewritten.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have a bill on the calendar which is in the form of a deportation law which the country is clamoring for. The reason why I am proposing the rewriting of it is because the bill in its present shape seems to get no consideration, although it is needed.

Mr. CLARKE. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker. Let us end this confusion from lack of knowledge.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FRENCH. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House be given 10 legislative days, following the day fixed for memorial services February 20, for extension of their remarks on the life, character, and public services of former Members of the Congress in whose memory the services will be held.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House be given 10 legislative days for the extension of their remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week may be in order on Thursday instead of Wednesday. I make this request because a number of Members, including some members of the Committee on Public Lands, wish to attend the launching of a ship on Wednesday, that committee having the call; and for this reason they would like to exchange days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee I present a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations on the bill (H. R. 16422) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska presents a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations, accompanying the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report (No. 2151) accompanying the bill (H. R. 16422) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves all points of order.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

BENICIA ARSENAL

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, our colleague, Mr. CURRY, of California, who is physically unable to be here, is very deeply interested in a bill that passed the Senate in December and which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and after careful consideration on our part has been reported favorably to this House. When it was reported to the House it was placed on the Private Calendar, and being on the Private Calendar it can not come up on the Consent Calendar.

This is a matter of great public importance, Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, because of the fact that it involves a very important improvement by the Southern Pacific Railroad for the benefit of the public. It involves the right of way over the Benicia Arsenal, 40 miles out of San Francisco, and in compensation for the right of way the railroad agrees to build two new ammunition magazines and to grant 100 acres of land to constitute a safety zone between the right of way and the arsenal.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. How did the bill get on the Private Calendar—by error?

Mr. McSWAIN. I presume it was put on there properly, because it grants public property to a private corporation, and while it is in consideration of certain benefits received by the Government it did not so appear on the face of the bill, but it does so appear from the evidence. I ask unanimous consent that a bill of such public importance and so vitally affecting our friend, Mr. CURRY, of California, be taken from the Speaker's desk and be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a chance to read that bill. If the gentleman wants to put it on the Consent Calendar, where it will be reached in its order, I shall not object. I shall not object to the request if I have a chance to examine the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this bill is properly on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BEGG. Then it can not be transferred to the Consent Calendar.

Mr. TILSON. It may be properly on the Private Calendar, as it certainly is on its face, but it would appear that the United States is going to get great benefit out of this legislation.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; a greater benefit than any private corporation.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman from Connecticut supports the bill on that ground, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. TILSON. I am familiar with the provisions of the bill and the conditions surrounding the property in question, and I believe that it will be of distinct benefit to have this railroad cross the Benicia Arsenal grounds, as it is to be placed in accordance with this bill.

Mr. BEGG. Is not the right way to deal with this by unanimous consent, which dispenses with all rules?

Mr. TILSON. The bill being on the Private Calendar can not be placed on the Consent Calendar. The Speaker has stated that the bill is properly on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BEGG. Yes. The Speaker has just said it is correctly placed on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TILSON. It is, it is true, on the face of it of a private nature, but the substance of the bill reveals the fact that it is really quite as much for the benefit of the United States as for a private party.

Mr. BEGG. There is no excuse for not following the rules of the House. Why not ask unanimous consent to do what is desired?

Mr. SNELL. Why could we not suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. Ordinarily, as Members know, the Chair does not recognize requests for unanimous consent to pass private bills, unless it appears there is a real public emergency. The Chair thinks, from what he has heard about this bill, that it is of such emergency that he can properly recognize the gentleman to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SNELL. We could either do that or suspend the rules and pass it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina for the purpose of asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. The Clerk will report the bill (S. 4712).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, as the report will show, after a very careful personal examination by myself of this case, I am convinced that it is not only in the interest of the United States Treasury, but it is in the interest of the convenience of the general public of the United States, in that it will shorten transportation from San Francisco east or from the east into San Francisco at least 30 minutes by enabling the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. to construct a railroad bridge rather than to use the present ferryboats over the bay. Now, here is the emergency. This Congress has authorized the construction of a bridge over the bay. The railroad company is in the position where now it must either renew its ferryboats, which are old and have virtually been condemned, or commence at once the construction of the bridge.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Certainly.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. All this bill does is to give this railroad company a right of way over a military reservation?

Mr. McSWAIN. Exactly.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Why does not the gentleman say so?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am now saying so, but I wanted to make it perfectly plain that we were not giving anything away but that we were getting a valuable consideration. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill only give the right to construct a bridge or does it also permit the laying down of rails through a military reservation?

Mr. McSWAIN. It gives the right to construct a railroad track over a Government reservation, and the right to construct a bridge over navigable waters has already been granted by Congress.

Mr. SCHAFER. About how many miles of railroad track will be laid?

Mr. McSWAIN. The railroad itself is 3,000 miles long but this particular section is only 1,800 feet.

Mr. SCHAFER. That is all I wanted to know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., a corporation, incorporated and consolidated under the laws of the States of California, Arizona, and New Mexico, its successors and assigns, under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of War, a right of way over and across the Benicia Arsenal Military Reservation, Calif., for railroad purposes, with full power to locate, construct, and operate railroad tracks, structures, telegraph, telephone, or signal wires and other railroad appurtenances, appendages, and adjuncts, the location and width of such right of way to be determined by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the land shall not be used for other than railroad purposes, and when the property shall cease to be so used it shall revert to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table (H. R. 14818).

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Consent Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The first business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2449) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and a point opposite thereto in the parish of West Baton Rouge, State of Louisiana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, some of us feel that bills which have heretofore been passed over without prejudice should be objected to in order to clear up the calendar, so we can get to the other end of the calendar. I have no objection to this bill at all.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I am making this request at the suggestion of the Member who is interested in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say I shall not object now, but from now on all bills that have heretofore been passed over without prejudice will be objected to on request to hold them on the calendar, so we can get to the tail end of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that this bill may be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

OSAGE INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13407) relating to the tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Indian Affairs Committee has a calendar day in another week, and I think it much better that this bill be reached on that day. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I must object to its present consideration.

COPYRIGHTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13452) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, as amended, in respect of mechanical reproduction of musical compositions, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman dispose of the bill the next time? This is a very important measure.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

IMPROVEMENT-DISTRICT BENEFITS AGAINST PUBLIC LANDS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10657) to authorize the assessment of levee, road, drainage, and other improvement-district benefits against public lands and lands heretofore owned by the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this bill is now before the House on Calendar Wednesday. Therefore I will object in order to get it off the calendar.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I suggest that this bill will probably be considered on Calendar Wednesday and will probably be passed. In that event it disappears from this calendar. If something happened and it was not passed on Calendar Wednesday—if some other bills were called up instead of it, and the bill was not reached—then it would be only fair to the gentleman who has the bill to let it come up the next unanimous-consent day. I think we ought to let it keep its place for this one day. I am satisfied it will disappear from the calendar.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It will disappear, one way or the other, the next consent day?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall not object.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

INTERSTATE COMPACTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7026) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and Wyoming with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the North Platte River and other streams in which such States are jointly interested.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill and the one following, H. R. 7027, may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, these bills have been passed without prejudice several times. Is there any prospect they will be disposed of?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] and I are trying to come to an agreement upon this matter. We are consulting our constituents about it, and we hope to come to an adjustment in the near future, and I am quite anxious to have these two bills passed at this session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

INTERSTATE COMPACTS—COLORADO-UTAH

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7028) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and Utah with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado, Green, Bear or Yampa, the White, San Juan, and Dolores Rivers, and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, there is an amendment which I expect to offer which has been accepted to similar bills and which I understand is agreeable to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I may say, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to join with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] in saying I do not intend to object, but I have an agreement with the gentleman from Colorado that this bill may be taken up without further objection. We have jokingly agreed, in view of the fact we do not require any law for these two States to get together, that when the State of Colorado comes over and talks to us about a compact they will come without company.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not understand just what the gentleman from Utah has in the way of a side agreement. I know what the bill proposes.

The Constitution requires the consent of Congress before a compact is entered into between States, and this bill gives consent to the States to negotiate such a compact, and as it is drawn it is stated that no such compact or agreement shall be binding or obligatory upon either of such States unless and until it has been approved by the legislature of each of such States and by the Congress of the United States.

I know it is claimed and was so stated in Mr. Delph Carpenter's brief that was printed in the RECORD in the Senate proceedings of December 14, that granting the consent to negotiate the compacts, so Mr. Carpenter contends, does away with any necessity of having the compact approved; but this bill especially reserves that question and makes it clear that the compact is not binding until the Congress has approved it.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I think the gentleman must have misunderstood me, or else I did not use the language I intended to. I do not want to be understood that the gentleman from Colorado is bound by any agreement. In rather a joking manner I suggested that when they came to discuss the question of water allocation they come without company. Further, let me say to the gentleman from Michigan that there is no question but that if the authority is granted by Congress to the States to negotiate that when they have negotiated and the terms are fixed they must come to Congress for ratification. There is no question but that the courts have decided that the States may in the first instance agree upon the terms of a compact, and in that event they must come to Congress for ratification.

I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me because I say that, in any event, the Congress has the last say in ratifying the agreement. The point I wish to emphasize is that the courts of last resort have decided that it is not necessary to get permission in advance from Congress for the States to negotiate.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not agree with the gentleman about getting consent in advance, but Mr. Carpenter, the water commissioner, representing the State of Colorado, has made the claim that if the consent was given in advance the ratification of the compact afterwards by the Congress was not necessary. But evidently the gentleman from Utah does not agree with that statement.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. No; they have still to get the consent of Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. The bill guards against it, because it says that such consent is given them on the condition that the representatives of the United States from the Department of the Interior to be appointed by the President shall participate in the negotiations and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings of any contract or agreement entered into. I have an amendment to make it clear as to the expenses of that representative.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have no objection to that amendment. Of course, Mr. Delph Carpenter's brief does not affect the terms of this bill or the action of Congress. This bill is exactly the same language that has been used in a half dozen other similar bills, and I ask to have the bill considered now. It is a very important measure to prevent litigation and strife between those two States in the near future. It is in the interest of the best and most harmonious development of those States by the waters of five or six large streams that they are mutually interested in.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I am not going to make any objection, because we are not bound by the terms of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H. R. 7028, Seventieth Congress, first session

A bill granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and Utah with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado, Green, Bear or Yampa, the White, San Juan, and Dolores Rivers and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Colorado and Utah to negotiate and enter into compacts or agreements providing for an equitable division and apportionment between such States of the water supply of the Colorado, Green, Bear or Yampa, the White, San Juan, and Dolores Rivers and of the streams tributary thereto and of all other streams in which such States are jointly interested.

SEC. 2. Such consent is given upon condition that a representative of the United States from the Department of the Interior, to be appointed by the President, shall participate in the negotiations and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into.

SEC. 3. No such compact or agreement shall be binding or obligatory upon either of such States unless and until it has been approved by the legislatures of each of such States and by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is herewith expressly reserved.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

No. 895. Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 2, line 6, after the word "into," insert the following: "Other than the compensation and expenses of such representative the United States shall not be liable for any expenses in connection with such negotiations, compact, or agreement. The payment of such expenses of such representative is authorized to be paid from the appropriations for cooperative and general investigations for the Bureau of Reclamation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KINGS MOUNTAIN BATTLE FIELD PARK

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a report of the commission on the proposed Kings Mountain Battle Field Park.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following report of the commission on the proposed Kings Mountain Battle Field Park, except maps, pictures, and appendixes not necessary to print herein:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Customhouse, Charleston, S. C.

Subject: Report of proposed Kings Mountain Battle Field Park.
To: The Secretary of War, Washington, D. C. (through the Quartermaster General, United States Army, Washington, D. C.).

The commission appointed by the Secretary of War to inspect the battle field of Kings Mountain, S. C., and to report on the feasibility of preserving and marking for historical and professional military study this battle field, has the honor to submit the following report:

1. Law authorizing investigation: This report is made pursuant to the provisions of the following act of Congress:

"[Public, No. 246, 70th Cong.]

"An act (H. R. 11140) to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Kings Mountain, S. C.

"Be it enacted, etc., That to assist in the studies and investigations of battle fields in the United States for commemorative purposes, authorized by an act approved June 11, 1926 (Public, No. 372, 69th Cong.), a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the following members, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of War: (1) A commissioned officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army; (2) a citizen and resident of York County, State of South Carolina; (3) a citizen and resident of Cleveland County, State of North Carolina; (4) a citizen of Cherokee County, S. C.

"SEC. 2. In appointing the members of the commission created by section 1 of this act the Secretary of War shall, as far as practicable, select persons familiar with the terrain of the battle field of Kings Mountain, S. C., and the historical events associated therewith.

"SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the commission, acting under the direction of the Secretary of War, to inspect the battle field of Kings Mountain, S. C., in order to ascertain the feasibility of preserving and marking for historical and professional military study such field. The commission shall submit a report of its findings and an itemized statement of its expenses to the Secretary of War not later than December 1, 1928.

"SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, or such part thereof as may be necessary, in order to carry out the provisions of this act.

"Approved, April 9, 1928."

2. Personnel of commission: In accordance with the act quoted above, the Secretary of War appointed the following commission:

Member from York County, S. C., Mr. A. M. Grist.
Member from Cleveland County, N. C., Mr. G. G. Page.
Member from Cherokee County, S. C., Mr. Jacob F. Hambright.
Engineer officer, Maj. N. Y. DuHamel, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, district engineer, Charleston, S. C.

3. Meetings of the commission: The commission met on the battle field at Kings Mountain, S. C., July 6, 1928, at which time it was organized. All members were present.

Such other meetings and investigations as were necessary have been made by the members of the commission and by those employed by them to secure the necessary information required for this report.

4. Object and character of report: The commission is directed to report on the feasibility of preserving and marking for professional military study the battle field of Kings Mountain, S. C.

The desirable effects to be expected from the marking and preserving of the battle field are in part briefly as follows:

(1) The marking and preserving of the battle field for historical and professional study.

(2) Preserving and making accessible to the present and future generations the scene of an important historical event.

(3) Commemoration of the action of the armies on these fields.

(4) Aid in the development of patriotism.

(5) The Battle of Kings Mountain has been considered the turning point of the Revolutionary War, in so far as the operations in the area included in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia are concerned, but the scene has been somewhat inaccessible and has received but little recognition by the Government. The marking and preserving of the battle field by the making of a park would assist materially in changing this condition and bringing the event properly before the people.

(6) Such a development should have a desirable commercial effect for the adjacent communities.

In the plan proposed the execution will necessitate studies, surveys, detailed plans, and adjustments to make the plan fit unexpected conditions that may arise.

5. Location of battle field: The battle field is located in York County, S. C., in latitude approximately 35° 8′ north and in longitude approximately 81° 23′ west. The nearest railway station is at Grover, N. C., on the main line of the Southern Railway. The distance from this station to the battle field is about 4 miles by unimproved road.

6. Summarization of battle: The Battle of Kings Mountain took place on October 9, 1780. The United States forces, between 900 and 1,500 in number, served as units under their individual leaders, the senior of whom was Col. James Williams. The British forces, approximately 1,100 in number, were commanded by Maj. Patrick Ferguson. The engagement lasted about one hour, and the total killed and wounded on both sides are believed to amount to 475.

7. Classification of battle field: In House Document No. 1071, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, Kings Mountain has been classified as a class 2 battle field; however, the importance of this battle field and the Revolutionary struggle in the South has long been felt, and was given early recognition by monuments having been erected by local people as early as 1815, by the States of North Carolina and South Carolina in 1880, and by the United States in 1909. "The Battle of Kings Mountain was the turning point of the War of the American Revolution." (Thomas Jefferson.)

8. Historical places: The commission inspected the points of historical interest on the battle field. Some of the main historical features are the following:

(a) A monument erected by the United States Government marking the site of the Battle of Kings Mountain. This monument was erected in 1909. It is in good condition and is now in the custody of the Kings Mountain Battle Field Association of South Carolina. (Photograph of the monument is shown in Appendix C.)

(c) A granite marker indicating the spot upon which Major Ferguson was killed. This was erected by the Kings Mountain Battle Field Association of South Carolina, its present custodian, in 1909. It is in good condition. (Photograph of the marker is shown in Appendix E.)

(d) A granite marker indicating the spot where Major Ferguson was buried. This was erected by the Kings Mountain Battle Field Association of South Carolina, its present custodian. It is in good condition. (Photograph of the marker is shown in Appendix F.)

(e) A granite marker indicating the graves of Maj. William Chronicle, Capt. John Mattocks, William Robb, and John Boyd. This was erected in 1815 by the Kings Mountain Battle Field Association of South Carolina, its present custodian, and is in poor condition. (Photograph of this marker is shown in Appendix G.)

(f) A granite marker alongside of the one mentioned in the preceding subparagraph was created by the Kings Mountain Battle Field Association of South Carolina, its present custodian, in 1909, to serve for the same purpose as mentioned in subparagraph (e) above. It is in good condition.

(g) A cliff under which the American troops left their horses before engaging in battle.

9. Attitude of the residents: The residents of Cherokee and York Counties, S. C., and Cleveland County, N. C., are highly enthusiastic over the creation of the battle-field park and have the support of the citizens of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee.

10. Local cooperation: The counties of Cherokee, York, and Cleveland have constructed roads leading to the site of the battle field in order that it might be accessible to visitors. York County is planning to improve its road leading to the battle-field ground in order to take care of an increasing number of visitors. The Kings Mountain Battle Field Association has offered to give to the Government free of cost a plot containing approximately 40 acres which includes the most important part of the battle-field area.

11. Land: The estimated value of the land on the site of the battle field varies from $20 to $25 per acre. The investigation shows that not only little difficulty is to be expected in obtaining the necessary land but that a portion of that desired will be donated without cost to the Government. In the estimate of costs the maximum present estimated values of the land have been taken, but for any plan provision should be made for accepting a donation of land as well as for condemnation and for purchase by agreement. The details of land values and a description of the plots recommended for inclusion in the proposed park are given in Appendices A and B.

12. Maps: There is submitted with this report a plot showing on a scale 1 to 5,000 the land recommended by the commission to be acquired by the United States to serve as a park. There is also included a topographical sketch of the immediate vicinity of the proposed battle-field park, the topography of which is based upon the United States Geological Survey Quadrangle of Kings Mountain.

13. Parks: The marking and preserving of a battle field can best be accomplished by creating a park. By doing so such development of the land as will change its topographic features is prevented and vandalism in the destruction of foliage and markers is minimized. The area under discussion is not extensive, and the cost of the land is very small. The site being 4 miles from the Bankhead National Highway, is on the road of dense tourist travel. Anything which is done toward marking and preserving the battle field improves both its historical and recreational value. There are included within the area recommended for acquirement as a park five springs, which make the spot attractive to travelers and ideal for social gatherings.

14. Plans for battle fields: Plan of the battle field is shown on the attached map and is a development based on the Gettysburg system for a memorial park. In this battle the British held a position and surrendered to an American attack. The area recommended to be acquired is shown by a broken line on the map. It includes the British position, the ground on which the actual fighting took place, the spot at which the American forces left their horses, and the area within which was formerly located the major portion of the road followed from that place to the British position. It is proposed to improve the springs on the battle field and to construct paths and a road, making them and the historical points more accessible to visitors. It is recommended that the park be inclosed by an ornamental iron fence and that a dwelling house be provided for a caretaker. The monuments referred to in paragraph 8 have all been erected within the boundaries of the proposed park. It contains 201.47 acres.

This plan has the following advantages:

(1) Its area permits a fitting marking and preserving of the battle field.

(2) It includes the localities which were the scenes of important action during the battle.

(3) The cost is moderate.

(4) The roads and paths will render accessible all parts of the area, and markers and monuments show the location of important points and events.

(5) It is sufficiently comprehensive in park area to permit its development as a memorial to troops engaged by furnishing a suitable setting for such monuments and memorials as may be desired.

15. Estimate of cost:

Land:
161.58 acres, at $25 per acre	$4,050
39.89 acres	Donated.
Roads: 18-foot disintegrated granite, 4 miles, at $17,000 per mile	70,400
Paths: 5,000 feet, at $0.50 per foot	2,500
Clearing underbrush	10,000
Improving springs	100
Tablets and markers:
5 tablets, large, at $200	1,000
20 markers, at $50	1,000
Fence: 22,704 feet, at $4 per foot	90,816
Dwelling house	6,000
Surveys and maps	3,200
Studies and planning	530
Overhead and contingencies (10 per cent)	18,950
Total	208,546

16. Estimate of cost of annual maintenance:

Roads	400
Grounds and paths	3,000
House	120
Fence	900
Caretaker's salary	1,200
Total	5,620

17. Findings: The commission finds that the marking and preserving for historical and professional military study of the battle field of Kings Mountain is feasible and it recommends that:

(a) The tract of land including such plots described in Appendix B and comprising 201.47 acres be acquired by the United States.

(b) That the battle field be marked in a manner similar to the battle field of Gettysburg by placing markers where necessary to mark the important points.

(c) By the construction of roads and paths so that the more important points be made reasonably accessible.

(d) That by the improvement of existing springs and clearing of underbrush the natural attractiveness of the area be increased.

(e) That by the construction of a fence and caretaker's dwelling that provision be made for its protection and maintenance.

(f) The estimated cost is $208,546, with an estimated yearly maintenance cost when completed of $5,620.

(g) That an allotment of $208,546 be made in a lump sum.

Respectfully submitted.

G. G. PAGE, Chairman.

LOIS I. MARSHALL

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1156) granting a pension to Lois I. Marshall, together with the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

S. 1156, Seventieth Congress, second session

An act granting a pension to Lois I. Marshall

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Lois I. Marshall, widow of Thomas R. Marshall, late Vice President of the United States, and pay her a pension at the rate of $5,000 per year from and after the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$3,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was the read third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KNUTSON, a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

INSANE CITIZENS OF ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 170) to provide for the care of certain insane citizens of the Territory of Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this bill would establish a very bad precedent, and I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will be very glad to have the gentleman let this go over just once more. The Governor of Alaska is here now, and I want the opportunity to go over this matter with the Governor of Alaska and with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It does not affect Alaska at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. It has to do with the insane of Alaska.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It does not affect Alaska at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would be glad to have that opportunity, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a minute here. I do not like to have it go unchallenged that this bill does not affect the citizens of Alaska. These have to be bona fide citizens of Alaska, and all that is asked is that something be done.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And I say, Mr. Speaker, with all due deference, that this bill does not affect the Territory of Alaska. That is my opinion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is a bona fide citizen of Alaska?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am talking about the Territory of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12414) authorizing the classification of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, by request I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OSAGE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2360) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled 'An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.'"

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, for the reasons stated as to the other Indian bill, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. Also, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7204) to authorize the creation of Indian trust estates, and for other purposes, Calendar No. 996, also go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bills S. 2360 and H. R. 7204 go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PICATINNY ARSENAL, DOVER, N. J.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14156) to authorize an appropriation for a construction of a cannon-powder blending unit at Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I remember that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ACKERMAN] not long ago objected most strenuously to the continuance of the arsenal at this location, and now it is proposed to appropriate more for construction there?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Some weeks ago the gentleman asked to have this matter go over so that he could look into the local conditions?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes; and I have seen the gentlemen from the War Department, and they have explained the matter satisfactorily to me; and the chamber of commerce wants it. I have no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is the gentleman's home town and it is his district, and the responsibility is his.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000 for the construction of a cannon powder blending unit at Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J., to replace the one destroyed by fire on July 31, 1928.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EDITING OF OFFICIAL PAPERS OF TERRITORIES OF THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1168) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the collection and editing of official papers of the Territories of the United States now in the national archives," approved March 3, 1925.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of informing the gentleman from Ohio and his Committee on Revision of the Laws that the law referred to is not indexed in the United States Code of Laws; and, also, I would inquire the necessity for this bill and the reason for appropriating $125,000. Has there been any demand for these reports?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, may I reply to the second part of that inquiry of the gentleman from New York? These are the State papers of the various Territories which now constitute the early history of 30 States of the Union. They are scattered about in various bureaus and departments in Washington, practically inaccessible to students of history. It will be of immense value not only to historians but to the States themselves to have the papers collected, edited, and printed, so that they may be gotten at for ready historical reference. A calendar volume of these papers has already been compiled by the Carnegie Institution of Washington. Nine thousand documents are involved and the volume shows the immense importance of these papers to the students who are investigating the historical background in 30 different States of the Union.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The purpose of the amendment is to provide distribution of these reports.

Mr. DAVENPORT. It is my opinion that the matter of distribution could be handled better than it is in the bill. Instead of free distribution it would seem that the persons interested in securing copies of the documents might be willing to pay a small amount to the Government Printing Office and thus help to defray the expense of printing. However, the bill itself is sound and ought to pass.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that if they are simply available for distribution, requests are made very often by people who have no particular interest in them, and then they are wasted.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has the gentleman any amendment prepared to carry out his suggestion?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Not at the moment, but one can easily be prepared.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I have not been enthusiastic about the method of distribution, but I have hesitated to upset the distribution fixed for Members of Congress. But I observed through the adoption of the committee amendment there will be several hundred copies unprovided for out of the 1,950. The bill as amended does not use all the 1,950. I have prepared an amendment to take up that slack and to make it possible to reach certain people, certain organizations that ought to be able to get these, if anyone, without cost. I will read the amendment I have in mind:

One thousand nine hundred and fifty copies for the Department of State, of which 6 copies shall be delivered to each Senator and 2 copies to each Representative, and 8 copies for each State or Territory, to be distributed to historical associations, commissions, museums, or libraries, and to other nondepository libraries therein designated by the governor of each State or Territory, 4 copies for the library of the Department of the Interior, and the remainder of said 1,950 shall be—

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It equalizes the distribution.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I have in mind where it says "$125,000, to be available until expended," that is a detail that Congress can take care of in making the appropriation. I would make that read, "not more than $125,000," and omit the provision "to remain available until expended." Appropriations of that kind are lost sight of and not checked up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan regarding his amendment. What value would these Territorial papers be ordinarily to Members of Congress? Why the large number printed for distribution in that manner?

Mr. CRAMTON. My judgment is, to the average Member two copies will be of dubious value. But that was a provision I was not sure about upsetting. Of course, the cost is not very great, to print a thousand copies or such a matter. But what I was trying to do was to make sure that these State historical associations, commissions, museums, and so forth, could receive them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In all likelihood, Members would send their two copies to the local historical societies, and so forth, in the Eastern States.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I believe I will ask that this bill go over until next time.

Mr. LETTS. If the gentleman will yield, I hope the gentleman will not make that request. This is a matter of much concern to the country, historical associations, and societies.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. As I recall, several years ago Congress printed 15 volumes of the testimony of the Industrial Commission at a cost of more than $90,000. Those were distributed to Members of Congress and——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And very valuable.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. So far as the testimony is concerned it was of no practical benefit; the report of the Industrial Commission was all right. There was no need whatever of printing the testimony and it cost a very large sum of money.

Mr. LETTS. I will say to the gentleman there has already been expended by the State Department $20,000 on that work and the value of that work and that expenditure will be lost unless this work is completed.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. There is no immediate hurry that I can see for the completion of this work.

Mr. LETTS. The historical societies and librarians over the country are very anxious to obtain this.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I object.

COTTON FUTURES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13646) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cotton by regulating transactions on cotton-futures exchanges, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think this is a proper subject for the Consent Calendar.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I hope the gentleman will not interpose an objection.

This bill, while somewhat long, simply does for the cotton producers exactly what has already been done for the grain producers. We are adopting the features of the grain law and applying them to the cotton exchanges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is a bill which the gentleman himself would not want to be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture has approved it, and it is approved by the Budget Bureau. The purpose of it is to do for the cotton producers what is now being done for the producers of grain.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the attitude of the stock tickers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This does not involve the stock tickers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It ought to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It affects the cotton exchanges and carries out the very purpose of the grain futures act. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the statement of the former president of the New York Cotton Exchange, when this subject was discussed before the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is he for it or against it?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me read it. He says in part:

The New York Cotton Exchange realizes that your committee wishes to report a bill which will forever preclude the possibility of the cotton market being manipulated by scheming minds, to the prejudice of the public welfare. The exchange, without legislative assistance, is powerless to prevent such abuses.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman say that the president of the New York Cotton Exchange is for this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is what Mr. Hubbard said. Of course, he is not for it entirely. The committee did not adopt all of his viewpoints, but that is his opening statement which I have quoted. He offered a great many suggestions, but he made the general statement that it is necessary to have legislation to prohibit the abuses.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can not imagine any community of interest existing between the cotton producers and the exchanges, and therefore if the exchange is not against it, I object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I hope the gentleman will not object, because we are trying to improve the condition of the cotton producer.

Mr. SCHAFER. Of what value is this bill to the cotton growers of the South?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is to put the cotton exchanges under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, just as Congress has done respecting the corn and wheat exchanges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then it restricts the market?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. It will have the effect of stabilizing the cotton market.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is it like the grain futures act?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. The only difference is that it protects the cotton producer instead of the corn and wheat raiser. The grain futures act is copied in its entirety. The only change in that act is the substitution of the words "cotton exchange" for "board of trade," and "cotton" for "grain."

Mr. SCHAFER. I shall not object, since it is to protect the cotton farmer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of the "cotton futures trading act."

(a) For the purposes of this act "contract of sale" shall be held to include sales, agreements of sale, and agreements to sell. The word "person" shall be construed to import the plural or singular, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, corporations, and trusts. The word "cotton" shall be construed to mean lint cotton in bales. The term "future delivery," as herein used, shall not include sale of cash or spot cotton for deferred shipment or delivery. The words "cotton-futures exchange" shall be held to include and mean any exchange, association, or board of trade, whether incorporated or unincorporated, of persons who shall be engaged in the business of buying or selling cotton or receiving the same for sale on consignment. The act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for any individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust within the scope of his employment or office shall be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust as well as of such official, agent, or other person. The words "interstate commerce" shall be construed to mean commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof, or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof, or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia.

(b) For the purpose of this act (but not in any wise limiting the foregoing definition of interstate commerce) a transaction in respect to any cotton shall be considered to be in interstate commerce if such cotton is part of that current of commerce usual in the cotton trade whereby cotton is sent from one State with the expectation that it will end its transit, after purchase, in another, including, in addition to cases within the above general description, all cases where purchase or sale is either for shipment to another State, or for manufacture within the State and the shipment outside the State of the products resulting from such manufacture. Cotton normally in such current of commerce shall not be considered out of such commerce through resort being had to any means or device intended to remove transactions in respect thereto from the provisions of this act. For the purpose of this paragraph the word "State" includes Territory, the District of Columbia, possession of the United States, and foreign nation.

SEC. 2. Transactions in cotton involving the sale thereof for future delivery as commonly conducted on cotton-futures exchanges and known as "futures" are affected with a national public interest; that such transactions are carried on in large volume by the public generally and by persons engaged in the business of buying and selling cotton in interstate commerce; that the prices involved in such transactions are generally quoted and disseminated throughout the United States and in foreign countries as a basis for determining the prices to the producer and the consumer of cotton and to facilitate the movements thereof in interstate commerce; that such transactions are utilized by shippers, dealers, manufacturers, and others engaged in handling cotton in interstate commerce as a means of hedging themselves against possible loss through fluctuations in price; that the transactions and prices of cotton on such cotton-futures exchanges are susceptible to speculation, manipulation, and control, and sudden or unreasonable fluctuations in the prices thereof frequently occur as a result of such speculation, manipulation, or control, which are detrimental to the producer or the consumer and the persons handling cotton in interstate commerce, and that such fluctuations in price are an obstruction to and a burden upon interstate commerce in cotton and render regulation imperative for the protection of such commerce and the national public interest therein.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to deliver for transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce by telegraph, telephone, wireless, or other means of communication, any offer to make or execute, or any confirmation of the execution of, or any quotation or report of the price of, any contract of sale of cotton for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any cotton-futures exchange in the United States, or for any person to make or execute such contract of sale, which is or may be used for (1) hedging any transaction in interstate commerce in cotton, or (2) determining the price basis of any such transaction in interstate commerce, or (3) delivering cotton sold, shipped, or received in interstate commerce for the fulfillment thereof, except: (a) Where the seller is at the time of the making of such contract the owner of the actual physical property covered thereby, or is the grower thereof, or in case either party to the contract is the owner or renter of land on which the same is to be grown, or is an association of such owners or growers of cotton or of such owners or renters of land; or (b) where such contract is made by or through a member of a cotton-futures exchange which has been designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a "contract market," as hereinafter provided, and if such contract is evidenced by a record in writing, which shows the date, the parties to such contract and their addresses, the property covered and its price, and the terms of delivery and otherwise comply with section 5, 7, or 11 of this act: Provided, That each exchange member shall keep such record for a period of three years from the date thereof, or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct, which record shall at all times be open to the inspection of any duly authorized representative of the United States Department of Agriculture or the United States Department of Justice.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate any cotton-futures exchange as a "contract market" when, and only when, such cotton-futures exchange complies with and carries out the following conditions and requirements:

(a) When the governing board thereof provides for the making and filing by the exchange or any member thereof, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, of reports in accordance with the rules and regulations, and in such manner and form and at such times as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, showing the details and terms of all transactions entered into by the exchange, or the members thereof, either in cash or spot transactions consummated at, on, or in such exchange, or transactions for future delivery, and when such governing board provides, in accordance with such rules and regulations, for the keeping of a record by the exchange or the members of such exchange, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, showing the details and terms of all cash or spot and future transactions entered into by them, consummated at, on, or in a cotton-futures exchange, such record to be in permanent form, showing the parties to all such transactions, including the persons for whom made, any assignments or transfers thereof, with the parties thereto, and the manner in which said transactions are fulfilled, discharged, or terminated. Such record shall be required to be kept for a period of three years from the date thereof, or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct, and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any duly authorized representative of the United States Department of Agriculture or the United States Department of Justice.

(b) When the governing board thereof provides for the prevention of dissemination by such exchange or any member thereof, or any person using the facilities thereof, of false or misleading or knowingly inaccurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of cotton in interstate commerce.

(c) When the governing board thereof provides for prevention of manipulation of prices or the cornering of any cotton by the dealers or operators upon such exchange.

(d) When the governing board thereof does not exclude from membership in, and all privileges on, such cotton-futures exchange, any duly authorized representative of any lawfully formed and conducted cooperative association of producers having adequate financial responsibility which is engaged in spot or cash cotton business, or any duly authorized representative of any organization acting for a group of such cooperative associations of producers, if such association or associations have complied, and agree to comply, with such terms and conditions as are or may be imposed lawfully on other members of such exchange: Provided, That no rule of a contract market shall forbid or be construed to forbid the return on a patronage basis by any such cooperative association to its bona fide members of moneys collected in excess of the expense of conducting the business of such association.

(e) When the governing board provides for making effective the final orders or decisions entered pursuant to the provisions of paragraph b of section 12 of this act.

(f) When the governing board thereof provides that members of such exchange shall require that any nonmember filing for execution an order for the purchase or sale of cotton futures shall comply with all the requirements and regulations applicable to members of such exchange.

(g) When the governing board thereof provides that the futures contracts traded in on such exchange shall name as places of delivery of the cotton covered by such contracts not less than two, and not more than six, bona fide spot cotton markets, designated as such by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act, which designation by the Secretary of Agriculture shall include Charleston, S. C.; Norfolk, Va.; Savannah, Ga.; New Orleans, La.; Houston, Tex.; and Galveston, Tex., and such other places as he may from time to time deem advisable; and shall further provide that the cotton delivered on each contract must be delivered in its entirety in one storage place; and shall further provide that notice by the seller of intention to deliver must be issued not less than 10 days prior to the date of delivery, and must specify the place of delivery and the grade and staple of the cotton to be delivered on such contract; and shall further provide that any cotton contract market located on the Atlantic coast shall have among its delivery points at least two Atlantic ports named as delivery points, which ports shall be designated spot markets; also provided, that any cotton contract market located on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico shall have among its delivery points at least two ports on the Gulf of Mexico named as delivery points, which ports shall be designated spot markets: Provided, That any cotton contract market located in the interior shall have among its delivery points at least two ports either on the Atlantic coast or the Gulf of Mexico named as delivery points, which ports shall be designated spot markets.

For the purposes of this act the word "manipulation" shall be construed to mean, among other things:

(1) Shipping or transferring to any contract market any cotton for the purpose of delivery on such contract market at an obvious loss on the transaction for the purpose of artificially influencing prices.

The purchase in one contract market of a given number of bales of cotton for delivery in one month and a corresponding sale in the same contract market of a like number of bales of cotton for delivery in a later month, accompanied by the receipt of any cotton on the purchase and the tender of the same or other cotton on the sale, when such transaction is done at an obvious loss, for the purpose, and with the effect, of artificially influencing the price relationship of the two months.

(2) Tendering and repeatedly retendering on futures contracts in any designated contract market notices of delivery of the same cotton for the purpose of artificially influencing prices upon such contract market.

(3) The tender upon futures contracts more than once by the same person in the same calendar month of notices of delivery of the same cotton, or otherwise trafficking in notices of delivery for the purpose of artificially influencing prices.

(4) Engaging in straddle operations in and between various markets designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as contract markets, with the apparent purpose of artificially influencing the movement of prices in any such designated contract market.

For the purposes of this section a straddle shall be understood to mean the purchase in one contract market of a given number of bales of cotton for delivery in one month and a corresponding sale in the same or another contract market of a like number of bales for delivery in another month, or the purchase in one designated contract market of a given number of bales of cotton for delivery in one month and the sale in another designated market of a like number of bales for delivery in the same month.

The foregoing definitions of manipulation shall not be held to exclude from the operations of this act other forms of manipulation not herein specifically described.

SEC. 5. That each contract of sale of cotton for future delivery under this section shall:

First. Be in writing plainly stating, or evidenced by written memorandum showing, the terms of such contract, including the quantity of the cotton involved and the names and addresses of the seller and buyer in such contract, and shall be signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent in his behalf. If the contract or memorandum specify in bales the quantity of the cotton involved without giving the weight each bale shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to weigh 500 pounds.

Second. Specify the basis grade for the cotton involved in the contract, which shall be one of the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section, the price per pound at which the cotton of such basis grade is contracted to be bought or sold, the date when the purchase or sale was made, and the month or months in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled: Provided, That middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into the contract if no other basis grade be specified either in the contract or in the memorandum evidencing the same.

Third. Provide that the cotton dealt with therein or delivered thereunder shall be of or within the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section and no other grade or grades.

Fourth. Provide that in case cotton of grade other than the basis grade be tendered or delivered in settlement of such contract, the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades other than the basis grade shall be the average actual commercial differences, determined as hereinafter provided.

Fifth. Provide that cotton that because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character, or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of low middling, or cotton that if white is below the grade of low middling, or if extra white, cotton that is below the grade of low middling, or if yellow tinged, cotton that is below the grade of strict middling, or if yellow stained, cotton that is below the grade of good middling, or if spotted, cotton that is below the grade of middling, or if light yellow stained, cotton that is below the grade of good middling, or if gray, cotton that is below the grade of strict middling, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is blue stained according to said official standards, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple, or cotton that is not of sound staple character, or cotton that is irregular, weak, and wasty, or cotton that is "gin cut" or reginned or cotton that is "repacked" or "false packed" or "mixed packed" or "water packed" shall not be delivered on, under, or in settlement of such contract.

Sixth. Provide that all tenders of cotton under such contract shall be the full number of bales involved therein, except that such variations of the number of bales may be permitted as is necessary to bring the total weight of the cotton tendered within the provisions of the contract as to weight; that, on the tenth business day prior to delivery, the person making the tender shall give to the person receiving the same a written notice of the date of delivery, and that, on or prior to the date so fixed for delivery, and in advance of final settlement of the contract, the person making the tender shall furnish to the person receiving the same a written notice or certificate stating the grade of each individual bale to be delivered and, by means of marks or numbers identifying each bale with its grade: Provided, That where any cotton to which any such notice of the date of delivery shall apply shall have been previously certificated, such notice of the date of delivery shall state the total number of bales of each grade and staple to be delivered.

Seventh. Provide that all tenders of cotton and settlements therefor under such contract shall be in accordance with the classification thereof made under the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture by such officer or officers of the Government as shall be designated for the purpose, and the costs of such classification shall be fixed, assessed, collected, and paid as provided in such regulations. Samples representing cotton classified and certified by such officers for the purposes of this section shall be made available for examination to any person, whether he be a member or a nonmember of a cotton-futures exchange, upon the payment of such fees and upon compliance with such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe. All moneys collected as costs hereunder may be used as a revolving fund for carrying out the purposes of this subdivision.

The provisions of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase "Subject to the cotton futures trading act, section 5."

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe regulations for carrying out the purposes of the seventh subdivision of this section, and the certificates of the officers of the Government as to the classification of any cotton for the purposes of said subdivision shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between the parties to such contract, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true classification of the cotton involved.

SEC. 6. (a) That for the purposes of section 5 of this act the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton of grades above or below the basis grade in settlement of a contract of sale for the future delivery of cotton shall be, for each grade, the average of the actual commercial differences in the spot markets of not less than five places designated from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture, as determined and quoted in each such market from actual sales of spot cotton, or, in the absence of actual sales of spot cotton, from bona fide bid and offered prices, upon the eleventh business day prior to the date fixed in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5 for delivery of cotton on the contract: Provided, That for the purposes of this section such values in the said spot markets shall be based upon the official cotton standards established by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations for the determination of the actual commercial differences and the actual commercial staple premiums and discounts in the spot markets in the places designated by him, and for the publication of the quotations thereof. Whenever the Secretary shall find that in any such spot market the quotations of such differences, or of staple premiums or discounts, have not been made in accordance with his regulations or do not reflect the actual commercial differences, staple premiums, or discounts, he may, for such period as he shall deem necessary, determine such actual commercial differences, staple premiums, and discounts in any such market and publish the quotations thereof. The quotations so published shall be deemed the quotations of such market.

(c) Any person who shall fail or refuse to furnish any information in his possession requested by such Secretary under paragraph (b) of this section shall not be heard to complain in respect of any quotation published by such Secretary.

SEC. 7. In case cotton of grade or grades other than the basis grade specified in the contract shall be tendered in performance of any contract under this section, the parties to such contract may agree, at the time of the tender, as to the price of the grade or grades so tendered; and that if they shall not then agree as to such price, then, and in that event, the buyer of said contract shall have the right to demand the specific fulfillment of such contract by the actual delivery of cotton of the basis grade named therein, and at the price specified for such basis grade in said contract, and if the contract also comply with all the terms and conditions of section 5 hereof not inconsistent with this section: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to authorize any contract in which, or in the settlement of, or in respect to which any device or arrangement whatever is resorted to, or any agreement is made, for the determination or adjustment of the price of the grade or grades tendered other than the basis grade specified in the contract by any "fixed difference" system, or by arbitration, or by any other method not provided for by this act.

Contracts made in compliance with this section shall be known as section 7 contracts. The provisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase "Subject to the cotton futures trading act, section 7."

Section 11 of this act shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 7 hereof.

SEC. 8. That for the purposes of this act the only markets which shall be considered bona fide spot markets shall be those which the Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time, after investigation, determine and designate to be such, and of which he shall give public notice.

SEC. 9. That in determining, pursuant to the provisions of this act, what markets are bona fide spot markets the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to consider only markets in which spot cotton is sold in such volume and under such conditions as customarily to reflect accurately the value of middling cotton seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple and the differences between the prices or values of middling cotton seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple and of such other grades and staple lengths of cotton for which standards shall have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture as the Secretary of Agriculture may require in regulations prescribed by him in furtherance hereof: Provided, That if there be not sufficient places in the markets of which are made bona fide sales of spot cotton of grades and staple lengths for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture to enable him to designate at least five spot markets in accordance with section 6 of this act, he shall, from data as to spot sales collected by him, make rules and regulations for determining the actual commercial differences in the value of spot cotton of the grades and staple lengths established by him as reflected by bona fide sales of spot cotton of the same or different grades and staple lengths in the markets selected and designated by him from time to time for that purpose, and in that event differences in value of cotton of various grades and staple lengths involved in contracts made pursuant to section 5 of this act shall be determined in compliance with such rules and regulations: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of any persons engaged in the business of dealing in cotton, when requested by the Secretary of Agriculture or any agent acting under his instructions, to answer correctly to the best of his knowledge, under oath or otherwise, all questions touching his knowledge of the number of bales, the classification, the price or bona fide price offered, and other terms of purchase or sale of any cotton involved in any transaction participated in by him, or to produce all books, letters, papers, or documents in his possession or under his control relating to such matter. Any such person who shall, within a reasonable time prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture or such agent, willfully fail or refuse to answer such questions or to produce such books, letters, papers, or documents, or who shall willfully give any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $500.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards of cotton by which its quality or value may be judged or determined, including its grade, length of staple, strength of staple, character, color, and such other qualities, properties, and conditions as may be standardized in practical form, which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as the "official cotton standards of the United States": Provided, That any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be changed or replaced within a period less than one year from and after the date of the promulgation thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That no change or replacement of any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall become effective until after one year's public notice thereof, which notice shall specify the date when the same is to become effective. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prepare practical forms of the official cotton standards which shall be established by him, and to furnish such practical forms from time to time, upon request, to any person, the cost thereof, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, to be paid by the person requesting the same, and to certify such practical forms under the seal of the Department of Agriculture and under the signature of the said Secretary, thereto affixed by himself or by some official or employee of the Department of Agriculture thereunto duly authorized by the said Secretary. Any moneys received for or in connection with the sale of cotton purchased for the preparation of such practical forms and condemned as unsuitable for such use, or with the sale of such practical forms, may be expended for the purchase of other cotton for such use, and for travel and transportation and all other necessary expenses incident thereto.

SEC. 11. All contracts under this section shall comply with each of the following conditions:

First. Conform to the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

Second. Specify the grade, type, sample, or description of the cotton involved in the contract, the price per pound at which such cotton is contracted to be bought or sold, the date of the purchase or sale, and the time when shipment or delivery of such cotton is to be made.

Third. Provide that cotton of or within the grade or of the type, or according to the sample or description, specified in the contract shall be delivered thereunder, and that no cotton which does not conform to the type, sample, or description, or which is not of or within the grade specified in the contract shall be tendered or delivered thereunder.

Fourth. Provide that the delivery of cotton under the contract shall not be effected by means of "set-offs" or "ring" settlement, but only by the actual transfer of the specified cotton mentioned in the contract.

The provisions of the first, third, and fourth subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the document or memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is entered into, the words "Subject to the cotton futures trading act, section 11."

This section shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 5 of this act.

SEC. 12. Any cotton-futures exchange desiring to be designated a "contract market" shall make application to the Secretary of Agriculture for such designation and accompany the same with a showing that it complies with the foregoing conditions, and with a sufficient assurance that it will continue to comply with the said requirements.

(a) A commission composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General is authorized to suspend for a period not to exceed six months, or to revoke the designation of any cotton-futures exchange as a "contract market" upon a showing that such cotton-futures exchange has failed or is failing to comply with any of the above requirements, or is not enforcing its rules of government made a condition of its designation as set forth in section 4. Such suspension or revocation shall only be after a notice to the officers of the cotton-futures exchange and upon a hearing: Provided, That such suspension or revocation shall be final and conclusive unless within 15 days after such suspension or revocation by the said commission such cotton-futures exchange appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which it has its principal place of business by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the order of said commission be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such cotton-futures exchange will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the Secretary of Agriculture, chairman of said commission, or any member thereof, and the said commission shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings, including the notice to the cotton-futures exchange, a copy of the charges, the evidence, and the report and order. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the said commission duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The proceedings in such cases in the circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way. Such a court may affirm or set aside the order of the said commission or may direct it to modify its order. No such order of the said commission shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the cotton-futures exchange that the order is unsupported by the weight of the evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded to such cotton-futures exchange for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States, or is beyond the jurisdiction of said commission: Provided further, That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall refuse to designate as a contract market any cotton-futures exchange that has made application therefor, then such cotton-futures exchange may appeal from such refusal to the commission described herein, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General of the United States, with the right to appeal as provided for in other cases in this section, the decision on such appeal to be final and binding on all parties interested.

(b) If the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any person is violating any of the provisions of this act, or is attempting to manipulate the market price of any cotton in violation of the provisions of section 4 hereof, or of any of the rules or regulations made pursuant to its requirements, he may serve upon such person a complaint stating his charge in that respect, to which complaint shall be attached or contained therein a notice of hearing, specifying a day and place not less than three days after the service thereof, requiring such person to show cause why an order should not be made directing that all contract markets, until further notice of said commission, refuse all trading privileges thereon to such person. Said hearing may be had in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, before the said commission, or before a referee designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall cause all evidence to be reduced to writing, and forthwith transmit the same to the Secretary of Agriculture as chairman of the said commission. That for the purpose of securing effective enforcement of the provisions of this act, the provisions including the penalties of section 12 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, relating to attendance and testimony of witnesses, the production of documentary evidence, and the immunity of witnesses, are made applicable to the power, jurisdiction, and authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, the said commission or said referee in proceedings under this act, and to persons subject to its provisions. Upon evidence received the said commission may require all contract markets to refuse such person all trading privileges thereon for such period as may be specified in said order. Notice of such order shall be sent forthwith by registered mail or delivered to the offending person and to the governing boards of said contract markets. After the issuance of the order by the commission, as aforesaid, the person against whom it is issued may obtain a review of such order or such other equitable relief as to the court may seem just, by filing in the United States circuit court of appeals of the circuit in which the petitioner is doing business a written petition, praying that the order of the commission be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the commission by delivering such copy to its chairman or to any member thereof, and thereupon the commission shall forthwith certify and file in the court a transcript of the record theretofore made, including evidence received. Upon the filing of the transcript the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, to set aside, or modify the order of the commission; and the findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by the weight of the evidence, shall in like manner be conclusive. In proceedings under paragraphs (a) and (b) the judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

SEC. 13. Any cotton-futures exchange that has been designated a contract market in the manner herein provided may have such designation vacated and set aside by giving notice in writing to the Secretary of Agriculture requesting that its designation as a contract market be vacated, which notice shall be served at least 90 days prior to the date named therein as the date when the vacation of designation shall take effect. Upon receipt of such notice the Secretary of Agriculture shall forthwith order the vacation of the designation of such cotton-futures exchange, effective upon the day named in the notice, and shall forthwith send a copy of the notice and his order to all other contract markets. From and after the date upon which the vacation became effective the said cotton-futures exchange can thereafter be designated again a contract market by making application to the Secretary of Agriculture in the manner herein provided for an original application.

SEC. 14. For the efficient execution of the provisions of this act, and in order to provide information for the use of Congress, the Secretary of Agriculture may make such investigations as he may deem necessary to ascertain the facts regarding any unfair practices or abuses upon, and regarding the general operations of, cotton-futures exchanges whether prior or subsequent to the enactment of this act, and may publish from time to time, in his discretion, the result of such investigation and such statistical information gathered therefrom as he may deem of interest to the public, except data and information which would separately disclose the business transactions of any person and trade secrets or names of customers: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the Secretary of Agriculture from making or issuing such reports as he may deem necessary relative to the conduct of any cotton-futures exchange or of the transactions of any person found guilty of violating the provisions of this act under the proceedings prescribed in section 12 of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture in any report may include the facts as to any actual transaction. The Secretary of Agriculture, upon his own initiative or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate marketing conditions of cotton, including supply and demand, cost to the consumer, and handling and transportation charges. He shall likewise compile and furnish to producers and distributors, by means of regular or special reports or by such methods as he may deem most effective, information respecting the cotton markets, together with information on supply, demand, price, and other conditions in this and other countries that affect the markets.

SEC. 15. Further to effectuate the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to prescribe the manner and form in which accounts, records, and memoranda relating to cotton and contracts for the purchase and sale thereof shall be kept, and he may require all persons who act in the capacity of a clearing house, clearing association, or similar institution for the purposes of clearing, settling, or adjusting any such transactions to keep such records and to make such returns as will fully and clearly disclose all facts in their possession relating thereto, and thereafter any person who fails to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda in the manner and form prescribed or approved by the Secretary shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500.

SEC. 16. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed from time to time, after investigation, to fix, prescribe, and publicly announce the maximum limit of open interest which may be held by any individual, firm, or corporation, or his or its affiliations in contracts of purchase or sale of cotton on any contract market for future delivery in any month or in specified months, and it shall thereafter be unlawful for any individual, firm, or corporation, or his or its affiliations, to acquire or hold such on open interest in excess of the maximum limit so fixed: Provided, That in fixing and prescribing any maximum limit of open interest hereunder the Secretary of Agriculture shall give due consideration to any recommendation submitted to him by the governing board of such contract market: Provided further, That such limitation of interest shall be for the purpose of preventing the forcing of any month or any futures market out of proper parity with other months, or other futures markets shall not be used for the purpose of arbitrarily limiting the legitimate merchandising operations of any individual, firm, or corporation, or his or its affiliations, and the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time increase or reduce the maximum limit if upon investigation he finds that the interests of the cotton industry will be best served by so doing: Provided further, That no reduction in such limitation shall affect contracts already entered into within the limit theretofore fixed.

SEC. 17. Any person who shall violate the provisions of section 3 or 16 of this act, or who shall fail to evidence any contract mentioned in said section 3 by a record in writing as therein required, or who shall deliver for transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce by telegraph, telephone, or wireless, or other means of communication false or misleading reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of cotton in interstate commerce, or any person or persons who shall manipulate or attempt to manipulate prices of cotton or who shall corner or attempt to corner any cotton in futures-contract transactions upon any cotton-futures exchange designated as a contract market under this act, or any person who shall knowingly submit to any officer of the United States Department of Agriculture for classification under this act any reginned, repacked, false packed, mixed packed, or water packed cotton without informing such officer that such cotton is in fact reginned, repacked, false packed, mixed packed, or water packed; or any person who shall interfere with or influence improperly or attempt to influence improperly any person employed in the administration of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

SEC. 18. No fine or imprisonment shall be imposed for any violation of this act occurring within 60 days following its passage.

SEC. 19. The Secretary of Agriculture may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 20. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

During the reading of the bill—

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VINSON of Georgia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13936) to amend the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the gentleman's attention to page 2, line 13, where it is provided, "Except that such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers, and subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Board may prescribe."

I suggest that you put in parenthesis "chapter 7 of section 4 of the United States Code," which relates only to the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In view of the disaster that has overtaken Porto Rico, does the gentleman think it would be wise to extend the limit of amount on farm loans in that territory?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do think it is wise and proper. The matter has been canvassed very carefully. The local manager of the Federal land bank in Porto Rico has recommended the passage of this act, and the Federal farm land bank in Baltimore has recommended it. The storm, of course, did not take the land away. This amendment does not increase the amount that may be loaned to an individual in Porto Rico beyond that which may be now loaned in the mainland, but $10,000 less. I think it is only fair and right, and will render great service to those people down there in rehabilitating the devastated territory. On that point I would like to read from a telegram which I have just received. It says:

SAN JUAN, P. R., January 10, 1929.

Congressman McFADDEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Your project asking Congress to increase loans of Federal land bank from a maximum of $10,000 to $25,000 for Porto Rico is the best economic solution presented for the relief of Porto Rico. The island being agricultural, every business depending on agricultural returns will recover from the effects of the recent disastrous cyclone which devastated the agricultural section in a much shorter time than through any other source. The fact that this increase will assist all agricultural interests is of unestimated value. It will also loosen up money that is tied up in farm mortgages for general commercial purposes. We recommend with greatest vigor and urge that your bill be presented and passed at the earliest opportunity. We consider this of vital importance to the rehabilitation of our economic situation.

J. RUIZ SOLER,
Vice President-Treasurer Porto Rico Sugar Producers' Association.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Congress passed a bill recently, if I recall, creating a loan fund for Porto Rico, to be administered by a commission. I doubt the wisdom of extending the limit on farm loans in Porto Rico. The most important thing to be regarded as to the farm-loan system is the solvency of its bonds. I figure that we do not assist the farm-loan system and do not advance its utility when we step out too far in extending the loan limit. Conservative policy as to loans made by the farm-loan system will much better secure the success of the system than otherwise.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The provisions of the Porto Rican relief bill permit loans to be made to individuals only.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Oh, yes; I know that, and it was to take care of an emergency situation. This amendment now offered is permanent.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that this amendment to the present law will help the farmers rehabilitate themselves, whereas the recent appropriation was of a different nature. I will say further, in answer to the gentleman, that the records show, and they are confirmed by the manager of the Federal land bank in San Juan, that the loans to Porto Rican farmers are the best loans in the Federal farm-loan system, and instead of this weakening that system and perhaps having inferior security back of the bonds, in my judgment, it will increase the security back of the bonds by this privilege of increasing the amount of these loans, and will help a great deal in cutting down the average operating expenses, as there is less expense in caring for the larger loans—hence the average expense will be lessened.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the average value of land there for loan purposes?

Mr. McFADDEN. Under the law there is a limitation as to the amount that can be loaned on those lands. There is a high price value on those lands, and that is one of the additional securities that will be gained by making loans on that high-priced land, because the loans are made at a low rate of valuation. The value of sugar lands is $500 to $600 per acre, coffee lands $250 to $300, and tobacco lands about the same, and so forth.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I understand that this Porto Rican bank is a branch of the Baltimore bank, and if the Baltimore bank is observing a reasonable valuation for the making of loans and is not taking into consideration what might be termed the inflated value of some of these lands, and if the gentleman has satisfied himself on that point, I shall not object to the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am satisfied that the business of that bank is being conducted properly and that the loans are made on proper valuations.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is it true that this bill does not contemplate an increase in the amount that will be borrowed on the individual acre but is rather an increase in the amount that can be borrowed by any farmer, so that he may get money borrowed upon the entire farm or plantation which forms the average unit?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the idea.

Mr. BURTNESS. And there is no disposition, if I understand correctly, to increase the amount in so far as the individual acre is concerned?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I understand, the present law applies to the Territory of Alaska, and it is now proposed to include Porto Rico. What is the situation with reference to the Territory of Hawaii?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is purely an administrative matter in Hawaii, and I do not think this legislation affects them at all.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The only difference is it changes $10,000 to $15,000.

Mr. McFADDEN. This does not change the original act at all, except as to the amount to be loaned to each individual borrower at $15,000, whereas in the States here the limit is $25,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman understands that the law does apply to the Territory of Hawaii?

Mr. McFADDEN. The present farm loan law does, yes; but this amendment does not affect Hawaii at all, but leaves that situation just as it is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall establish in each Federal land-bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land-bank district. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico and the Territory of Alaska; and the Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in Porto Rico and a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in the Territory of Alaska. Loans made by each such branch bank shall not exceed the sum of $25,000 to any one borrower and shall be subject to the restrictions and provisions of this act, except that each such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers, and, subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may prescribe, the rate charged borrowers may be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm-loan bonds of the Federal land bank with which such branch bank is connected: Provided, That no loan shall be made in Porto Rico or Alaska by such branch bank for a longer term than 20 years."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 11, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$15,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer two amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 1, line 4, after the word "act," insert "(U. S. Code of Laws, title 12, sec. 672.)"

Page 2, line 13, after the word "act," insert "(ch. 7 of title 12, U. S. C.)"

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14803) to extend the time for completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Natchez, Miss., three years from May 3, 1928.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 5240, an identical bill, for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 5240 for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Natchez, Miss., authorized by the act of Congress approved May 3, 1926, entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Natchez, Miss.," be, and the same is hereby, extended to May 3, 1931.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT SAN BENITO, TEX.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14458) authorizing the Rio Grande del Norte Investment Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near San Benito, Tex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment which I am going to suggest. It is simply the form taken from the model bills presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] sometime ago, providing what should go into the valuation in the event the State should take over the bridge. The author of the bill is not on the floor just now.

Mr. DENISON. We have never authorized the taking over of an international bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then it will not do any harm; but if at any time the State of Texas should take it over, I am simply embodying a new section, which is the formula used by the gentleman in his model bill. If there is no objection to the amendment, I shall not object, but I would like to have a little understanding about it.

As the author of the bill is not in the Chamber at this moment, Mr. Speaker, may we have this bill and the three following bills go over without prejudice?

Mr. DENISON. No; just pass them over temporarily.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will ask that they be passed over temporarily, until the gentleman from Texas returns.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill and the three following bills (H. R. 15005, H. R. 15006, H. R. 15069) may be passed over temporarily. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF FOR GRAIN ELEVATORS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (S. J. Res. 59) authorizing the President to ascertain, adjust, and pay certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920, as per a certain contract authorized by the President.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the bill will be amended by providing that the Comptroller General shall make the examination; is that correct?

Mr. PEAVEY. I have not any amendment to offer, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The gentleman from Kansas, chairman of our War Claims Committee, has such an amendment.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Let us have the bill go over. It should have more consideration than we will have to give to it to-day.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am ready to agree to pass it, only there is an understanding it will be amended so as to provide that the Comptroller General shall make the examination.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. May I ask the Member who is in charge of this bill a question? It is my understanding that the general law which Congress passed several years ago provided a method for settlement of claims of this kind and that a certain number of such claims were in fact settled and paid. May I inquire why these claimants did not collect their claims, if they are so worthy and correct, or why ought they now to be paid? Why did they not collect their claims in the manner provided by the Congress?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I am advised by the subcommittee that held the hearings on this bill that these little elevators, generally run for the farmers by one man, did not understand that they had to press their claims. The Government furnished them with blanks to report on the amount of wheat in storage, and at the end of each week or two weeks they sent in such report, and they thought the Government would send them the money as provided under their contract. When the period of the contract had passed, the big elevator men and the group elevator men and the line elevator men went in with their auditors and got the money due them from the Government Grain Corporation under the contract. The farmers' elevators and the little elevator men did not understand what they should do and did not get their money, and all they are asking is that an audit be made of the Government's own books and whatever the books of the Government show is due them under the signed contracts shall be paid them, and I have an amendment from the committee to offer asking the Comptroller General to make the audit.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Would the gentleman have any objection to putting in an amendment to limit attorneys' fees to 10 per cent?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not represent any of these men and I do not know anything about that. I will just say that I understand the farmer elevators, of which there are several hundred, have finally grouped their claims and have got some farm organization to take charge of them. I do not know whether there are any attorneys' fees involved in it or not.

Mr. SCHAFER. But the gentleman is chairman of the committee that reported out this bill, and does not the gentleman think a limitation of 10 per cent would be fair and proper?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not know whether it would be fair or not. A lot of these claims are for $10, $20, $50, $100, and so forth, and I do not know of any of them over $200 or $300. So if fees are a consideration, 10 per cent would be very small.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I have been objecting in the Committee on Indian Affairs to legislation that did not limit the fees of attorneys, and if this bill does not contain a limit on attorneys' fees, for one I shall object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will draft such an amendment.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill. I think this bill that involves 4,000 claimants at a probable cost of more than $1,000,000 ought not to come up in this manner. It can not receive the careful consideration which should be given to a bill of this kind.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If the Government has already paid the big claimants why should not the little fellows be paid?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The Government provided a method which was clearly set out in the statute, but it was ignored by these claimants. They had their remedy and did not pursue it.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Because they did not know anything about it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Now, I understand the claimants' "attorneys" are working this thing up.

Mr. KNUTSON. No; this only involves a number of small claimants.

Mr. SCHAFER. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HUDSON. I shall object unless they are willing to let the bill go over.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, I have heretofore stated to gentlemen interested some changes I have in mind. I do not think the resolution on its face ought to declare that there are sums due these people, unless the comptroller so determines under the proposed amendment. I had in mind an amendment to strike out the words "now justly due said claimants" and insert in line 4, page 3, after the word "amount," "if anything." Let it be determined whether there is any amount due them or not. Then, I think there should be an amendment with reference to attorneys' fees. I had in mind also limiting the total amount, but I understand it involves only a few hundred thousand dollars at the most.

Mr. BURTNESS. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Michigan, and I think we can obviate any objections the gentleman from Texas has. The intent of the resolution is not that Congress by this particular act directs the payment of the claims. The intent of the resolution is that an effort shall be made to determine definitely whether these people have any money coming to them or not.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the gentleman will read the bill, he will find that it not only gives the authority to adjust but also authority to settle and pay these claims. The gentleman need not be doubtful about the fact that the bill will entail a considerable charge on the Public Treasury. The very fact that so many Members are suggesting amendments for the protection of the Government enforces what I say, that a bill of this importance, involving 4,000 claimants, at a probable cost of a million dollars, ought not to come up on unanimous consent. For that reason I think I ought to object.

Mr. BURTNESS. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will amply safeguard every objection that the gentleman has indicated. The gentleman from Michigan discussed the proposed amendments with me, and while I do not represent the committee and am not on the committee, I have been in touch with the people interested in these claims. I know what they are up against, and I think I know something about the problems involved. The amendments that are proposed will not only take care of the situation but they will safeguard the Public Treasury. If the people have any money coming to them, let it be determined. The Government has the evidence in its possession and there ought to be some way of finding out what that evidence is.

Now, I am not familiar with the statute referred to by the gentleman from Texas, and I can not say whether any steps could have been taken under it or not. I want to call attention to the fact that this deals not with the Government but with a specific corporation that was set up in which the Government owned the stock, and I entertain serious doubt whether the statute to which the gentleman referred covers this situation.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The report itself admits that the statute provided a clear method of settlement, and these claimants did not pursue that method at law; and now at this late day, 10 years after the war, come to Congress and ask that the Government authorize the payment of the claims.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. This contract was made between the Grain Corporation on the part of the Government and the elevator people who were seeking to charge 5 cents a bushel for the storage and insurance on the grain held because of the shortage of cars. They went to the elevator people and said, "We will pay you seven-twentieths of a cent per week for the storage of the grain and cost of insurance," which was agreed to. The big elevator men had auditors and kept track of the amount due them and presented their claims in due form; and the little elevator fellows, the small elevator, that only had one man to run them, took their blanks which the Government furnished them and sent in the report and thought that was sufficient. They never presented their claims until long afterwards, and then they learned that they were too late and payment was refused.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. How did they learn that they should have presented their claims?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The big fellows had been paid, and the little fellows found that when they made application they were turned down.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Why were they turned down?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. For various reasons—for one, the statute had run against them. Then it was held that there was no way that their claim could be paid, and now they ask the Government to pay them what is due them under the written contract made with them by the Grain Corporation on behalf of the Government as shown by the books of the Government Grain Corporation. It seems to me eminently just and fair. This money is in the hands of the Government, turned into the Treasury by the Grain Corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I shall take the responsibility of registering one objection. I do not believe the bill should pass.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until we find out whether the committee will accept an amendment limiting attorneys' fees.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I have such an amendment ready.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. There will be no objection to such an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Are there any other objections except that of the gentleman from Texas? If there are no other objections, the Clerk will read the joint resolution. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) authorizing the President to ascertain, adjust, and pay certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920, as per a certain contract authorized by the President

Whereas it is provided in the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel (ch. 53, 40 Stat. L., approved August 10, 1917, and ch. 125, 40 Stat. L., approved March 4, 1919), wherein the President was authorized to determine and fix a guaranteed price, to be paid producers of wheat, and wherein the President was further authorized as follows:

"Whenever the President shall find it essential in order to carry out the guarantees aforesaid, or to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, he is authorized to make reasonable compensation for handling, transportation, insurance, and other charges with respect to wheat and wheat flour of said crops and for storage thereof in elevators, on farms, and elsewhere"; and

Whereas the President by an Executive order (No. 3087), dated May 14, 1919, in pursuance of the power conferred on him by said act, did order as follows:

"I further find it essential and hereby direct that in order to carry out the guarantees made producers of wheat of the crops of 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, the United States wheat director utilize the services of the Food Administration Grain Corporation (now the United States Grain Corporation by reason of a change of name authorized by Executive order) as an agency of the United States, and I authorize the Food Administration Grain Corporation * * * to enter into such voluntary agreements to make such arrangements and to do and perform all such acts and things as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of said act"; and

Whereas the United States Grain Corporation, in pursuance of said Executive order, and, for the purpose of carrying out and making effective the guaranteed price, made, and entered into, a certain contract, known as "the Grain Dealers' Agreement," with various independent and farmer grain firms and grain elevator companies in Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Wyoming, and Oklahoma, and wherein it was agreed as follows:

"Fourth. In case the dealer (the elevator firms) shall be unable, after using every effort and all diligence to ship in any week such total of grain as makes the equivalent of at least 20 per centum of the amount of wheat in his elevator and owned by him at the beginning of such week, the grain corporation shall pay to the dealer to cover insurance and interest for such week seven-twentieths of a cent per bushel on the wheat in the elevator owned by him at the beginning of such week"; and

Whereas the President, in an Executive order, dated August 21, 1920, did approve, ratify, and confirm all acts done or authorized by the said United States Grain Corporation in carrying out and making the guaranteed price effective; and

Whereas a number of claims of the said grain dealers, for money earned under said contract, still remains unpaid, and are now justly due said claimants: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to ascertain the amounts due on said claims, and he is further authorized to adjust and pay said claims, as ascertained to be due said claimants, out of any funds now in the hands of the United States Grain Corporation, and belonging to the United States, or out of the funds in the United States Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, and the President is authorized to make payment thereof therefrom to the several persons entitled thereto, as their respective interests may appear.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STRONG of Kansas offers the following committee amendment: Page 3, strike out all after line 2 and insert the following:

"That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to ascertain the amount due on said claims, if any, and he is further authorized to settle and adjust said claims, and to certify same to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to the several persons entitled thereto, as their respective interests may appear, together with the reasonable and necessary expenses incident to the administration of this resolution, out of any funds now in the hands of the United States Grain Corporation and belonging to the United States, or out of the funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the preamble is to be left in, so I move an amendment in the last paragraph of the preamble to strike out the words "and are now justly due said claimants."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 3, in the second last line of the last preamble, strike out the words "and are now justly due said claimants."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. STRONG of Kansas strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That attorneys' fees shall not exceed 15 per cent of the amounts recovered."

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

COLUMBIA BASIN RECLAMATION PROJECT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1462) providing for the necessary surveys, studies, investigations, and engineering of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice and that it retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me ask the gentleman from Washington whether he expects to have this bill up under suspension of the rules, if it is objected to now?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I do.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. To-day?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If we reach it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have certain amendments to the bill, which I would like to offer. I think without those amendments or something like them the bill ought never to pass under suspension or otherwise. If the gentleman will follow me with his bill, I shall be glad to state the amendments I have in mind to suggest whenever the matter comes up for consideration.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. CRAMTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I am glad to yield the floor.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I just want to ask a question or two. Has the gentleman from Washington given consideration to the fact that the War Department is about to begin a survey of the Columbia River, involving an expenditure of $660,000, which covers practically all of the things provided for in the Senate bill now on the calendar?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I have given consideration to the surveys to be made by the War Department but must disagree with the gentleman. They do not cover the matters which the Department of the Interior insists shall be investigated.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Has the gentleman taken up with the Bureau of Reclamation the question of whether or not there can be some cooperation between the Bureau of Reclamation and the War Department?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Undoubtedly they will avail themselves of all information that is furnished by any other department of the Government.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I quite agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] that this bill ought to be amended if we are to protect the Treasury of the United States. I have not anything further to say at this time. If the gentleman from Washington is going to insist on bringing it up in a different form, I shall object to its consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am very much surprised to hear it is expected to bring up this matter under suspension of the rules to-day if there is objection. This is the first time it has been reached. The House has very little information on the subject. This is a matter of very great importance, running up into the hundreds of millions of dollars, and I am strongly opposed to anything passing here now that carries on its face any suspicion that the Government is by the passage of this act committing itself to the construction of this vast reclamation project under present conditions.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, it does not commit the Government——

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to bring to the gentleman's attention certain amendments, and I hope if he brings it up under suspension or otherwise he will find these amendments satisfactory:

On page 1, line 8, after the words "Columbia Basin reclamation project," to insert the words "if authorized and constructed." No use of our going on and naming it unless it is authorized.

On page 2, line 4, amend the committee amendment by adding, after the word "project," in line 7, the following: "And whether the said project is feasible and its construction is desirable at this time." When we put up the money to investigate and report we want a report as to the feasibility and advisability of undertaking the project.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does not the gentleman think that is covered in the language of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I want it very clear and definite.

Page 2, line 8, after the words "appropriation of," insert the words "one-half of." In other words, this investigation will continue just as previous investigations, half to be paid by the Government and half out of the State or other sources.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. At that point I do not believe it has been customary for the State to pay half for surveys; but the State has paid out large sums——

Mr. CRAMTON. I have one more amendment: Page 2, line 10, after the word "authorized," insert "from the reclamation fund, such appropriation to be available only when matched by equal amounts contributed by the State of Washington or by other sources." And this amendment ought to be adopted. I think the Nation would not suffer if the investigation of this great scheme was to be halted here, but I do not want to urge my point of view too strongly. I am not prepared to oppose the continuation of this investigation if it is made clear that in such investigation we are not in any way committed, but that the expenses would be shared in by this wealthy association or the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation and in view of the fact that it is a useless expenditure of money, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT SAN BENITO, TEX.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up Calendar No. 1039 on the calendar. A few moments ago this bill and three other bills were passed temporarily to give me an opportunity to confer with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the author of the bill. I am now informed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], who reported the bill, that the amendments are acceptable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14458) authorizing the Rio Grande del Norte Investment Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near San Benito, Tex.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Rio Grande del Norte Investment Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near San Benito, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in Mexico.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Rio Grande del Norte Investment Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Texas needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of Texas upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Rio Grande del Norte Investment Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with any laws of Texas applicable thereto, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Rio Grande del Norte Investment Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will first report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the language "and its operation, and maintenance of such bridge."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, line 13, add the following new section:

"SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Texas or by any municipality or other public subdivision, or public agency thereof, by purchase, condemnation, or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the remainder of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to change the number of that section to number 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT OR NEAR DONNA, TEX.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15005) authorizing the Donna Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Donna, Tex.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. It is exactly like the other bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Donna Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Donna, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in Mexico.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Donna Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Texas needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of Texas, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Donna Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with any laws of Texas applicable thereto, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Donna Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer a similar amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, line 9, add the following new section:

"SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Texas or by any municipality or other public subdivision, or public agency thereof, by purchase, condemnation, or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property, and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Clerk was authorized to change the number of the last section to 6.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT OR NEAR LOS INDIOS, TEX.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15006) authorizing the Los Indios Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Los Indios, Tex.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is in general the language of the bill just read, and I ask unanimous consent that the first reading be dispensed with.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Los Indios Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande, so far as the United States has judisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Los Indios, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in Mexico.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Los Indios Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Texas needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of Texas, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Los Indios Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with any laws of Texas applicable thereto, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Los Indios Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or persons.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA is as follows:

Page 3, after line 10, add the following section:

"SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Texas or by any municipality or other public subdivision, or public agency thereof, by purchase, condemnation, or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements."

The amendment was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Clerk was authorized to change the number of the last section to 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will renumber the bill.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15069) authorizing the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Rio Grande City, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in Mexico.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Texas needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of Texas upon making just compensations therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with any laws of Texas applicable thereto, and the rates of tolls so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, after line 12, add the following new section:

"SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Texas or by any municipality or other public subdivision, or public agency thereof, by purchase, condemnation, or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property, and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements."

The amendment was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Clerk was authorized to change the number of the last section to 6.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL WAR MEMORIAL MUSEUM

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7206) to establish a national war memorial museum and veterans' headquarters in the building known as Ford's Theater.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill calls for the expenditure of $100,000.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It authorizes it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It authorizes the expenditure of $100,000 to perpetuate a memorial to a murder. That is really what it does.

I have no objection to the expenditure of money for the purpose of properly housing these relics of President Lincoln. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it is a most gruesome idea to foist upon the public a building which only recalls memories of one of the greatest tragedies the world ever saw. It approaches that thought with a morbidness I abhor.

The proper place for this collection of relics of this great man and merciful martyr would be the Congressional Library, the Smithsonian Institution, or the National Museum. I can not conceive that the people of this country would approve of the taking of Ford's Theater—now used as a storehouse—as a place to house this collection, especially when they learn it is proposed to reconstruct the box in which Lincoln was shot. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman, if he will permit, that the Government already owns this theater. This theater was bought shortly after the tragedy occurred so that it could never be used for theater purposes. The Government also owns the Oldroyd collection which it is proposed to house in this building in addition to the other relics which may be received by donations or otherwise, the Government paying $50,000 for that collection. I will further say to the gentleman that this legislation was proposed and very earnestly advocated by our late colleague Henry R. Rathbone, of Illinois. I have no doubt the bill would have been passed except that he asked to have the bill go over in order that he might make an address upon it when it was presented to this House.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] is very desirous of placing before the House some information in reference to this celebrated collection of Lincoln's relics, and I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection and give the gentleman from Illinois an opportunity to present the reasons for this legislation.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, that does not in any way, shape, or manner answer my objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Further reserving the right to object, I believe this collection of relics can properly be housed elsewhere. If the Government owns this building, it would be much better to tear it down than to allow it to remain standing in the city of Washington, almost adjacent to that wonderful and magnificent memorial erected to this man whose memory is enshrined in the hearts of the people of every section of this land.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, it is abhorrent to me to think of perpetuating that tragedy which brought sorrow to the whole world. I remember my first visit to Washington. As I came through one of the railroad stations I saw marked on the floor of the station the spot where President Garfield fell when he was shot, and I well remember the feeling of horror that came over me at that time. I can not conceive how anyone could be so morbid as to want to view this collection of the personal effects of the martyred President in this gruesome surrounding.

I am not going to object, because that would be taking, I consider, an unfair advantage of the rights which I have here to defeat the legislation, but I could not let this bill go by without calling the attention of the House to the fact that this is not a monument to the memory of Lincoln; that this in no wise protects, destroys, or disturbs the relics of Lincoln, but its effect is the perpetuation of a monument to John Wilkes Booth. I will leave it there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin withhold his objection in order to give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] an opportunity to read a letter from Colonel Grant, superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve my objection.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is a bill to establish a national war memorial museum and veterans' headquarters in the building known as Ford's Theater, and the bill provides that there may be such alterations and repairs to the building known as Ford's Theater as may be necessary to permit the use of such building for the following purposes:

First. As a museum for war relics and other articles of national and patriotic interest;

Second. As a permanent repository for the Oldroyd collection; and Third. Under rules and regulations prescribed by the director, as a national headquarters of the Grand Army of the Republic and of other veterans' organizations.

This bill passed the committee, I understand, with only one dissenting vote, and is here now because not of myself but because of former Congressman Rathbone. My late lamented colleague from Illinois Congressman Rathbone presented this bill, argued it, and if he were here now would say a thousand times more in its behalf than I could possibly muster the words to imitate him.

I am going to confine myself for about five minutes to reading a certain letter which I received only yesterday from Col. U. S. Grant, 3d, Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks. I had written to the committee asking them for any statement they might give me in regard to the cost and other conditions proposed in this matter, and I received this letter in reply:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND PUBLIC PARKS
OF THE NATIONAL CAPITAL,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1929.

Hon. RICHARD YATES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Housing Lincoln collection in Ford Theater Building, H. R. 7206.

MY DEAR MR. YATES: In accordance with a telephone request received this morning from the House Committee on the District of Columbia, I am sending you herewith a copy of a letter to Mr. UNDERHILL, which contains the estimate of the cost of housing the Lincoln collection in the Ford Theater Building.

Very respectfully,

U. S. GRANT, 3d, Director.

I am sure my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] will pardon me if I seem to be at all indelicate in quoting what Colonel Grant wrote to him. I would like to have it understood I am reading now only what Colonel Grant wrote to a Member of this House in reference to certain objections:

JANUARY 17, 1929.

Hon. CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Housing Lincoln collection in Ford Theater Building, H. R. 7206.

MY DEAR MR. UNDERHILL: On your verbal assurance that you would be interested in a short but specific summary of the purpose and scope of H. R. 7206, I venture to submit the following information:

Addressing myself first as to your doubt as to the advisability of perpetuating the Ford Theater because of the horrible act it naturally commemorates and the fear that it may help to keep alive sectional feeling in the country, permit me to point out that President Lincoln is one of the two outstanding northern figures toward whom the South has come to have a feeling of respect, sympathy, and even affection. Therefore any shrine to Mr. Lincoln's memory actually becomes a focus about which the northern and southern sympathies gather and which is sure to become a help in doing away with sectional feeling rather than in accentuating it.

Careful inquiry of the custodian of the collection confirms my own view that as much interest and sympathy is shown with this very personal collection, gathered about various incidents and contacts of Mr. Lincoln's whole life, by southern visitors as by northern. I have been surprised to find how much human interest the collection has for many Americans, particularly those plain people upon whom Mr. Lincoln himself put such great reliance. However, the interest has not been limited only to the plain people, Mr. Ford himself having at one time made an offer of $65,000, subsequently raised to $70,000, to buy the collection. The interest of the collection is largely due to the fact that so many personal relics are gathered together, and separated in the Library of Congress and the National Museum it would largely lose this interest. It has the kind of intimate public interest which the Victor Hugo and Chatalet Museums have in Paris. From the outset the commission charged by Congress with the purchase of the collection had in mind that its custody and care should be a function of the National Museum, provided it could be kept together. The authorities of the Smithsonian Institution have formally stated to the commission that they did not wish to take it over, that they did not have room or facilities for caring for it, and that the preservation of only a very few items in the collection would be in accordance with their policies and duties.

The building in which the collection is now housed, 516 Tenth Street NW., is in a very bad state of repair, offers a very great fire risk, and is structurally in such condition that the number of visitors admitted at a time has to be limited, and it is not safe to turn the collection open to schools and crowds. The Ford Theater Building has gradually deteriorated through a long period of years. Summer before last the annex had to be torn down because it was in danger of falling down, and material changes will have to be made to it if it is to be put to further use by the Government. The items in the estimate covered by this bill would, therefore, have to be paid by the Government anyway in the next year or so, except the cost of reproducing the old theater auditorium, $34,000, and that of a more adequate display and insuring the preservation of the collection by the purchase of new cases, $10,000.

It is noteworthy that additional items are constantly being offered by people having relics and finding that their preservation would be pretty well assured in this way. Moreover, Mr. Oldroyd himself has a considerable collection of other Civil War items, not directly connected with Mr. Lincoln, which he would gladly donate free of any cost if there were room for their display and preservation. By leaving the collection where it now is during the few remaining years of Mr. Oldroyd's life the Government is forfeiting the possibility of securing this interesting and valuable accretion. There are also some other Lincoln relics which I have collected from various Government establishments, such as a very interesting contemporary picture of a reception at the White House, a desk which Mr. Lincoln used when visiting at the Soldiers' Home, a clock which was in the room he used at those times, etc. These are now deteriorating in such storage as we can afford them and can not be made available until a new place is found to house the Lincoln Museum.

The estimate of $100,000 covered by the proposed bill was based on doing the following work:

New roof	$26,540
Auditorium	34,000
Plumbing, including 4 new toilet rooms	6,500
Exhibiting Oldroyd collection (cases, etc.)	10,000
Partitions	1,500
Repairing and replacing floors	4,000
Repairing tile floors	500
Plastering	1,640
Painting	1,650
Lighting	750
Boiler repairs	750
Linoleum	3,000
Total	90,830
Personal services, including design, engineering, and contingencies	9,170
Grand total	100,000

In view of the above, I hope that you will withdraw your objection to the bill, both because it will provide the most economical, safe, and fitting way of preserving a collection bought by the Government in a building already owned by the Government, and also because it will tend to put up a shrine at which visitors from both sections of the country will find themselves united in a common sympathy for the great man who outlined in his second inaugural address the way the wounds of the Civil War could best be healed and the Union reunited. I fully agree with you as to the feeling of horror at the memory of the assassination, which is necessarily suggested by the Ford Theater. But still this assassination is itself in great measure the cause for the union of sympathy already referred to, and the memory of it can not be erased by merely doing away with the remaining physical structures. Should the Government adopt the other possible solution (tear down the Ford Theater Building and sell the ground), some private owner would undoubtedly buy it, rebuild a replica there, and commercialize the memory which attaches to the locality. This would undoubtedly be much worse. Furthermore, the Government would have to go to the expense of buying land elsewhere and building a suitable fireproof structure for the collection it has acquired. Whether this structure were in the form of an addition to the National Museum or a separate structure elsewhere it would be enormously more expensive than merely repairing and putting in condition the building now owned by the Government; and no location could be found as convenient to the visiting public as the present location on Tenth Street. Moreover, a building elsewhere could never have the same public interest and intimate connection with the collection housed within it as the Ford Theater.

Very respectfully yours,

U. S. GRANT 3d, Director.

You understand this bill does not appropriate anything. It is simply an authorization for an appropriation, and, of course, would come back to the House after the Committee on Appropriations as well as the Bureau of the Budget have passed upon it.

As I have said, this is not my bill; but as I understand it, this is the proposition, and I am in deep and hearty sympathy with the thought and the spirit and the animus back of the matter.

I believe almost without exception the Members of this House feel that instead of having the effect and having the appearance and being considered as a reminder simply of an awful murder that it will go far—very far, indeed—toward bringing about a wonderful increase of southern and northern sympathy, which we are all in favor of.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. Yes.

Mr. DYER. After the building has been repaired, as per the outline of the gentleman's remarks and the letter of Colonel Grant, it will still be a building that is liable to be destroyed any time by fire; in other words, it will not be a fireproof building, and you are putting into it a very valuable collection relating to the life and services of Mr. Lincoln. Does not the gentleman feel that these relics should go into a building such as indicated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL], where they will be absolutely safe from destruction by fire?

Mr. YATES. I think there might possibly be some danger of that kind, but I understand that with the proposed repairs it will be as nearly fireproof as we could perhaps desire; and, furthermore, I do not think it would be well to scatter these most valuable things and put them partly in the Smithsonian and partly in the National Museum, which I understand from another portion of Colonel Grant's letter would be the only alternative.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does not the gentleman think it would be more appropriate to put this valuable and historic collection in the National Museum, for instance, or some similar place, or even in the Congressional Library, rather than in that boxlike structure down there on Tenth Street, which at best can only be repaired? It will still be a rather unsatisfactory building. Should we not get the collection away from that stage where this awful tragedy occurred? Would it not mean more to the people of the United States, the general public, who come here to view the collection, if they could view it under pleasant surroundings rather than under the tragic and morbid surroundings which will always exist at Ford's Theater?

Mr. YATES. I will say in answer to the gentleman that I am very biased and prejudiced and bigoted, perhaps, in one particular. I hail from the home and the tomb of Lincoln, and at great expense the State of Illinois has done everything it possibly could to separate these things from the ordinary museums, and to-day hundreds of thousands of people—I think 200,000 people last year—come from the remotest towns and boundaries of the Republic and are glad to find these things separate and apart and not mixed up with the other State museums, which are very wonderful.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. YATES. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. On that very proposition, why could we not tear down Ford's Theater and for $100,000 or a little more, or even ten times as much, if that is necessary—and I will vote for it—build a proper place for these relics? Why spend $35,000 in a nonfireproof building for the reproduction of the stage and the box and the auditorium which commemorates nothing but a tragedy? That is my objection.

Mr. YATES. So I understand.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert in the RECORD a portion of the letter I wrote in reply to Colonel Grant. It is as follows:

I agree with you in most of your arguments, particularly that President Lincoln's memory has the respect and affection of both the North and the South. I also agree that the collection of his personal effects under one roof is desirable.

My objection that I emphasize is that the Ford Theater is not the proper place because of the tragic memories it perpetuates of this merciful martyr. My objection is not so deep-seated as to lead me to actively oppose this proposition.

Mr. YATES. It seems to me the gentleman's argument would obliterate all the monuments to Lincoln in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

BATHING POOLS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5758) amending the act approved May 4, 1926, providing for the construction and maintenance of bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the main purpose of the bill, but I want to give notice that if the bill passes the objection stage and is considered, I shall offer as an amendment to the bill a proviso that the appropriation shall be made as other like appropriations to the District of Columbia have been; and after section 2 a proviso that the fees collected at the pools shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to inquire of the two gentlemen, the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from Maryland, the best authorities on the District of Columbia, what happened to the other bathing pools authorized?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that when the bathing pools at the Tidal Basin were abolished it took away from the people of the District the only facilities of this nature available. Congress passed a bill which is now a law, and which this bill still seeks to amend, providing for the erection of two large bathing pools, one for the white and one for the colored population. They were to be subject to the approval of the Fine Arts Commission and the National Planning Commission. The National Planning Commission, after consultation with the late chairman of Appropriations Committee, Hon. Martin B. Madden, recommended that there should not be constructed two large pools which would increase the transportation difficulties, and interfere with traffic, but rather that there should be smaller pools in connection with playgrounds and recreational places. This bill authorizes the appropriation for the needed construction of small pools which is in accordance with the recommendation of the Park and Planning Commission, and agreeable to the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge District of Columbia appropriations.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. You are going to put local small pools throughout the District?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. In connection with the playgrounds.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And then every year we will have to go through with this fight that we always have in connection with those pools.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. We have two pools authorized, but instead of constructing two large pools, which they say will interfere with transportation and traffic in certain sections of the city, the planning committee recommends to the Appropriations Committee that a number of small pools be erected. The two pools have been erected, but they are small pools.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What are the sizes of the pools that have been built?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have not the exact dimensions; perhaps the gentleman from Nebraska can give them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Are they big enough to swim in? [Laughter.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Twelve pools at $200,000 each would be $2,400,000.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The two pools now built cost about $75,000 apiece, to the best of my recollection. And we had authorized $345,000 for the construction of two large pools, but that was changed to two smaller pools, which, as I say, cost about $75,000 apiece.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me that this is a big proposition to go through as a Consent Calendar bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. This bill does not appropriate any money. It simply authorizes them, as the authorities feel they are needed. I have no objection to the gentleman proposing to limit the number.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not sufficient knowledge of the matter to feel justified in suggesting a modification of the number. I have not been on a committee that has considered it at all. That is one of the points I make. It seems to me that it is a bill that ought to come up in the regular way and be considered so that we can have the benefit of all of the information as to sites and everything proposed.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. If we can not get consideration of it in this way at this time the legislation will probably fail. The bill came up several weeks ago and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge District appropriations, objected to it. He has drafted several amendments, so that the cost of these pools will be paid entirely out of the District revenues under the fiscal arrangement now existing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman means the cost of maintenance and minor repairs?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I mean the cost of construction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And he has an amendment to do that?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer at the end of section 1 a proviso, following the word "authorized"— to be paid in like manner as other appropriations from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That does not provide for repayment to the Government of the amount that is expended for construction.

Mr. SIMMONS. No. They would become District property.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Under the plan the Congress has adopted, where they appropriate a lump sum toward the government and maintenance of the District of Columbia, anything above the lump sum is from the District revenues.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I thought the gentleman stated that the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska would provide that there would be a refund eventually to the Government of the construction costs out of the income from the use of the pools.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has another amendment, which would provide that all fees must be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I read the bill, the only assurance is that there will be a charge made by the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks, or by whoever may operate them under the terms of the bill, which will pay for maintenance and minor repairs. The capital cost, so to speak, is never to be repaid either to the Federal Government or to the District government?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No. This is a public accommodation; it is a public bathing pool. It is a facility for the use of the people.

Mr. SIMMONS. The second proposal that I had to offer follows section 2, and strikes out all of the language of line 24 and thereafter and inserts a provision that the fees collected shall be paid weekly to the collector of taxes or deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia. In other words, that the cost of these pools is to be paid from the District revenues, and the receipt shall go back to the Treasury, and then the cost of operation and maintenance will be appropriated for annually as are other expenses of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned, I do not know enough about this subject to feel justified in objecting to consideration of the bill; but it is a great big proposition to pass by unanimous consent, authorizing an expenditure of $2,400,000 for bathing beaches.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have no objection to changing the number. This legislation is brought here by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, who have serving on it four citizens who are eminent engineers and city planners, who serve the Government without pay.

Mr. HUDSPETH. How about the cost of the site? Is that paid out of the District revenues?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The original bill provides that these pools shall be erected on land owned by the District or the United States Government.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And not to be acquired through condemnation of private lands?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is not proposed in this legislation that they shall be built on privately owned land but on land already owned by the District or the Federal Government.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I call the attention of the gentleman from Maryland, and of the House generally, to this fact: Here is a District bill involving a very large expenditure. Under the rules of the House the District Committee has, or has an opportunity to have, a day every two weeks. It does not seem to me that it is right for a committee that has that high privilege to take up the Consent Calendar with bills that so many of us are doubtful about, as we are about this particular bill. I realize that this is an important matter. I do not know enough about it to take the responsibility of objecting, but I do wish it could be taken up in some other way. Is not the District going to have a day before the adjournment of this Congress?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The rules of the House provide for two days a month to be set aside for the consideration of District legislation. That is subject, of course, to the will of the House. I have no assurance that the House is going to give us the days provided by the rules.

Mr. DYER. The District Committee has not had any lately.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. They have had no days this session.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman has waived his District day by giving unanimous consent to have them passed.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Probably I have been negligent.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am in sympathy with the purposes of the bill, but it appears to me that inasmuch as these are public pools and beaches, no fees should be collected from the people. Why collect a fee?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is necessary to have a small fee for the maintenance of public bathing pools. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. BOYLAN. That is true.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Do you not charge a small fee in New York?

Mr. BOYLAN. For the use of towels and soap. We do not charge for the use of pools or for bathing.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is for the maintenance and care of the bathing pool, for the use of towels, lockers, and so forth.

Mr. BOYLAN. It would seem a small fee for that use, towels, soap, and so forth, would be permissible, but I do not think it proper that any fee should be charged for the use of the pool, in bathing.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. There is no fee exacted.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the gentleman will yield, will the gentleman state whether the bathing pools are built on land owned by the Government?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. On land owned by the Government; one near Rock Creek Park——

Mr. HUDSPETH. Where are they located?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. One at Twenty-fourth and Rock Creek Park in the rear of the junior colored high school. The other pool is being constructed on the grounds of the McKinley High School, R Street NE.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will.

Mr. McSWAIN. Has there not been strong opposition of the residents immediately near the McKinley High School to the location of the bathing pool there?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that to every site considered for the erection of the existing bathing pools there has been much opposition.

Mr. McSWAIN. If there is going to be opposition of those to be benefited, why should we force anything upon them?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman knows large municipalities provide bathing facilities, and those facilities we have had in this city for many years. It is only when the controversy arose over the construction of a colored bathing beach pool at the Tidal Basin that the appropriation was withdrawn, and the city has been without those facilities.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Regular order!

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It takes three objections.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois, Mr. COLLINS, and Mr. RAYBURN objected.

EXEMPTING EMPLOYEES, PUBLIC-SCHOOL SYSTEM, FROM SALARY-LIMITATION PROVISION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill H. R. 12531, a bill to exempt employees of the public-school system of the District of Columbia from the $2,000 salary-limitation provision of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved May 10, 1916, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object. The normal schools are turning out more pupils than can be absorbed, and many of the teachers lack an opportunity to teach in the different schools. Now, this bill is prompted by school politics, where day teachers want to hold jobs and get extra compensation by extra teaching.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the purpose of this bill is not to do what the gentleman says. The purpose of this provision, as I understand it, is not to do what the gentleman from New York fears, but to enable employees of the Federal Government to teach in night schools, pupils of which are largely adult people who otherwise would not be able to go to school in the daytime, and for the use of the services of Federal employees. Many in the departments are acquainted with specific subjects, and this would allow those people to teach in the night schools.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Are the employees of the various departments of the Government earning more money by the teaching of matters pertaining to their line of work?

Mr. SIMMONS. In the night schools in part; yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington, the gentleman from Wisconsin, and the gentleman from New York object. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FREE TEXTBOOKS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12739) to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GILBERT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill applies only to the high schools. I think that it is economically unsound. The majority of the pupils are children of well-to-do families, and I think it is economically unsound and socially unwise. I wish to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky objects. It takes three objections.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I see by this report that the bill entails an initial expenditure of $242,000 the first year and $100,000 each year thereafter. It is a pretty good-sized proposition to come up before the House on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that there was a bill on the Consent Calendar for his State involving an expense of $200,000,000.

Mr. MILLER. We will take that up when the time comes. Many of the States have active laws regarding the public use of textbooks. Primarily I am in favor of the public supplying the textbooks where the parents are in indigent circumstances and where the guardianship funds are not sufficient at their disposal to supply textbooks, and where in cases where the children are wards of the court they are unable to supply the textbooks. Besides that, in this city there are in schools here large numbers of children who reside outside the District, living in States which are amply competent to furnish the children with schools and free textbooks. I do not think it is appropriate to authorize an expenditure of $242,000 this year and $100,000 each year thereafter to supply textbooks to the high schools. I therefore object. In justification of my objection I may say that in several States the children of indigent parents are furnished clothing for their children—sufficient clothing, I may say, that will enable the child to make a presentable appearance in school. This in addition to textbooks and school supplies. With the immense amount of money the Government, out of the Federal Treasury, contributes toward school buildings and schools of the District of Columbia, it strikes me that the people of the District should not expect the people of New York, Massachusetts, Ohio, California, Washington, and all the States to buy the school textbooks and school supplies for their children in the high schools. They are just as able to supply their own children with school books as are the citizens of any State or any other city.

It will not do to say that it will break the pride of any parent to make the proper showing provided for in my proposed amendment. Human pride is not that sensitive.

Large numbers of boys and girls in the high schools as well as in the graded or ward schools come from outside the boundaries of the District simply because the people outside the District will not tax themselves to build the proper schoolhouses and maintain their own schools.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, as to the matter the gentleman suggests who has just spoken with reference to pupils residing outside of the District, we have been making an effort to reduce that number, and the number has been reduced. I think it is only a matter of a little time when that unfairness to the District shall have ended. But that ought not to cause us to take action here to make it more difficult for the children of parents of limited means to get a high-school education. We have gotten to the point where a high-school education is just as necessary for competitive reasons as an eighth-grade education was a few years ago, and in the case of the child of limited means, when it gets to that period of entering the high school, where his age makes it so that the pressure is stronger for him to go out and earn a living, we ought not to add to that pressure by reason of the cost of textbooks. These textbooks will be cheaper for the taxpayers to pay in this way than for each pupil to have to buy textbooks that at the end of the year are totally lost and wasted. Under this bill this year they are used by one child, and next year by another, and there is not that economic waste.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, we already at public expense provide textbooks for the children of the District of Columbia; at public expense in the primary grades, which are the essential parts of education. I shall object to this bill unless an amendment such as I now propose shall be embodied in the bill. The amendnrent provides "that in the case of indigent parents, the absence of sufficient funds in the estates of wards of the court and of guardianships, and in all other cases where the parties in charge of children of school age are unable financially to provide the schoolbooks, supplemental schoolbooks, educational books and supplies, such books and supplies shall be furnished; all cases of such indigency and inability to be determined by the Board of Education of the District of Columbia upon application, a showing of which must be made in a permanent record thereof, preserved by the Board of Education."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I can not conceive of three men objecting to the consideration of this bill. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. I object.

Mr. GILBERT. I object.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TEACHERS' SALARY ACT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12956) to amend certain sections of the teachers' salary act approved June 4, 1924, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to answer certain criticisms that I have heard around me here of the District Committee having so many bills on the Consent Calendar. That is true. It would be better if we had them on some other calendar. But the House should remember that other cities of comparable size to Washington have city councils in session throughout the year.

The only city council Washington has is now assembled. It has not had a day this session, and the probability that it will have a call on the regular calendar seems remote. Certain emergencies arise in every city, and this being the home of Congress and the home of the Government, we necessarily have to give more time to it than otherwise would seem necessary. With that explanation I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDMENT OF THE CODE OF LAWS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2366) to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have one or two amendments to offer to this bill. One of my amendments would prevent any of these institutions from issuing diplomas while they are under investigation and another amendment would prevent them from issuing diplomas while they are taking an appeal to the court of appeals. I do not think there can be any objection to those amendments. But here is an amendment to which I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Maryland. On page 3, line 2 after the word "art" I insert the words "or in law," so as to make the same requirement for a correspondence school in law as is made for a school of medicine. If the gentleman will accept those amendments I shall not object. I think something ought to be done about these diploma mills. I think this bill will do it and it is necessary, it seems to me, to protect the people from getting fake diplomas in law as much as in medicine.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] is very strenuously opposed to this bill. I had a talk with him about it and was to go into the matter further with him. In view of the fact that I have not had this further conference with him and that he is not here to-day, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia be amended by adding the following new sections:

"SEC. 586a. The fee payable to the recorder of deeds for filing the certificate of incorporation under this subchapter shall be $25.

"SEC. 586b. No institution heretofore or hereafter incorporated under the provisions of this subchapter shall have the power to confer any degree in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, nor shall any institution incorporated outside of the District of Columbia or any person or persons individually or as a partnership or association or otherwise, undertaking to confer any degree, operate in the District of Columbia, unless under and by virtue of a license from the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, which before granting any such license may require satisfactory evidence—

"1. That in the case of an individual or any unincorporated group of individuals he, or a majority of them, or in the case of an incorporated institution, a majority of the trustees, directors, or managers of said institution are persons of good repute and qualified to conduct an institution of learning.

"2. That any such degree shall be awarded only after such period of residence and such quantity and character of work as are usually required by reputable institutions awarding such degrees.

"3. That applicants for said degree possess the usual high-school qualifications at the time of their candidacy therefor.

"4. That considering the number and character of the courses offered, the faculty is of reasonable number and properly qualified, and that the institution is possessed of suitable classroom, laboratory, and library equipment.

"SEC. 586c. Application for the license referred to in the preceding section shall be in writing upon forms prepared under the direction of the Board of Education, and shall be filed with the secretary of the said board, whose duty it shall be, in case the institution so licensed is incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia, to forward a copy of said license to the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, who shall indorse upon the certificate of incorporation the fact that said license has been issued. The Board of Education is hereby authorized to employ the personnel of the public-school system of the District of Columbia, so far as the same may be necessary, for the proper performance of its duties under this act, and it shall be the duty of all public officers and bureaus of the Federal Government concerned with educational matters to render such advice and assistance to the Board of Education as it may from time to time consider necessary or desirable for the better performance of its duties under this act.

"SEC. 586d. A license once issued may be revoked by said Board of Education for noncompliance on the part of any individual or individuals, association, or incorporated institution so licensed with the provisions of section 586b of this act. Upon the revocation of any such license it shall be the duty of the secretary of the Board of Education, in the case of an institution incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia, to forward a copy of the revocation to the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, who shall cause a notation to be placed upon the certificate of incorporation to the effect that its authority to confer degrees has been revoked: Provided, however, That 30 days' notice shall first have been given to such individual or individuals, association, or to the trustees, directors, or managers of said institutions, with full opportunity to be heard by said Board of Education at either a public or nonpublic session thereof, as may be desired by such individual or individuals, association, or the institution threatened with revocation of its license, and the evidence upon which said board shall act in the revocation of such license shall be committed to writing under the direction of the board, and upon application therefor a copy thereof furnished to such individual or individuals, association, or the institution whose license has been revoked: And provided further, That any party aggrieved by the action of said board in refusing to license or in revoking a license previously granted may have the action of the said Board of Education reviewed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia at an equity term thereof.

"SEC. 586e. No institution incorporated under the provisions of this subchapter shall use as its title, in whole or in part, the words "United States," "Federal," "American," "national," or "civil service," or any other words which might reasonably imply an official connection with the Government of the United States or any of its departments, bureaus, or agencies, or of the government of the District of Columbia, nor shall any such institutions advertise or claim the power to issue degrees under the authority of Congress or otherwise than under the authority of the license granted to them by the Board of Education as hereinbefore provided. The prohibition in this section contained shall be deemed to include and is hereby declared applicable to any individual or individuals, association, or incorporation outside of the District of Columbia which shall undertake to do business in the District of Columbia or to confer degrees or certificates therein; and any such individual or individuals, association, or incorporation violating the provisions of this section shall be subject to the penalty hereinafter in section 586f provided.

"SEC. 586f. Any person or persons who shall, directly or indirectly, participate in, aid, or assist in the conferring of any degree by any unlicensed individual or individuals, association, or institution, or by any individual or individuals, association, or institution whose license has been revoked, or shall advertise or claim any authority to confer any such degree, except in pursuance of the provisions of this act, or who shall violate the provisions of the section of this act immediately preceding shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, in line 15, strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"2. That any such degree shall be awarded only after such quantity and quality of work shall have been completed as are usually required by reputable institutions awarding the same degree: Provided, That if more than one-half the requirements for any degree are earned by correspondence or extramural study, such fact shall be conspicuously noted upon the diploma conferred: Provided further, That no diploma shall be issued conferring a degree in medicine or any healing art for study pursued or work done by correspondence."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 2, in line 22, after the word "degree" and before the colon, insert "and approved by the Board of Education of the District of Columbia."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment to the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA to the committee amendment: On page 3, line 2, after the word "art," insert the words "or in law."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 5, line 7, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "And provided further, That after notice has been given as hereinbefore provided and during said 30-day period or during the time said decision is under review by the supreme court, no diploma shall be awarded or degree conferred by the licensee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION TO THE ASSISTANTS TO THE ENGINEER COMMISSIONER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7341) to authorize the payment of additional compensation to the assistants to the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the committee report does not give any information which would indicate that this bill is necessary. Could the chairman of the District Committee give us any information which would justify the passage of this bill?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that officers in the United States Army, who are assigned here as assistants to the engineer commissioner, receive the salary of their rank in the Army. They are assistants to the engineer commissioner and assigned to his office, and some of the assistants to the assistant engineer and those in other offices have been rated under the classification act at $5,600 and $6,000. This bill would only involve an additional expenditure of some $2,500, approximately, per year. It will increase the salaries of the Army officers assigned to the District of Columbia as assistant engineer commisisoners from the pay of their present rank to $6,000 per annum, which would be comparable with the heads of other divisions who have been classified under the classification act.

Mr. SCHAFER. In other words, it would discriminate against all other officers in the same service, those who are connected with Mississippi flood relief work, and so forth?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It would give them an additional salary while they were assigned to duty in the District of Columbia as assistant engineer commissioners. I will say to the gentleman that living is higher here than it is in a great many places to which officers are assigned, and the salary of the assistants in some instances is higher than the salary of the officer in charge of that particular branch or division.

Mr. SCHAFER. While the living cost is higher, the advantages are greater and there does not seem to be any opposition from Army officers to being stationed here.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The assistant engineer commissioners here have been men who have rendered excellent service. One of the assistants affected by this bill is Captain Whitehurst, who is assigned here with the rank and pay of captain. He has done very exceptional work in connection with the street-improvement program of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman might add right here that assistant engineers of a city of this size doing this kind of work would get more than $6,000 a year.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think I can explain why this bill possibly has some objection. It applies to Captain Whitehurst, to Major Davison, and Major Atkins, who are all three of them very efficient officers assigned to duty with the District of Columbia. The bill gives these three men, one a captain, two holding the rank of major, the pay of a lieutenant colonel during this period of service. There are other Army officers assigned to duty with the District of Columbia that this bill does not affect. Major Somervell, who has charge of the Harbor of Washington, a very efficient officer, as are these other men, is not benefited by it. The salary of Colonel Grant, in charge of public buildings and parks, is just a trifle above $6,000. He has under him two other officers who serve the District of Columbia, that this bill does not benefit. So my objection to the bill is, first, that it creates a discrimination between the Army officers that serve the District of Columbia now; and in addition to this, when it is passed, it will create a very serious discrimination between Army officers stationed in Washington whose duty it is to serve the District of Columbia, and Army officers stationed in Washington whose duty it is to serve the United States. They are being paid the pay of their rank and they are obeying the orders and performing the duties that go with their rank, and I see no reason for giving some of them greater pay than the others are receiving.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Does not the gentleman's committee each year appropriate additional sums to pay the difference in the salary of the engineer commissioner? The object of this bill is to put the assistants to the engineer commissioner on the same basis.

Mr. SIMMONS. Congress appropriates each year a sum for the engineer commissioner so that he draws the same pay as the other commissioners, but I would suggest that there are certain social obligations and other matters of that kind that are necessary that the engineer commissioner has to perform that justify that payment. If the gentleman's committee would see fit to authorize a reasonable allowance in excess of their salaries out of District funds to those who are serving——

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman what he considers a reasonable allowance? We are only attempting to raise the officers to whom he refers and who, he says, are rendering splendid service, $400.

Mr. SIMMONS. You are giving two of them about $300 and one of them about $2,000 additional.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is not the information before the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the salary of Captain Whitehurst is four thousand one hundred and some dollars and this will give him $6,000. He is an efficient officer.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. He receives, I will say to the gentleman, according to the information placed before the committee, $4,150.

Mr. SIMMONS. This bill would give him an increase of some $1,800.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12530) to amend Public Law No. 254, approved June 20, 1906, known as the organic school law, so as to relieve individual members of the Board of Education of personal liability for acts of the board.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to explain, in a word, what the bill does.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that under decisions of the courts here, where the members of the Board of Education have been held liable for acts of the board, the judgment rendered against the board has also been entered against them as individuals. This has embarrassed them and has tied up their property. The purpose of the bill is to relieve them from personal liability for their official acts as members of the Board of Education.

Mr. DYER. In that instance, if a man secured a judgment against the board, how would he be paid?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It would be paid by the District of Columbia, as it is now being paid, but pending that the judgment is against the individuals and all their property.

Mr. DYER. But when the District has paid it, that relieves them entirely?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill, S. 3828, may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Law No. 254, approved June 20, 1906, be amended by adding, at the end of section 2 of said act, the following:

"The members of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia shall not be personally liable in damages for any official action of the said board performed in good faith in which the said members participate, nor shall any member of said board be liable for any costs that may be taxed against them or the board on account of any such official action by them as members of the said board; but such costs shall be charged to the District of Columbia and paid as other costs are paid in suits brought against the municipality; nor shall the said board or any of its members be required to give any supersedeas bond or security for costs or damages on any appeal whatever."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7971) to define and punish vagrancy in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOOPER. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the bill, in section 2, page 2, says that the defendants' personal recognizance shall not be accepted. I would like to ask the gentleman if that is not, under the circumstances, a rather harsh provision. There are circumstances where a man might be convicted, or, under a plea of guilty, might find himself totally unable to furnish a bond, and the magistrate, taking all of the particulars into consideration, might want to let him go on his own recognizance. Would it not be better, and would not the gentleman accept an amendment allowing the magistrate that discretion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There is a large colored population in the District of Columbia, and the result of this bill might be that they would arrest a large number of the negro population who are not quite vagrants.

Mr. HOOPER. That may be; there are dangers that may be incurred in making it too restrictive. Let me ask the gentleman: Is this the first bill on vagrancy that there has been in the District of Columbia?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; there is a vagrancy statute, but under court decisions it is ineffective and worthless. This bill was sent up here by the major and superintendent of police. Since the bill was reported the major and superintendent has submitted a much more drastic bill and ask that it be considered in lieu of the legislation on the calendar. In view of the fact, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice until the next unanimous-consent day, when we may have an opportunity to consider the other bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the bill going over in order to consider the other bill, but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is a provision here that in these days of unemployment where you seek to cure the employment situation—where you seek to cure the unemployment situation with a jail sentence—that you can not cure the economic conditions by jail sentences. Section 4 provides that all persons who do not have sufficient means to maintain themselves or themselves and their families, and live idly and without employment and who are able to work and refuse to work are vagrants. How can a man prove or how can he bring witnesses that he has been looking for a job and could not find it? How is he going to bring witnesses to that? How can you say that he refuses to work unless the District offers him the job? This is punishing poverty, which is absolutely absurd.

Mr. HOOPER. I want to give notice to the gentleman from Maryland that if another bill is introduced I shall offer the amendment that I suggested.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA, Mr. BLACK of Texas, Mr. DYER, Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, Mr. GILBERT, and Mr. HUDSON also objected.

CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL UNITS OF THE ARMY MEDICAL CENTER, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14154) to authorize appropriations for construction at the Army medical center, District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this does not complete the project. There will be $660,000 more asked at some time in the future, because the estimate is for $2,000,000. You have already appropriated in 1921, $500,000, and you are now asked for $840,000, and that leaves under the original plan to be built $660,000. Are the sponsors of the bill ready to assure the House that this appropriation now asked will complete all the buildings?

Mr. McSWAIN. This authorizes and will complete the particular addition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is, the wings.

Mr. McSWAIN. The wings that are contemplated. I want to say that after objection was made when this was stricken from the calendar I made a careful personal investigation, and, much to my surprise and gratification, Captain Foley, of the Army Medical Corps, had made such a careful set of plans and such a thorough computation based on the unit of cost that it seemed to me entirely reasonable and probable and that the appropriation would cover the present addition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The wing?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So that some time in the future this House may be asked to consider another bill for another wing?

Mr. McSWAIN. For another wing?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. One wing has been completed.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The estimate for the entire project is $2,000,000, so that this does not complete the original plan?

Mr. McSWAIN. I did not understand the gentleman. This does complete one additional wing that is now planned, the plans for which have been drawn.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And that gives you two wings?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So that you would still have the administration building?

Mr. McSWAIN. The administration building for the Army Medical School. That is distinct from the hospital administration building.

Mr. JAMES. I have a letter here from General Ireland, and he says that it was explained to the committee when the $500,000 was given that it would complete one wing of the building, and that the entire building would cost in the neighborhood of $1,250,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But your own report says $2,000,000.

Mr. JAMES. This is $1,250,000. I shall put the entire letter in from General Ireland:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON GENERAL,
Washington, January 15, 1929.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JAMES: In compliance with your telephone request of this morning I have the honor to make the following statement with reference to the necessity for the completion of the Army Medical School at the Army medical center, a bill to accomplish this purpose, H. R. 14154, having been introduced into the House on December 3, 1928.

First. The act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 122), making appropriation for the Army under the head of "Construction and repair of hospitals" appropriated $500,000 toward the erection of a building for the Army Medical School. It was explained to the committee when the $500,000 was given that it would complete one wing of the building and that the entire building would cost in the neighborhood of $1,250,000. The south wing of the building was constructed and was occupied by the Army Medical School in 1923. The building as constructed is only large enough for a part of the activities that should be housed in it, namely, the laboratories and the school for the Army Medical Corps. In the meantime the Army Veterinary School, the Army Dental School, the Army School of Nursing, and the Army School for Physiotherapy and Occupational Therapy Aides are of necessity conducted in temporary buildings, and it will be necessary to continue them in temporary buildings until the Army Medical School is completed. The activities mentioned are now carried on in temporary buildings as follows: Army Dental School, 35; Army Veterinary School, 35; Army School of Nursing, quarters 5; School for Physiotherapy Aides, 76; School for Occupational Therapy Aides, 96, 97, and 98.

Second. The contracts have just been let to complete the construction authorized for the Walter Reed Hospital and money has already been appropriated to construct a psychiatric service. All of this construction should be completed within a year. When that is completed every patient under treatment at Walter Reed Hospital will be in modern fireproof construction, and if the money for the completion of the Army Medical School is authorized and when the nurses' quarters now under construction are completed, every activity at the Army medical center will be housed in modern buildings except the enlisted personnel on duty at the hospitals, part of whom will still be in temporary construction. This statement, of course, does not include the quarters for the officers on duty at the hospital.

If we are to ever get rid of the temporary buildings at Walter Reed Hospital, thereby removing the fire hazard and the enormous expense of the upkeep of these temporary buildings, I think it is of the greatest importance that the completion of the Army Medical School should be authorized.

Very sincerely,

M. W. IRELAND,
Major General,
The Surgeon General, United States Army.

I take it for granted that when we pass this bill there will not be any more money requested, except the balance of $300,000 for nurses' quarters—we have already authorized $600,000 for this purpose—and some money needed to take care of the enlisted men in temporary buildings.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let us understand each other. This will complete the center. It will furnish a wing to the wing built with the appropriations in 1921, give us the administration building, and it completes that unit?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And you are not coming back for $660,000 to bring it up to the $2,000,000 originally estimated?

Mr. JAMES. I have placed the whole letter in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $890,000, to be expended for the construction and installation at the Army medical center, District of Columbia, of such buildings, utilities, and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows: Completion of Army Medical School, $840,000; addition to power plant, $50,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLERKS TO DISTRICT JUDGES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12526) to amend section 126 of title 28 of the United States Code (Judicial Code, sec. 67, amended).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill making the United States a party defendant in certain suits?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no; this is a bill which simply adds the word "marriage" to the degree of relatives who can not be employed. The reason for that is this. We had a case down in Oklahoma where the judge employed his own wife, and we are seeking to prevent that.

Mr. HOOPER. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Further reserving the right to object, does not the bill also add something else? What hurt does it do for a judge to have employed as his clerk somebody who is related to him?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because they do not work.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a highly confidential position, and I can see that possibly the judge might have a niece who would be competent for the position.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think the niece would come within the consanguinity of a first cousin. He may employ his niece.

Mr. CRAMTON. Or even a first cousin.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We had a case where the judge employed first his daughter, then his wife, and then another daughter, and no one of them did any work except to sign the pay roll.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman can devise a law that will make a Federal employee work under all conditions, he will have to go much further than this.

Mr. DYER. And some of these people were on the pay roll, but never did respond in service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 126 of title 28 of the United States Code (Judicial Code, sec. 67, amended) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"No person shall be appointed to or employed in any office or duty in any court or as a stenographer or clerk to a district judge or to a judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals who is related by affinity, marriage, or consanguinity within the degree of first cousin to the judge of such courts. No such person holding a position or employment in a circuit court on December 21, 1911, shall be debarred from similar appointment or employment in the district court succeeded to such circuit-court jurisdiction."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "affinity," strike out the comma and the word "marriage"; and in line 10, page 1, after the word "courts," insert the words "or by marriage."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 365) authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, I have an amendment to the joint resolution which I submitted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], which he is willing to accept.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. My objection is based on this ground: Our experience with the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial Exposition, I think, has convinced the Congress and the country that we have passed beyond the day of world's fairs, and that they are an unjustifiable public expenditure.

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Texas that very possibly my amendment may help to meet his objection.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If you are not in favor of a proposition of this kind, the time to exert whatever opposition you have is right at the outset.

Mr. CRAMTON. My thought has been, if the gentleman will yield to me, that the time to make it clear what part, if any, we are going to take in the world's fair is now; and as I understand, what I propose in this amendment is in harmony with the present program and quite agreeable.

I think that will remedy the danger the gentleman has in mind. I propose to add a new section to read as follows:

That the Government of the United States is not by this resolution obligated to any extent in connection with the holding of such world fair and it is not hereafter to be so obligated other than for suitable representation thereat.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. That section would not be effective. It would be a mere gesture. Future Congresses are not bound. There are plenty of ways to get around a declaration of that kind. I think the experience in Philadelphia's Sesquicentennial Exposition ought to be convincing.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, our experience in that is different from what is considered here. We know this exposition is going to be held, that many millions of dollars are going to be raised, and I have faith that Chicago will make a success of it where Philadelphia was not successful. I think it is proper for us to invite other nations to attend, and if we do it is proper for this Government to have representation there as we are to have at Seville, Spain, next year. This does not bind any future Congress. It does make it clear that we do not now expect to be committed by this action to some great expenditure for the conduct of the exposition, and I was in hopes this amendment would meet with the objection of the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the House for a moment. The proposed exposition in Chicago in 1933 will commemorate the centennial of the establishment of that city as a municipality. Hearings were had on the bill before the Committee on Ways and Means. This exposition will be altogether different from any held heretofore on a broad scale. This will not be a competitive exposition of products and manufactures of various industries and interests. It will be entirely an exposition of the history of the progress, development, and growth of industry, science, and art, and it is proposed to take each industry, each mode of art, and each industrial science particularly, including agriculture, and show its history from the beginning to the present time, especially during the last 100 years. The National Research Council has been engaged to take charge of the planning of this exposition. At the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means Vice President Dawes and Senator DENEEN, of Illinois, appeared, and, as appears in the print of the hearings, they stated specifically that no amount of money will be asked and there is no purpose of calling for any aid from the Federal Government for the expenses of this undertaking.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Who is going to finance that?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration Corporation, which has been organized under the laws of the State of Illinois as a corporation not for profit. The President, under the terms of the bill, will not invite nations to participate until $5,000,000 has been actually paid into the capital of that corporation, and it is planned to raise a total of $30,000,000 for the purposes of the exposition. The State government and the city of Chicago will participate in the plans for holding the fair. The bill even provides for the expenditure which the Government will undergo in the Customs Department by assigning men to handle the collection of customs duties upon goods brought in for exposition and subsequently sold. It provides that the expenses for handling exhibits in bond shall be paid for by the corporation. It provides that the corporation will reimburse the Federal Government for every item of such expenditure. Some objection was raised in the Committee on Ways and Means on the ground that the Government should pay these expenditures, but the committee was convinced that the plan proposed by this organization was feasible and proper.

I will further say this to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]: We all realize that exhibitions and expositions of the old character probably will not be successful hereafter, but this exposition is on a large scale, covering all industries and all sciences and all arts, upon the same plan and along the same lines as was the transportation exhibition given by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. in Baltimore last year, where they showed the entire history of railroad transportation from the beginning of railroad building in the United States up to the present time. There were present at that exhibition a larger number of people than at the Sesquicentennial Exhibition at Philadelphia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman will understand how the Members of the House feel after the experience with the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Would the gentleman object to this bill going over? I would like to consult the hearings for more information. I have not had the time yet to read the hearings.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will have to consent, of course, if the gentleman insists.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will request that of the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. A similar exposition was held recently at Dusseldorf, Germany, to show the progress of mineral science. It attracted 7,500,000 people. Already a large number of corporations and firms have indicated their desire to participate in this exposition at Chicago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I ask for the regular order if the gentleman will not permit the resolution to go over.

Mr. SCHAFER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin or the gentleman from Texas wants to prejudice this matter. I am satisfied that they will not object when they understand that the entire membership of the Committee on Ways and Means, including the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] approve it. All the members of the Committee on Ways and Means supported this bill. I do not see how any ground can be found for opposition. The financial responsibility of the people controlling this enterprise is such that there will be no question of coming to Congress for aid.

Mr. SCHAFER. If at a future time a bill should be introduced in Congress providing for a couple of million dollar subsidy, as was done, for instance, in the case of the Philadelphia exposition, will the gentleman oppose it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will oppose it. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] states fully the position of the men who are promoting this enterprise at Chicago.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am not going to take the responsibility of objecting. I remember all these assurances were given us at the time the Philadelphia exposition was provided for. I think practically all the assurances were given at that time that the gentleman has given us to-day. Yet in due time the Philadelphia exposition came to Congress for a large appropriation. I hope that such will not happen in the case of this Chicago exposition. I shall not object to consideration of the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted by the House, I insert in the RECORD at this point the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, through its chairman, Mr. HAWLEY, to accompany House Joint Resolution 365:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 365) authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House with amendments and recommend that the amendments be agreed to and the joint resolution as amended do pass, the amendments being as follows:

Strike out the preamble.

On page 2, line 6, strike out the words "the celebration" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a world's fair to be held in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, in the year 1933, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of Chicago as a municipality."

The joint resolution provides that whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that a sum of not less than $5,000,000 has been raised and is available to the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration Corporation, for the purposes of a world's fair to be held in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, in the year 1933, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of Chicago as a municipality, the President is authorized and requested, by proclamation or in such other manner as he may deem proper, to invite the participation of the nations of the world in the celebration; that articles may be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at said celebration, free of duty, customs' fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, but that articles so imported may be sold for delivery at the close of the celebration subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and that all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption, shall be subject to any duty imposed thereon by the revenue laws in force at the date of their importation and to the terms of the tariff laws then in force; and that all necessary expenses incurred, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States by the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration Corporation under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The city of Chicago was incorporated as a municipality in the year 1833, with a population of 28 white persons and some native Indians. It now has within its metropolitan area more than 4,000,000 people and is growing at the rate of about 90,000 per year.

In 1893 the World's Columbian Exposition was held in Chicago to commemorate the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Columbus on the American Continent. It was probably the most successful exposition held prior to or since that time. All world's fairs or expositions have hitherto been held upon the basis of competitive exhibitions of the products of agriculture, industry, science, and art. The citizens of Chicago, who have organized the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration Corporation as a corporation not for profit under the laws of the State of Illinois, propose to celebrate the centennial of their municipality by the holding of a world's fair celebration along entirely new and novel lines.

The greatest progress in the world's history has doubtless been made during the 100 years marking the rise of Chicago. It is therefore planned to "portray intelligently, entertainingly, and educationally the modern spirit underlying the progress of each industry, and of agriculture, art, drama, and sport" during this period. It will be a scientific and historical display of the inception and progress of every element in human endeavor during the past century. In the language of its sponsors, "it will express the new spirit of the world to-day, which is the utilization for the work of man of the knowledge which science has accumulated, and the application of it through collective and coordinated effort and action in industry, agriculture, and social organization." It is said that it will "supplant the old exhibition idea by the natural evolution of a new generation, a new thought of presenting a panoramic picture, beautifully adorned, of what science and industry have achieved for the world, and may yet achieve." It is further reported that "the National Research Council, which is the organization of the scientific intelligence of the Nation, has indorsed this idea, pledged its support, and appointed a committee of its distinguished members to aid in the preparation and development of the plans."

The financial success of the undertaking seems assured. Before the President will act under the resolution, he must be satisfied that a sum of not less than $5,000,000 has been raised and is available for the celebration, and the corporation is preparing to accumulate a total available capital of approximately $30,000,000 for the expenses of the enterprise.

It is the belief of the sponsors, as voiced by Vice President Dawes at the hearing before the committee, that this method of exhibition, which has had very successful forerunners on limited scales, will attract the attention of the civilized world to such an extent that if it is not held in the near future, as proposed, in Chicago, some other city, or some other country, will enthusiastically appropriate the idea. An exhibition at Dusseldorf, Germany, showing the progress of medical science, drew an attendance of 7,500,000 people, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad recently exhibited the progress of transportation in the United States at an exposition in Baltimore, which attracted more people than attended the Sesquicentennial Exposition at Philadelphia.

Your committee believe that the centennial celebration of the marvelous growth of the metropolis of the Middle West, and the plan proposed for the very unique, attractive, and valuable exposition of the world's progress, during the last hundred years, merit the attention and support of our own, as well as foreign governments, and also believe that the usual facilities for bringing foreign objects into this country for exhibition should be granted to the Chicago enterprise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 365) authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes

Whereas there has been duly incorporated, under the laws of the State of Illinois, by citizens of the said State, an organization designated as the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration for the purpose and with the object of preparing and holding a world's fair in the city of Chicago in the year 1933, and of celebrating fittingly the centennial of the incorporation of Chicago as a municipality through a portrayal in an intelligent, entertaining, and educational manner of the modern spirit underlying the progress of the various industries and of agriculture, art, drama, and sport; and

Whereas this observance by the city of Chicago is coincident with the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington; and

Whereas the celebration as proposed would unquestionably be of great benefit to the commercial interests of the United States and of the nations participating, and of educational value to the people of the United States and of the world: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that a sum of not less than $5,000,000 has been raised and is available to the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration Corporation, for the purposes of the celebration, the President is authorized and requested, by proclamation or in such other manner as he may deem proper, to invite the participation of the nations of the world in the celebration.

SEC. 2. That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at said celebration shall be admitted free of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful during said celebration to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported and actually on exhibition therein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their importation and to the terms of the tariff laws in force at the time.

SEC. 3. And provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States by the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration Corporation, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Pages 1 and 2, strike out the preamble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the other committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "of," strike out the words "the celebration" and insert "a world's fair, to be held at the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, in the year 1933, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of Chicago as a municipality."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at said celebration shall be admitted free of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful during said celebration to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported and actually on exhibition therein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their importation and to the terms of the tariff laws in force at the time.

SEC. 3. And provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States by the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration Corporation, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to strike out section 3, because the proviso really belongs to the preceding section. In some way the wrong number was put in; I do not know how. I move to strike out the words "section 3" and make the proviso a part of section 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Page 3, line 9, strike out the word and figure "section 3" and make the remainder of the paragraph a proviso to the former section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to be placed at the end of section 2, to be known as section 3, as follows.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 3, after line 14, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the Government of the United States is not by this resolution obligated to any expense in connection with the holding of said world's fair and is not hereafter to be so obligated other than for suitable representation thereat."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF TRANSACTION ON COTTON FUTURES EXCHANGES

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill, H. R. 13646, was engrossed, read a third time and passed, for the purpose of offering an amendment to section 4, on page 8, line 23, which amendment would be as follows:

Page 8, line 23, after the word "Texas," where it appears for the first time, insert the following: "Augusta, Ga.; Dallas, Tex.; Memphis, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the bill is. Could the gentleman from Georgia give us the calendar number?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is H. R. 13646, the bill regulating cotton transactions. This amendment merely includes the interior designated cotton markets, which were omitted from the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are those the only ports mentioned?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. I will state to the gentleman from New York that the seaboard ports are mentioned, but the interior ports were by inadvertence left out.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. What does it do with reference to those ports?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It merely puts them in the same position as Charleston, Savannah, Houston, New Orleans, and Galveston.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 8, line 23, after the word "Texas" where it appears the first time, insert the following: "Augusta, Ga.; Dallas, Tex.; Memphis, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERMISSION THAT THE UNITED STATES BE MADE A PARTY DEFENDANT IN CERTAIN CASES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13981) to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether this bill carries these cases to the United States court where a lien of this character is involved regardless of the amount that is involved in the proceeding.

Mr. DYER. Yes. It can be taken to the United States court for that purpose only and then it is transferred back to the State court.

Mr. HOOPER. It would not be limited to the jurisdictional amount that is now involved in the ordinary case?

Mr. DYER. No.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is not the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to bring the United States into a foreclosure action where the United States has some lien.

Mr. HOOPER. I know, but I wanted to know whether it involved the jurisdictional amount or not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is only referred to the Supreme Court for the purpose of getting the required jurisdiction to wipe out a lien of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. And where there is absolutely no statutory proceeding at the present time by which the lien can be removed.

Mr. HOOPER. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is there to prevent the United States Government going into the State court?

Mr. DYER. These cases go into the State courts and then afterwards it is found the Government has a lien, a secondary lien, which has come in after the prior lien, and in order to have that determined they can take it into the Federal Court for the purpose of having the United States lien fixed and decided upon and then it goes back to the State court and is then determined in the State court.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I understand that to be the procedure proposed, but why do that? The plaintiff in an action to foreclose the first and prior lien begins his suit in the State court.

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. When it may be known by him that the Federal Government has a second and a junior lien, why may not the Federal Government, which is interested in collecting its lien-secured debts, appear as a party in the State court and allow the State court to complete all the proceedings necessary to be transacted in the action? Why transfer the action to the Federal court for the determination of the priority of the two liens?

Mr. DYER. It is in order to have a Federal matter determined by a Federal court.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The answer to the gentleman's question is this: A foreclosure action is an action in rem and the Federal court in itself has not jurisdiction in a local foreclosure case. The United States simply happens to be one of the necessary party defendants by reason of its lien on this particular piece of property, and in order to have the rights of the United States, if any, established, it is shifted to the Federal court to determine that one question.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I understand that, but why may not that be done in the State court?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because the United States does not wish to submit to the jurisdiction of a State court.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Oh, that is it. Personally, I do not think that is sufficient reason.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think that is very important.

Mr. DYER. There is no other way, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, by which this matter can be determined, and it is in the interest of the property owners.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Why does the gentleman say there is no other way?

Mr. DYER. There is no other way.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. The United States simply does not want to submit to the jurisdiction of the State court.

Mr. DYER. It can not submit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if anyone is interested in hearing the bill read, I shall not press the request; but because of the number of bills to be reached, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever, under any law of the United States, a lien shall be created and made a matter of record in pursuance of the provisions of section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (title 26, sec. 115, U. S. C.), or otherwise, upon or against any property, real or personal, against which any prior lien or encumbrance shall exist in favor of any person, firm, or corporation, and the person, firm, or corporation holding such prior lien or encumbrance shall desire to foreclose the same, or to proceed to a judicial sale thereon, the United States may be made a party defendant to any suit or proceeding which may be removed to any United States district court under the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act by the holder of such prior lien or encumbrance for the purpose of foreclosure or sale: Provided, however, That the United States shall not be made a party to any suit or proceeding in any court of any State until after removal of the same to the United States district court as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That in all suits or proceedings which may be removed under this act the process of the court shall be served upon the United States district attorney for the district in which the same shall be pending.

SEC. 3. That no judgment for costs shall be rendered against the United States in any suit or proceeding which may be removed under the provisions of this act, nor shall the United States be or become liable for the payment of the costs of any such suit or proceeding or any part thereof.

SEC. 4. Whenever the prior lien or encumbrance referred to in section 1 of this act shall have been proceeded upon in a State court, and it shall appear that there is filed of record a lien in favor of the United States, entered after the creation of said lien or encumbrance, it shall be lawful for the said plaintiff or plaintiffs before or after the entry of a judgment or decree in such suit or proceeding to have the said suit or proceeding, including said judgment or decree, if any, transferred from the said State court to the United States district court for the district where the property subject to the lien shall be situated; and the procedure for such removal shall be the same as that now required for such transfer in other cases where the United States district court has jurisdiction. After removal of the said suit or proceeding to the United States district court, it shall be lawful for the said court, on petition of the plaintiff or plaintiffs, setting forth the fact of such removal, and the grounds for the same, to enter an order expressly authorizing the addition of the United States as a party defendant therein, and providing for the issuance and service upon the United States of such writ, order, or other process appropriate for making the United States a party and proceeding to a hearing upon the question of the priority of the lien of the plaintiff or plaintiffs over the lien held by the United States, and also providing within what time an appearance and answer shall be filed by the United States after such service. In case a judgment or decree had already been entered in said suit or proceeding in the said State court, the said order so entered by the United States district court, after such removal, shall expressly authorize such judgment or decree to be opened for the sole purpose of permitting the United States to be made a party, and the said order shall also provide for service of process on the United States and for appearance and answer by it as aforesaid. Excepting for the right of the United States to appear and answer therein, and excepting as the United States district court may limit the operation of said judgment as against the rights of the United States, the judgment or decree so opened shall remain in full force and effect as of the date of its original entry in the State court. After the filing of an answer by the United States, the United States district court shall proceed to a finding as to whether or not a lien of the United States exists in fact upon or against the property, real or personal, covered by the foreclosure proceedings in the State court and in what amount and whether or not such lien is subordinate to the lien of the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such suit, and after the ascertainment of these facts and the status of the lien, if any, as to priority shall forthwith remand the case to the State court from whence it was transferred so that the State court may proceed to execution and sale, subject, however, to such order as may be entered by the United States district court limiting the judgment in the suit or proceeding in the State court as against the rights, if any, of the United States.

SEC. 5. Whenever the prior lien or encumbrance mentioned in section 1 of this act arises solely as a result of a judgment or decree of a State court, which is not entered by way of foreclosure in a suit on a preexisting lien, and the only proceeding necessary to enforce the lien of such judgment or decree is the regular execution process provided for by the laws of the said State, such judgment or decree may be removed to the said district court of the United States by proceedings as provided in section 4 of this act. After such removal, a rule to show cause shall, upon petition of the plaintiff or plaintiffs therein, be granted by the said district court, returnable at such time as the court may direct, requiring the United States to show cause why such execution should not issue and a sale be made thereunder according to law. The said rule shall be served upon the United States district attorney of the district aforesaid, and after a hearing upon such rule the said court, being satisfied with the priority of the lien of said judgment or decree over the lien held by the United States, shall enter a final order so finding, making such rule absolute, and ordering the suit or proceeding entered therein forthwith to be remanded to the State court for execution process to issue for the sale of the property covered by the said liens, with like effect as hereinafter provided in section 6 of this act.

SEC. 6. After the entry of a final order by the United States district court in any suit or proceeding transferred thereto from a State court under this act in which the United States has been made a party under the provisions of this act, pursuant to a finding in the court that a lien exists in favor of the United States and that such lien is subordinate to the lien of the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such suit, the effect of any sale which may thereafter be made, by writ of execution or otherwise, in the said State court subject to the terms of the said order of the United States district court, shall be the same, as to the discharge from the property sold of liens and encumbrances, and otherwise howsoever, as shall be provided by the law of the State in which the said property is situated, in connection with such sales in the courts of that State; and the lien of the United States upon such property shall be subject to discharge from said property by such sale, in the same manner as may be provided by such State law as to other junior liens, and shall be relegated to the fund produced by such sale.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL TO MAJ. GEN. HENRY A. GREENE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12404) authorizing erection of a memorial to Maj. Gen. Henry A. Greene at Fort Lewis, Wash.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Henry A. Greene Memorial Association, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Washington, be, and is hereby, authorized to erect and maintain a suitable building, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, in and upon the United States military reservation at Fort Lewis, Wash., the plans of such building to be first approved and to be constructed in such location as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the use of such portion of the ground floor of said building as may be necessary shall be given to the Post Office Department of the United States, free of charge, for the post-office service of the reservation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the title when this bill was called. I suppose the time has passed to raise any objection. I was listening and trying to hear, but I did not know this was the Greene bill. I wanted to ask some questions about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the bill has been read in part.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is absolutely within his rights. I know I am foreclosed if the gentleman insists upon his rights.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 4, after the word "reservation," insert the words "so long as said building remains on said grounds."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to correct the structure of the bill, an amendment which is agreeable to the gentleman in charge of the bill, page 1, line 9, after the word "and," insert the words "the building," it being the building and not the plans that is to be constructed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "and," insert the words "the building."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF OLD POST-OFFICE PROPERTY AT BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14466) to provide for the sale of the old post-office property at Birmingham, Ala.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I would not object to the bill if it read as originally introduced, but I do object to the committee amendment. The bill as introduced provided for public auction to the highest bidder. I believe the committee amendment is not in the public interest. I believe that the property should be sold no other way except to the highest bidder at public auction.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say to the gentleman that the committee amendment was adopted at the request of the department, so that the sale might be in accordance with their practice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not like the practice, and the bill could not be passed without the consent of Congress. It is up to Congress to say what the sale shall be. I do not think this should be sold at a private sale.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It will not be sold at private sale. The department has assured me that if sold it will be sold after due notice, so that all parties interested who want an opportunity to bid may do so; they want a little more latitude than that allowed by the bill as originally introduced. They want permission to sell on sealed bids or at public auction.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am in entire accord with the original bill, and to carry out that purpose I provide for alternative sale at public auction. This authorizes the sale in any manner in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will not the gentleman allow the bill to come up and then offer an amendment in the House? What I want is to get the property sold. I am not particular as to the details of sale.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will support my amendment, I will be glad to withdraw any objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I shall be glad to support the amendment, but I have no right to speak for the committee. I introduced the bill in the form I though was best for the public interest. The department wanted it modified, and the committee agreed to the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Very well, Mr. Speaker, without committing the gentleman from Alabama I shall not object and will offer my amendment later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14466) to provide for the sale of the old post-office property at Birmingham, Ala.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to sell the Government property situated in the city of Birmingham, Jefferson County, Ala., known as the old post-office property and described as being all of lots 12, 13, 14, and east 20 feet of lot 15, in block 87, according to the Elyton Land Co.'s survey of property in Birmingham, Ala., and more particularly as beginning at the northeasterly intersection of Second Avenue and Eighteenth Street, running thence with the line of Second Avenue 170 feet, thence in a northwardly direction 140 feet to an alley, thence with the line of said alley 170 feet to Eighteenth Street, thence with the line of Eighteenth Street 140 feet to beginning. Said property shall be sold to the highest bidder upon the following terms: One-fourth cash; balance payable in four equal payments 1, 2, 3, and 4 years after date of sale with interest on each payment at 6 per cent per annum, with option to the purchaser to pay balance at any time without interest beyond the date of such payment. Not less than 30 days' notice shall be given by publication in some newspaper published at Birmingham, Ala., that sealed bids for the purchase of said property will be received upon a date certain, and after such date all such sealed bids shall be opened and the property sold to the highest bidder thus ascertained. The proceeds of said sale shall be paid into the general fund of the Treasury.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, lines 7 to 17, inclusive, strike out and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To be sold in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, at such time and upon such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, and to convey such property to the purchasers thereof by the usual quitclaim deed."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "bidder," insert the words "or by public auction," and in line 17, after the word "ascertain," insert the words "or of the sale of said property by public auction."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York for the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to amend the description of the property. There was an error as carried in the bill, and I offer the following amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments by Mr. HUDDLESTON: Page 1, line 6, after the word "lots," insert the number "11." Also, in line 7, page 6, strike out the word "east" and insert the word "west" in lieu thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMITTING CITY OF NEW YORK TO ENTER CERTAIN UNITED STATES PROPERTY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171) granting the consent of Congress to the city of New York to enter upon certain United States property for the purpose of constructing a rapid-transit railway.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of New York to enter upon, for the purpose of constructing a rapid transit railway, any and all property of the United States situated within the area described as follows:

Beginning at a point on Wall Street in the city of New York on the southern boundary of the property belonging to the United States and occupied wholly or partly by the Subtreasury Building, said point lying either at the southwest corner of the Subtreasury Building or in a southerly direction therefrom on a line in prolongation of the westerly wall of the Subtreasury Building and extending thence northerly along the westerly wall of the Subtreasury Building, or along a line in prolongation thereof, beginning at the southwest corner of the Subtreasury site, being the intersection of the northerly line of Wall Street with the easterly line of Nassau Street, running thence northwardly with the line of Nassau Street along the westwardly side of the Subtreasury area coping a distance of 40 feet to a point in the line of Nassau Street; thence in an eastwardly direction approximately 5.17 feet to the westwardly wall of the Subtreasury Building; thence in a southwardly direction with the westwardly line of the Subtreasury Building a distance of 40 feet to a point in the north line of Wall Street; thence with the north line of Wall Street along the southerly side of the Subtreasury area coping a distance of 5.17 feet to the point or place of beginning.

The subway structure, within the space hereinbefore described, shall be designed and constructed by the city of New York to carry the highest building that could be constructed on this property of the United States in accordance with the New York building code, and in default thereof the authority hereby granted shall cease and be null and void.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT DES MOINES, IOWA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13957) to repeal certain provisions of law relating to the Federal building at Des Moines, Iowa.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last three paragraphs of section 20 of the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of cites for public buildings; and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, as amended, are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LENDING CERTAIN WAR DEPARTMENT MATERIAL TO GOVERNOR OF NORTH CAROLINA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15427) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lend to the Governor of North Carolina 300 pyramidal tents, complete; 9,000 blankets, olive drab, No. 4; 5,000 pillowcases; 5,000 canvas cots; 5,000 cotton pillows; 5,000 bed sacks; and 9,000 bed sheets to be used at the encampment of the United Confederate Veterans to be held at Charlotte, N. C., in June, 1929.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the entertainment committee of the United Confederate Veterans, whose encampment is to be held at Charlotte, N. C., June 4, 5, 6, and 7, 1929, 300 pyramidal tents, complete with all poles, pegs, and other equipment necessary for their erection; 9,000 blankets, olive drab, No. 4; 5,000 pillowcases; 5,000 canvas cots; 5,000 cotton pillows; 5,000 bed sacks; and 9,000 bed sheets: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered from the nearest quartermaster depot at such time prior to the holding of said encampment as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the business manager of the said entertainment committee, Mr. Edmond R. Wiles: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering such property, shall take from said Edmond R. Wiles, business manager of the Thirty-ninth Annual Confederate Reunion, a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition and the whole without expense to the United States.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. These amendments I have discussed with gentlemen who are interested. The amendment is to strike out the name of the chairman of the committee because if for any reason there should be a change in chairmanship, as the bill stands it would not be operative. It is best not to mention the name.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "Mr. Edmond R. Wiles"; page 2, line 13, strike out the words "Edmond R. Wiles."

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LENDING CERTAIN WAR DEPARTMENT EQUIPMENT TO AMERICAN LEGION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15472) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the eleventh national convention of the American Legion.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15472) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the eleventh national convention of the American Legion

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the Eleventh National Convention Corporation, American Legion, for use at the eleventh national convention of the American Legion, to be held at Louisville, Ky., in the months of September and October, 1929, 10,000 cots, 20,000 blankets, 20,000 bed sheets, 10,000 pillows, 10,000 pillowcases, and 10,000 mattresses or bed sacks: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of the said convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the American Legion, Department of Kentucky, through the director of the eleventh national convention of the American Legion, Reau Kemp: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering said property, shall take from the said Department of Kentucky, the American Legion, a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, strike out the words "Reau Kemp."

The amendment was agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ELEVENTH ANNUAL AMERICAN LEGION CONVENTION

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the legionnaires of America I was very glad to introduce and to press for enactment H. R. 15472, which has to-day passed the House by unanimous vote. The bill has for its purpose the loaning by the Secretary of War of certain War Department equipment for use at the eleventh national convention of the American Legion to be held at Louisville, Ky., on September 30 and October 1, 2, and 3, 1929. The measure fully explains its purposes, and indicates the character and quantity of equipment to be loaned, and it is set forth as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15472) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the eleventh national convention of the American Legion

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to lend at his discretion, to the Eleventh National Convention Corporation, American Legion, for use at the eleventh national convention of the American Legion to be held at Louisville, Ky., in the months of September and October, 1929, 10,000 cots, 20,000 blankets, 20,000 bed sheets, 10,000 pillows, 10,000 pillowcases, and 10,000 mattresses or bed sacks: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of the said convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the American Legion, Department of Kentucky, through the director of the eleventh national convention of the American Legion: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering said property, shall take from the said Department of Kentucky, the American Legion, a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

At the tenth annual convention of the American Legion held at San Antonio last fall, Louisville was chosen as the meeting place for the eleventh annual convention to be held next fall. I have the very great honor to represent the Louisville district, and I know that the people of Louisville, and her sister cities at the falls of the Ohio River, as well as those of the entire State of Kentucky, feel highly complimented because of the selection of Kentucky's metropolis as the meeting place for the next annual convention of the Legion. We shall be very proud and happy to welcome there, as warmly as we may, the hosts of ex-service men and women who, but a few years ago, offered all that freedom might endure. Louisville is a great, progressive city, whose citizens are dominated by the world-famed spirit of Kentucky hospitality; and as the people of Kentucky and the southern Indiana region, which lies adjacent to Louisville, are all filled with the same spirit, the legionnaires and their friends who shall attend the forthcoming convention at Louisville, may expect to find and receive there a genuine, old-fashioned Kentucky welcome.

I may add that the Jefferson Post, at Louisville, is the largest American Legion post in the entire country, and it goes without saying that its members will do everything within their power for the comfort and enjoyment of their old comrades in arms in attendance upon this convention.

Louisville is near the center of our American population, and stands in the midst of a region rich in historic and scenic interest. The city is fully equipped in every way to care for all who may care to attend this convention, however large the number may be. Hence, a tremendous gathering is expected and assured. In fact, we, who live in Louisville and in the Louisville region, are pleased to believe that this will prove to be the largest and most successful annual convention of the American Legion ever held.

Permit me, therefore, at this time and in this way, Mr. Speaker, not only to extend to you and the other Members of Congress the heartiest possible invitation to attend this convention and "break bread" with us in the "Old Kentucky Home", but, also, to repeat to the legionnaires and their friends throughout our great Republic, the invitation which has already been formally extended to them in behalf of the city of Louisville, and the State of Kentucky. Come, and let us join together in the patriotic exercises of this occasion; let us there receive renewed inspiration from the noble contacts which shall be ours; and let us there, under the flag of our country, consecrate and dedicate ourselves anew to the great ideals for which that flag has always stood, and for which it must ever stand.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4488) declaring the purpose of Congress in passing the act of June 2, 1924 (43 Stat. 253), to confer full citizenship upon the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, and further declaring that it was not the purpose of Congress in passing the act of June 4, 1924 (43 Stat. 376), to repeal, abridge, or modify the provisions of the former act as to the citizenship of said Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I rise to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill for some information as to the necessity of such legislation in view of the act of 1924. The report does not include any report from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Did the committee have such a report before it?

Mr. LEAVITT. The committee did have such a report, and why it was not included in the committee report I do not know. Its purpose is set forth in the report from the Secretary of the Interior as follows:

The purpose of the bill is to remove any doubt that may exist as to the conferring of full citizenship on these Indians by the provisions of the act of June 2, 1924. Recommendation is made that it receive your favorable consideration.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. LEAVITT. From the report of the Secretary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We have not that report.

Mr. LEAVITT. I did not make the committee report and I can not say why the member of the committee making the report did not include the report of the Secretary, which the committee has.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman believe that it is good legislation to pass a bill declaring the purpose of a previous act? If the act of June 4, 1924, puts in doubt the act of June 2, 1924, the proper legislative procedure would be to amend the act of June 4, 1924, by declaring that nothing therein should be construed to repeal the provisions of the act of June 2, 1924. To come in and declare the purpose of a former act seems to me very poor legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the effect, that act of 1924 was supposed to grant citizenship complete to every Indian. Personally I think it was unfortunate legislation. We were not ready for it. That became the law, and the purpose was to take care of every Indian. I know of no reason why these Eastern Cherokees should be excluded. If there is a doubt as to the purpose, then, I see no objection to the legislation.

Mr. HOOPER. Is it good practice to have a legislative declaration of a legislative intention in a statute?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the practice is bad.

Mr. HOOPER. I think it is always better to amend the statute that you are construing.

Mr. LEAVITT. That is very likely true, and I agree as a general matter. But the particular matter before us is that the bill was passed by the Senate in this form, and we had a favorable report from the Secretary of the Interior and this is simply to clear it up.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, the Senate did that. The proper method would have been to take the act of June 4, 1924, and amend it so as specifically to provide that nothing contained therein shall be construed as amending the act of June 2.

Mr. HASTINGS. Or by direct legislation making these Indians citizens.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly. I shall not object, but I think it is poor legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it was not the purpose of Congress when passing the act of June 4, 1924 (43 Stat. 376), to repeal, amend, modify, or abridge the provisions of the act of June 2, 1924 (43 Stat. 253), entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue certificates of citizenship to Indians," which conferred full citizenship upon the Indians composing the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, located in the State of North Carolina, and that the citizenship of said Indians be, and is hereby, confirmed.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EQUALIZING PAY OF CERTAIN CLASSES OF OFFICERS, REGULAR ARMY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3569) to equalize the pay of certain classes of officers of the Regular Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] desired to be here when this bill came up, so I shall object or ask that it be passed over without prejudice, either one.

Mr. WURZBACH. I would rather have the regular order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I object.

SITE FOR GOVERNMENT BUILDING, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15468) to repeal the provisions of law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a site and building for the United States subtreasury and other governmental offices at New Orleans, La.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TO DEVELOP POWER AND LEASE INDIAN STRUCTURES, IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15213) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to develop power and to lease, for power purposes, structures of Indian irrigation projects, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill deals with matters of a great deal of importance. I have a great deal of confidence in the gentleman from Montana and his associates and am pretty familiar with what they have in mind to do, but I am not sure the bill as it stands might be a little too broad and still has left some features in question. I have certain amendments to it that I have discussed with the gentleman from Montana, who understands them, and he is not opposed to them.

Mr. LEAVITT. They are clarifying amendments that do not, in my judgment, weaken the bill in question and accomplishes the purpose for which it is intended.

Mr. CRAMTON. I was in hopes my amendments would strengthen them. Page 1, line 4, after the word "any," insert the word "irrigation," so it has to do only with an irrigation project. Line 6, strike out the word "under" and insert the words "as an incident of," so that this will have effect only where power is developed as an incident to an irrigation project.

Page 2, line 3, after the word "may," insert the following:

Such credit not to be used to lessen annual payments for construction or operation or maintenance charges by other than restricted Indians: Provided further, That after such construction charges are paid such revenues shall be chargeable on the annual maintenance and operation costs of said irrigation projects.

And then on line 5 strike out the word "and" and insert the word "at."

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not feel entire certainty as to the adequacy of the legislation; that is the problem of saying what shall become of the power revenues after the construction charges are paid off. I think that by accepting the amendment and providing that the power treated here is to be devoted only as an incident to the project, it probably takes care of the situation. So I have provided what the bill has not provided for, still leaving open what shall be done after the construction charges are paid. That may be a good many years hence. My proposal is that after the construction charges are paid it will go to reduce the maintenance cost. With the consent of the gentleman from Montana to those amendments I would not feel opposed to the bill.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, the purposes of the bill were presented to the Department of the Interior, and the measure was drawn as the result of my request that the interests of the Government and of the Indians be fully protected. I see nothing in these amendments that would change that situation in any way, and they would probably resolve some uncertainty as to the outcome. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a development of power is necessary for the irrigation of lands under any project undertaken or constructed on Indian reservations, or an opportunity is afforded for the development of power under any such project, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease for a period not to exceed 10 years, giving preference to municipal purposes, any surplus power or power privilege, and the money derived from such leases shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a credit of the construction cost of the power development and of the irrigation project on which such power development is made: Provided, That no lease shall be made of such surplus power or power privileges as will impair the efficiency of the irrigation project: Provided further, That the said Secretary may lease any irrigation structure of such projects for said period for development of hydroelectric power by lessees under such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, and said proceeds of such leases shall be deposited as heretofore provided.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 1, line 4, after the word "any," insert the word "irrigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "under" and insert in lieu thereof "as an incident thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 2, line 3, after the word "made," insert the following: "such credit not to be used to lessen annual payments for construction and operation and maintenance charges by other than restricted Indians: Provided, That after such construction charges are paid such net revenues shall be applied only to the operation and maintenance of the irrigation project."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR SUITS BY CHEROKEE, SEMINOLE, CREEK, CHOCTAW, AND CHICKASAW INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 343) authorizing an extension of time within which suits may be instituted on behalf of the Cherokee Indians, Seminole Indians, the Creek Indians, and Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to June 30, 1931, and for other purposes.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time within which suits may be instituted under the act of Congress approved March 19, 1924, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Cherokee Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes"; the act of Congress approved May 20, 1924, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes"; the act of Congress approved May 24, 1924, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Creek Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes"; and the act of Congress approved June 7, 1924, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes," shall be extended to June 30, 1931, to permit each Indian nation or tribe mentioned in said acts of Congress to institute suits as provided in said acts and the joint resolution approved May 19, 1926 (Public Resolution No. 27, 69th Cong.)

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HASTINGS: Page 2, line 14, strike out the figures "1931" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1930."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15324) authorizing the attendance of the Marine Band at the Confederate veterans' reunion to be held at Charlotte, N. C.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from North Carolina state what is the expected attendance?

Mr. BULWINKLE. We expect an attendance of somewhere around 7,000 or 8,000 veterans. They, of course, will bring members of their families. It is estimated that between 50,000 and 75,000 or more people will be present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to permit the United States Marine Band to attend and give concerts at the Thirty-ninth Annual Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Charlotte, N. C., June 4 to 7, inclusive, 1929.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of the band in attending such reunion there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 2, after the word "necessary," on line 2, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the payment of such expenses shall be in addition to the pay and allowances to which members of the United States Marine Band would be entitled while serving at their permanent station."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CONTRACTORS AND SUBCONTRACTORS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13857) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey if this is not a private bill for the relief of one particular contractor, although the title would make it appear as a bill amending existing law?

Mr. FORT. I assume the gentleman is, perhaps, correct as to its effect, although I do not know that to be a fact. It is an amendment to existing general legislation, and therefore it seems properly on this calendar.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, there was only one United States courthouse in the District of Columbia within the period mentioned.

Mr. FORT. There might be a subcontractor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The subcontractor has been taken care of and the only question now is to take care of this contractor whose trouble, it seems, comes from having filed his bid on the morning of April 7 instead of April 6, 1917.

Mr. FORT. That is correct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am very chary about these war claims 10 years after the war. The Secretary of the Treasury takes pains to say that he makes no recommendation, and he refrains from recommending this bill one way or the other. Will the gentleman tell us whether he has inquired about other claims and whether, if we allow this bill to go through, there may be a flood of other bills seeking adjustments because of war conditions?

Mr. FORT. I have not inquired by advertisement in the press or otherwise, but I have never heard of any other bill or any other claim to which this will open the door, directly or indirectly, nor do I know of anyone who knows of any other claims.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would not expect the gentleman to advertise in the papers. I had never heard of any claim until this one came in, and perhaps this is the result of an advertisement in the papers. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have this bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SETTLEMENT OF DAMAGES TO PERSONS AND PROPERTY BY ARMY AIRCRAFT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7939) to authorize settlement of damages to persons and property by Army aircraft.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That within the limits of appropriations made from time to time, the settlement of claims, not exceeding $250 each, is authorized for damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer at the nearest aviation post and approved by the Chief of Air Corps and the Secretary of War.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13345), to amend section 4826 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? This bill requires three objections.

Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. CRAMTON, and Mr. HOOPER objected.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE OF THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16034) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of the State of Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOINT-STOCK LAND BANKS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4039) to exempt joint-stock land banks from the provisions of section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see the necessity for this bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will explain to the gentleman that if the Federal farm loan act had been in operation when this antitrust act was passed, in all probability an exception of joint-stock land banks would have been made. The situation existing now is that a reference was made to the Attorney General of the United States, and in the opinion he handed down—I think quite erroneously—he included the joint-stock land banks under the provisions of the Clayton Act. The situation now is impractical because of the fact that some of the joint-stock land banks are finding it difficult to get on their boards of directors men who understand their operations, and in some instances bankers who should be on those boards are deprived of the right of serving on the boards because of this opinion of the Attorney General. It was never intended under the law to cover directors of banks like the joint-stock land banks. They are not in competition with commercial or savings banks or those other institutions which come under that law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Except that if you put the directors of these other banks on the board of directors of the joint-stock land banks they will take the good business for their own banks and give the bad business to the joint-stock land banks.

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I do not think so. I might say also that this amendment has been given very careful consideration. It has been recommended by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I feel I want an opportunity to study this bill more carefully. I should be obliged to object if it should come up to-day.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK BUILDING, LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (S. J. Res. 142) authorizing the erection of a Federal reserve bank building in the city of Los Angeles, Calif.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope not to be obliged to do so. I have not had opportunity to make the investigations I would like, but it is my recollection there was an amount of criticism that almost amounted to scandal with reference to the construction of some of these buildings heretofore where unlimited power was given with no supervision, and buildings out of all reason were put up. It is true we do not make the appropriation, but somebody has to pay for them. By reason of this I am a little loath to give this same kind of unsupervised discretion to the Federal reserve bank in further instances.

I am frank to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is my recollection that the Federal reserve bank has quite misunderstood the purposes of Congress and has overrated its power of discretion.

I think it would greatly help this bill if there was to be added at the end of line 3, page 2, the end of the bill, "and the Secretary of the Treasury," so that their action would be subject to further approval by the Secretary of the Treasury as to the construction of the building.

Mr. McFADDEN. I may say to the gentleman that this bill has had the very careful consideration of the Committee on Banking and Currency. They have heard the officers of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, of which the Los Angeles branch is a part. It has had the consideration of the Federal Reserve Board, a member of which, ex officio, is the Secretary of the Treasury. It has the approval of all these people.

I might say, in addition, while there was some criticism some time ago about the expenditures of the Federal reserve banks for buildings, the very provision which makes this legislation necessary was made so that these banks can not proceed without explaining to Congress just why they are expending the money and what it is for.

In regard to the Los Angeles situation, I am personally familiar with the situation there. I have been on the ground. Their present quarters are very inadequate. Their vault facilities are bad. Los Angeles is a large city, growing rapidly, and there is much need for the protection which will be afforded by proper vaults in a proper building such as this bill provides for.

It is the conclusion of our committee—and we have held this matter up for over a year—that they are not extravagant in this request. They own their own site. This is a reasonable appropriation for a suitable building in which to house this institution, in this growing city, which is the most important branch of the Federal reserve bank on the Pacific coast.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit me a word in my time, if this is such an overwhelmingly desirable case, so clear and so definite, why has his committee held it up for a year before they concluded to let it out?

Mr. McFADDEN. We wanted to make sure that the expenditures were proper and all right, and also to hear the governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco. He had previously appeared before the Federal Reserve Board and our committee wanted to make sure that the amount of money they were asking was adequate and not extravagant.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman makes it appear that he has had as much doubt as I have had, and he has had much more knowledge of the situation than I have, and I presume his doubts were better founded than mine. Did it take a year to get that governor of the Federal reserve bank to come here?

Mr. McFADDEN. No. I will say to the gentleman that this matter came up in the closing days of the last session of Congress and most of this year's time that you speak of has elapsed because of the fact that Congress was not in session. This is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. What evidence has the gentleman or his committee, outside of the men who are interested in having this building put up and who are to have palatial offices in it——

Mr. McFADDEN. I would not say they are to be palatial offices. We have the reports of those competent to advise us in regard to the requirements of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. CRAMTON. Could the gentleman state as to whom those reports are from?

Mr. McFADDEN. They are from the Federal reserve officers at Washington, San Francisco, and the local branch officers of the bank, and I think the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce also.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has the Architect of the Treasury been consulted as to whether this amount of money is an amount that seems to be necessary?

Mr. McFADDEN. This is not a matter that comes under the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it ought to come under his jurisdiction.

Mr. McFADDEN. It does come under the supervising architect of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. CRAIL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In just a moment.

Mr. McFADDEN. These plans have all been submitted to the Federal Reserve Board and have been approved by them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the Federal Reserve Board have its own supervising architect?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Why should it have its own architect any more than the Post Office Department?

Mr. McFADDEN. Because it has been engaged in very large building operations and it has been necessary for the system to keep itself advised.

Mr. CRAMTON. But the Post Office Department has building operations far beyond what the Federal Reserve Board has had, but theirs is done under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. McFADDEN. I may call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the 12 Federal reserve banks are not Government institutions.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, not strictly, but in effect, yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The only jurisdiction the Government authorities have over this bill is because of the limitation in the present law confining any expenditures to $250,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Why is any legislation necessary if they are private institutions? Why do we not let them go along and spend money as they want to? If they are Government institutions, and we are to pass on the question of whether $800,000 is proper, I would like the word of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury who passes on other Government expenditures of this character.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think if the gentleman from Michigan will compare the buildings put up by the Federal Reserve Board with the buildings put up by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury he will see the wisdom of the Federal Reserve Board hiring competent architects.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then let us turn it all over to them.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that there is no extravagance being displayed in connection with this building.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] add that the money spent on these buildings is carried as assets of the bank?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; the gentleman is quite correct in that respect. In case of liquidation of these Federal reserve banks these bank buildings would be part of the assets of the bank.

Mr. CRAIL. A building of this kind built by the Architect of the Treasury Department would cost double the money that this building will cost under local architects. In southern California we do not have wind and electrical storms; we do not have snows and ice. We do not have the severe cold or the intense heat. We do not have to take care of various climatic conditions that architects figure on in other sections of the country. The Architect of the Treasury would put up a building out there that would cost double what local architects would provide for.

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me ask one question, Is the gentleman satisfied that a building of this type is really needed?

Mr. CRAIL. It is very much needed. The present quarters are rented at Third and Spring Streets. They are inadequate; they can not keep a large amount of money or securities there because it is not safe to do so, and they really need double the space they now have.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that I will not object, for I have more confidence in his recommendation on a question of this kind than I have of the recommendation of the Federal Reserve Bank Board. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIL. I sincerely appreciate my colleague's confidence in me. I thank him kindly and again I assure him that this is a worthy measure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice at the end of line 5, beginning with line 6, "for its Los Angeles branch on the site now owned." Owned by whom?

Mr. McFADDEN. By the Los Angeles branch of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Most all property is owned, but this does not say by whom. I shall move to amend by inserting "by said bank."

Mr. McFADDEN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think I heard the chairman of the committee say a moment ago that the Federal reserve institution was not a governmental institution. Am I correct?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. If that be the case, why come to Congress for permission to erect a building?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say that a Member of the body at the other end of the Capitol caused to be introduced and passed an amendment some time ago limiting the expenditures of the Federal reserve banks for the erection of buildings to $250,000, and because of that provision whenever an expenditure in excess of that is now sought to be made they have to come to Congress to secure consent.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. If it is a private institution, what business has Congress limiting their expenditures?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say quite frankly that I think it was a mistake, but in the frame of mind that Congress was at that time they felt justified in doing it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. They are under the regulation and jurisdiction of Congress. Congress can provide what they shall do with their surplus funds.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I am only seeking information. I regard the Federal bank as the master American criminal.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield? I want to enlighten him as to the situation when that amendment was adopted. The surplus earnings of the Federal reserve bank belong to the Government.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I thought so.

Mr. STEVENSON. The more they spend in building Government buildings the less the Government receives. They had a plan of building branch banks until the Federal reserve bank in the gentleman's own district had all of its capital stock invested in branch bank buildings. The Congress thought it was poor business to allow the institution which some day they hope to pay the Government something to spend their capital and surplus in building branch bank buildings, and so they put a limit of cost on it and said, "If you want to expend more than $250,000 on a building for a branch, exclusive of the vaults and site, you must come to Congress and get permission." I do not know about this bill. I was not in committee when it was reported out. I do not know whether they are asking for too much or too little. Los Angeles is a big place and they deal with big figures.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco be, and it is hereby, authorized to contract for and erect a building in the city of Los Angeles for its Los Angeles branch on the site now owned, provided the total amount expended in the erection of said building, exclusive of the cost of vaults, permanent equipment, furnishings, and fixtures shall not exceed the sum of $800,000: Provided, however, That the character and type of building to be erected, the amount actually to be expended in the construction of said building, and the amount actually to be expended for the vaults, permanent equipment, furnishings, and fixtures for said building shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting on page 1, line 6, after the word "owned," the words "by said bank."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "owned," insert "by said bank."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INDIANA HARBOR SHIP CANAL

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill H. R. 16169, to authorize the Secretary of War to accept title to a certain tract of land adjacent to the Indiana Harbor Ship Canal at East Chicago, Ind. This bill proposes to deed to the War Department 2.032 acres of land for the improvement of what is known as the Indiana Harbor Ship Canal. They are making improvements there at the present time, and in order to make the improvements what they should be, to accommodate the rapidly increasing large vessels, it is necessary that this additional land be had. There is a general law for the acceptance of donations of land with respect to certain projects. There is some question, however, whether or not they have a right to accept this under the existing statute. General Jadwin, the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, has asked that a special bill be passed, in order that there shall be no question about the legality of its acceptance. The War Department is in favor of this and it has been submitted to them. The engineers have reported in favor of this.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana state that a real emergency exists as to this legislation?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; there is a real emergency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to consider the bill out of order. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this involve any cost to the Government of the United States?

Mr. WOOD. There is no cost to the Government of the United States so far as the land is concerned. That is donated by the real-estate corporation.

Mr. SCHAFER. And the passage of this bill will not in any way create a charge on the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. WOOD. Not so far as the land is concerned. Of course, the improvement that is being made of necessity will be a charge and will incur expense on the Treasury.

Mr. SCHAFER. Has the Director of the Budget indicated that the passage of this bill is not in conflict with the financial program of the President?

Mr. WOOD. No; I have not consulted him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, on behalf of the United States, is authorized and directed to accept from the East Chicago Co. title, free and clear of all encumbrances and without cost to the United States, to a tract of land adjacent to the Indiana Harbor Ship Canal at East Chicago, Ind., and described as follows:

Part of the southeast quarter section 20, township 37 north, range 9 west of the second principal meridian, in the city of East Chicago, Lake County, Ind., described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point of intersection of a line parallel to and 100 feet west of the east line with a line parallel to and 100 feet south of the north line of said southeast quarter section 20; thence west on last-described line 450 feet; thence southeasterly on a straight line 644 feet to a point in a line parallel to and 100 feet west of the east line of the southeast quarter section 20 aforesaid; and thence north on last-described line 450 feet to the point of beginning, containing 2.3237 acres.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COAST GUARD STATION, QUILLAYUTE RIVER, WASH.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14151) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near the mouth of the Quillayute River in the State of Washington.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to learn from the gentleman who reported the bill what provision is made for the expense of this additional Coast Guard station? The bill does not provide any. In fact, that is proposed to be stricken out of the bill by a committee amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like information as to why some of the language of the bill is stricken out.

Mr. HOCH. I did not report the bill, but, as I recall the bill, it simply authorizes the construction of a Coast Guard station.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The language of the bill is "to establish a Coast Guard station."

Mr. HOCH. I am not sure whether that is the usual language used in authorizing a station or not, but I am under the impression that it is, because we were informed, as I recall the hearings, that there are 15 stations that have now been authorized, and the Coast Guard considers this one so important that if appropriations are given it will put this at the head of the list. I take it they use the same language they have always used with reference to the establishment of these stations.

Mr. CRAMTON. But this language which was in the bill as introduced the committee proposes to strike out by amendment:

and appropriations for the establishment and construction thereof are hereby authorized out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The department report makes no reference to that, nor does the committee report. Possibly there is a general law that covers it, but, if so, it would be nice to have the committee tell us so.

Mr. HOCH. I recall that another bill was introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]—this is Mr. HADLEY's bill—and his bill carried a limitation of cost of $75,000, as I recall. The Secretary stated that that much money would not be needed. One reason why Mr. HADLEY, who was called out just a few moments ago—and perhaps I should not speak for him—put in this language is because he did not want to put in any limitation of cost. He put in the general language. The opinion of the committee was that the language is not necessary; that the bill authorized the establishment of this station, and that gives authority; and that then it is up to the Appropriations Committee to determine how much should be appropriated.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Except that if this is not correct and you establish the station, you will simply come back here with more legislation.

Mr. HOCH. It might make it clearer to say "establish and construct"; and if the gentleman desires to offer an amendment to that effect, I think it would do no harm.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Perhaps they will have just a ship station.

Mr. HOCH. Oh, there is a small building for the men, and a small boathouse, and perhaps some other buildings and the equipment. I recall testimony as to the approximate cost of these stations to be about $40,000 to $45,000. It is similar to all of these many stations along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think the bill so provides.

Mr. HOCH. If there is no objection, in order to make it certain, insert the words "and construct" after the word "establish," and there can not be any doubt about that covering it. However, I do not think the amendment necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on the Pacific coast at or in the vicinity of the mouth of the Quillayute River, in either Clallam or Jefferson County, State of Washington, in such locality as the captain commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend, and appropriations for the establishment and construction thereof are hereby authorized out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "the," strike out "captain."

Line 8, after the word "recommend," strike out all of lines 8, 9, 10, and 11.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COAST GUARD CUTTER "BEAR"

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14452) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to donate to the city of Oakland, Calif., the U. S. Coast Guard cutter Bear.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to donate, without expense to the United States, to the city of Oakland, Calif., the historic Coast Guard cutter Bear, now no longer fitted for service after 54 years and replaced by another boat.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out all of lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof "for museum and exhibition purposes without charge for admission."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9961) entitled "An act to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12538) entitled "An act for the benefit of Morris Fox Cherry," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3162) entitled "An act to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg.," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCNARY, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. KENDRICK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. NYE and Mr. PITTMAN members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of the Interior.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16129) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the construction thereon and equipment of buildings and appurtenances for the Coast Guard Academy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill providing for an appropriation of $1,750,000?

Mr. HOCH. This bill authorizes that amount for the construction of the necessary buildings. The site, however, is to be donated, a very valuable site, by the city of New London.

Mr. SCHAFER. What is the matter with the present buildings?

Mr. HOCH. The present academy is housed in two very inadequate, unsafe, wood, temporary, poorly constructed barracks which were put there during the World War for temporary purposes. I am sure the gentleman, if he knew the situation, would be glad to support this bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. There has been an increase in personnel of the Coast Guard since it enforces the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act, and that is no doubt somewhat responsible for the necessity of this bill.

Mr. HOCH. I am sure the gentleman would want proper quarters even for men to help enforce the Volstead law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. These are all nice boys and the academy is going to be located right next to a ladies' seminary.

Mr. SCHAFER. Perhaps they will be able to be trained not to fire on and injure people on yachts, thinking they may be rum runners, if this bill is passed.

Mr. HOCH. There is no finer class of men, in my judgment, in the Government service than the commissioned officers of the Coast Guard Service.

Mr. SCHAFER. Generally speaking, I agree with the gentleman. However, let me say there has been much complaint in the past about some of the Coast Guard boats firing at private launches, thinking they were rum runners when they were not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, let me ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he will consent to strike out the last clause of the bill, "all at a total cost not to exceed $1,750,000." Of course, the action of the committee reporting it with that amount makes it clear it is not contemplated that this present program shall exceed that amount. If the time is going to come when some additional building will be required—five years, perhaps—I do not think it ought to be necessary to run to the gentleman's committee to get authority for that particular building. If the gentleman will drop off that clause, then it will be so that when the Government sees in the future it needs some additional building a special act of authorization will not be necessary.

Mr. HOCH. Speaking for myself personally, I would have no objection to that, since this language simply fixes a limit of cost.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Is it not customary to provide an appropriation without fixing a limit of cost?

Mr. CRAMTON. For a permanent institution, which we know must not only be continued from year to year but must be added to from time to time, a general authorization would seem sufficient. Thereafter any request for a new building would not have to run the gantlet of Congress and of the Budget.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The gentleman will probably recall different appropriations for War Department activities, including those for West Point, where there was always a specific limit fixed by Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. If there is any criticism, I would not press it, but what the gentleman speaks of is the thing I have in mind. If they must come to Congress every time they want an ice house for the War Department institutions, I think that is not desirable. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire a suitable site at New London, Conn., and to construct and equip thereon such buildings and appurtenances as he may deem necessary for the purpose of the United States Coast Guard Academy, all at a total cost not to exceed $1,750,000.

With a committee amendment as follows:

In line 4, after the word "acquire," insert "in fee simple without cost to the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. After the figures "$1,750,000" insert this language: "which amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of Texas: At the end of line 9, after the figures "$1,750,000," insert: "which amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TRESTLE IN HENDERSON INLET NEAR CHAPMAN BAY, WASH.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask that we consider one more bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15382) to legalize a trestle, log dump, and booming ground in Henderson Inlet near Chapman Bay, about 7 miles northeast of Olympia, Wash.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, we may have to have a roll call on this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is not important.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the trestle, log dump, and boom built by the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. in Henderson Inlet, State of Washington, on the westerly side near the mouth of Chapman Bay and the mouth of Woodards Bay, which is about 7 miles northeast of the city of Olympia, in the State of Washington, be, and the same is hereby, legalized to the same extent and with like effect as to all existing or future laws and regulations of the United States as if the permit required by the existing laws of the United States in such cases made and provided had been regularly obtained prior to the erection of said trestle, log dump, and booming ground: Provided, That any changes in said trestle, log dump, and booming ground which the Secretary of War may deem necessary and order in the interest of navigation shall be promptly made by the owner thereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "is" and insert in lieu thereof the word "are."

On page 2, line 4, strike out the words "booming ground" and insert the word "boom." In line 6, strike out the words "booming ground" and insert the word "boom."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to legalize a trestle, log dump, and boom in Henderson Inlet near Chapman Bay, about 7 miles northeast of Olympia, Wash."

THE FEDERAL INCOME TAX

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting statements by Mr. Mills and Mr. Bond of the Treasury Department on the administration of the Federal income tax.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing statements made by the Undersecretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, and by Mr. Bond on the subject of the administration of the Federal income tax. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of the Hon. Ogden L. Mills, the Undersecretary of the Treasury, on the subject of the administration of the Federal income tax; and also an interview with Hon. Henry H. Bond, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on the subject of Federal income-tax refunds:

THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE FEDERAL INCOME TAX—SPEECH DELIVERED BY UNDERSECRETARY OF THE TREASURY MILLS BEFORE THE BAR ASSOCIATION OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK ON SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 19, 1929, AT THE HOTEL ASTOR, NEW YORK CITY

In recent weeks we have heard much discussion of the refunds of Federal income taxes, coupled with a suggestion, in some quarters, that they constitute a basis for criticism and suspicion of the administrative practices of the Treasury Department. The sound and wise administration of our tax laws, and faith in the integrity and wisdom of those who administer them, are of such vast importance to our people that I feel that a discussion of what the Treasury is seeking to accomplish in the way of reform will be of interest to a group of professional men such as this.

Let me say, however, that it is neither my purpose nor desire to promote or encourage the more active interest of lawyers as a class in income-tax matters. Quite the contrary. From my standpoint, lawyers who like litigation—those representing the Government as well as those representing taxpayers—have had altogether too much to do with the income tax, from the very outset. What was fundamentally an administrative problem developed almost at once into an unlimited and interminable series of legal battles. The substitution of administration for litigation is the essence of our present income-tax problem.

Leaving aside the obvious political aspects and motives, the most interesting feature of the recent criticism of the Treasury in connection with refunds is the insistence of our critics that, even though the department, after careful consideration, has decided that the taxpayer has paid more to the Government than he should, under the law, nevertheless he must be compelled to go to court to obtain what is rightfully his. What they would do, in short, is to substitute our Federal judges for the executive officers of Government charged with the duty of collecting the revenue, and have the income tax law administered by the judicial rather than the executive branch of Government. Such a proposal violates every sound rule of taxation and of good government. It is the very bog from which the Treasury seeks to extricate the income tax.

How did the recent discussion arise? The Commissioner of Internal Revenue decided that the United States Steel Corporation was entitled to a refund of $15,000,000, plus interest. To be sure, this is a large sum—which seems to me to be utterly beside the point, even leaving out of consideration the fact that this particular taxpayer paid $173,000,000 in taxes for the year in question, and that if we were dealing in thousands rather than millions and with some small corporation rather than the Steel Corporation the question in all human probability would never have been raised. To be sure, the $975,000,000 of back-tax refunds paid during the course of the last 12 years is an immense sum, but the public is not told that during the same period the Government assessed more than $4,000,000,000 in back taxes and that refunds constitute but 2½ per cent of the total amount of $39,000,000,000 collected—a very good showing, indeed, if you take into consideration the enormous difficulties of the war and early postwar period. Can it fairly be contended that it is quite proper for the Government, after audit and review, to assess $4,000,000,000 of additional taxes on the income-tax payers of the country but when, by the employment of the same methods the very same Government officials determine that the taxpayers have paid more than they should, the latter should not be repair except by virtue of a court decision? Of course not. And if I am right, the obvious, sound, and proper course to pursue is for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to assume the responsibility of making a decision, and when the decision is in favor of the taxpayer, to refund the amount he determines to have been illegally collected. This doesn't mean that some cases, where really doubtful points of law are involved, will not have to be litigated; but they should be the exception and the rule.

What gives rise to refunds, and why should taxpayers ever overpay their tax? Under our income-tax system, the taxpayer prepares his return and pays his tax as he estimates it to be. The Bureau of Internal Revenue audits his return and examines the various elements involved. It then decides whether the return is correct or whether the taxpayer has overestimated or underestimated his tax. If underestimated, a deficiency is assessed; if overestimated, he is entitled to a refund. The bureau's determination of a deficiency, of course, is not and should not be final; so that, if he pays, he is then entitled to seek a judicial determination and to claim a refund. Perhaps the best way to answer the second question, as to why any man should ever be guilty of the folly of paying more in taxes than he actually owes, is to give some actual illustrations.

Case No. 1: Taxpayer A made his return claiming a deduction of $600,000, which was his pro rata share of the New York transfer tax as a legatee of a deceased relative. Such a deduction was held improper by the Supmere Court in the case of Keith v. Johnson. Thereafter the revenue act of 1928 was passed, and under the provisions of section 703 such a tax, if claimed as a deduction by the legatee and not by the estate, was made an allowable deduction to the legatee. Therefore a refund of $300,000 was made.

Case No. 2: Taxpayer B, on behalf of himself and the other stockholders, sold all the capital stock of a certain company, of which he personally owned two-thirds, for a net price of $20,000,000. About $15,000,000 was distributed to the stockholders, including the taxpayer. The remaining $5,000,000 was set aside to meet undetermined tax liabilities of the corporation. Later, when these were determined, the balance of this $5,000,000 was distributed to the stockholders. The taxpayer reported his share of this balance in the year when he received it. The bureau ruled that it was taxable in the year of the original sale of the stock. Therefore a deficiency was assessed for the year of sale, 1925, and an overassessment certified for the year 1926, which was credited against the additional assessment for 1925.

Case No. 3: Taxpayer C, a taxi corporation, originally claimed depreciation at the rate of 1 cent a mile. Subsequently the actual records of the life and total mileage of taxicabs showed that the correct rate of depreciation was 2 cents a mile. These records were submitted and verified, and the result was refunds of $40,000 for 1924 and $50,000 for 1925.

Case No. 4: Taxpayer D, a steamship corporation, failed to claim amortization on its original returns for 1918 and 1919. Later, within the time as extended by Congress itself, claims were duly filed and after careful audit were allowed, giving deductions of $700,000 for 1918 and $300,000 for 1919. The result was an overassessment of $50,000 for 1918, which was credited against taxes for other years, and a small balance refunded, and $20,000 refunded for 1919.

It is apparent from these illustrations, which were selected at random, that neither the taxpayer nor the Government was to blame for the situation creating the necessity for a refund. In the first case, the refund resulted from a change in the law; in the second, from a misinterpretation of the law by the taxpayer; in the third, from a more accurate ascertainment of the facts, which turned out to be more favorable to the taxpayer; in the fourth, to the failure of the taxpayer upon his return to take advantage of a provision of law enacted by Congress for his relief and later extended to him.

What I would emphasize is that under a tax law which deals with such a great variety of circumstances, reaches so many people, and produces so much revenue, even under the most favorable conditions, without any fault on the part of the taxpayer or the administrators, cases must arise where the taxpayer finds that he has either overpaid or underpaid the Government. If the first, he is entitled to be repaid; if the second, the Government is entitled to an additional tax. In neither case is there any occasion for criticism or for belief on the part of the public that it is confronted with anything abnormal, unexpected, or alarming. Quite to the contrary. If you were to examine our revenue laws, you would realize at once the many constantly recurring situations which can be met only by refunds, and the many provisions which can be administered, and must have been intended by Congress to be administered, solely by refunds. Furthermore, any system of revenue collection under which payments are compelled prior to final determinations must necessarily be based upon the principle of refunding overpayments. This is true, for instance, of the English system, which is frequently and properly pointed to as a model of sound income-tax administration, under which their credits, drawbacks, and refunds amount to about 15 per cent of the collections.

Refunds are but a part of a much larger problem. The present discussion will have served a very useful purpose if it presents to the country in a reasonably clear light the very definite and simple issue: Should the income tax be treated as all other taxes, as an administrative problem with responsibility definitely lodged in the proper executive officers, or is it to be singled out and considered as not susceptible of anything but judicial interpretation and decision? In so far as I know, no other country has ever considered the assessment and collection of income taxes through the judiciary as necessary or advisable, nor do I know of any case of any one of our States taking such a position, though many of them have enacted and enforced some extremely complicated tax laws, particularly in the field of corporate taxation. Though in the State and city of New York we raise annually immense sums through taxes, I have never heard it suggested that we could not trust the decision and judgment of our tax officials, but must compel them to refer all doubtful questions, whether of law or fact, to the courts. In the case of the Federal income tax, however, it is undeniable that until recently there has been a very definite tendency to lean heavily on the courts. Administrative officers have been unwilling to assume the responsibility of making final decisions.

The Government has been inclined to settle all doubtful points in its own favor and force the taxpayer to appeal to the court for relief; while, on the other hand, the taxpayer, finding that the Government was prepared to litigate all doubtful questions, found it very much to his advantage to do likewise. Perhaps all this was unavoidable, considering the novelty of the problems presented, the intricate facts surrounding practically every transaction of importance, and the staggering amount of the sums involved. In any event, the attitude of both the taxpayer and the Government was in large measure responsible for much of the delay in settling cases which has occasioned so much complaint, and for the protracted litigation which we have come to associate with the income tax law, thus depriving this very sound method of raising revenue of the two essential qualities of a sound tax, namely, certainty and promptness.

Moreover, there grew up the strange fiction that questions which by their nature are not susceptible of mathematical or logical determination could be settled with mathematical accuracy and pure logic—leaving no room for the exercise of judgment. Attempts were made to determine such questions as the valuation of natural resources, the valuation of intangibles, the amortization of war facilities, and the computation of depreciation by the use of formulas and with mathematical accuracy. There persisted, and persists to-day, the belief that the determination of a tax liability can be determined in each case with precision and exactness, and if the bureau has any doubt as to its ability to reach this ideal, it should let the Board of Tax Appeals or the courts attempt it.

Now, the truth is that many questions can not be solved with exact precision, and sound policy demands that they should be disposed of by administrative action on the basis of the best judgment of competent officials. It is true, of course, that important questions of law must be left to the courts for determination, but in so far as the great mass of problems that arise are concerned, we can not hope to settle them by a series of legal decisions. Experience has shown that conditions are so varied, complex, and changing that hardly a day goes by without developing some new problem only remotely related to those already decided. A final court decision five years from to-day is of no help in reaching present-day determinations.

But, leaving aside all argument and theory, here are some facts which indicate clearly enough the danger which threatens the income tax in this country, a danger which no true friend of the system can afford to minimize. After a strenuous and successful effort to bring the work of the Bureau of Internal Revenue to a current basis, after disposing of an accumulation of 3,000,000 cases, in accordance with the old strict method, we found ourselves faced with over 22,000 cases, involving over $700,000,000, pending before the Board of Tax Appeals—five years' work, without taking into consideration new cases.

The clean-up in the bureau was apparently not all that it appeared to be. Difficult cases were evidently being disposed of by driving the taxpayer to the board, there to wait in patience and uncertainty. What both the taxpayer and the Government want is to have the case settled and closed, not simply transferred from the Bureau of Internal Revenue to the Board of Tax Appeals. Obviously litigation is not the key to the successful administration of a tax law which each year reaches over 2,800,000 persons and produces annually over $2,000,000,000. Moreover, we found that the Government was successful in sustaining only about 50 per cent of the assessments appealed to the board. What did this show? It showed clearly enough that the administrative officers were failing to assume the responsibility which was theirs. The taxpayer was entitled to many more decisions in his favor than they were making. The trouble was not, as has been suggested, excessive use of discretion on the part of administrative officers, but a failure to exercise courageously their own judgment and to dispose of these cases without the necessity of court action.

To allow such a condition to continue and grow worse was to subject the income tax law to such a storm of just criticism as would inevitably bring it into disrepute. Accordingly, with the war years pretty well back of us, with every prospect that we had reached a period of stability where the law could be considered as in more or less permanent form, we determined to return to sound tax principles and to treat the collection of an income tax as primarily an administrative rather than a legal problem. The ideal we are aiming at is to have cases closed fairly, promptly, and finally. We want to get away from the old spirit of claiming everything for the Government and letting the taxpayer protect himself by litigation. We want the taxpayer to meet us half way in a similar spirit of fairness and with an appreciation that litigation, both for himself and the Government, is the most unsatisfactory and expensive method of determining his tax liability. All we want of him is what, under the law, he owes the Government. As a plain matter of common sense, in the long run, how is that amount more likely to be determined accurately and equitably? By mutual fairness, frankness, and full disclosure at the start, or by suspicion, secrecy, distrust, and arbitrariness, ending in litigation? Always remember that in the field of taxation promptness and certainty are frequently infinitely more important than meticulous accuracy.

Our immediate problem was to relieve the Board of Tax Appeals, which was in serious danger of breaking down. In the summer of 1927 the so-called special advisory committee was created to apply settlement methods not only to pending appeals but to cases in which a 60-day letter had been sent out. The committee consists of 14 members, and a number of conferees both in Washington and the field. These conferees are carefully chosen and trained. They confer with the taxpayer and attempt primarily to settle cases where facts are in dispute. The work accomplished during the course of the last year has demonstrated the soundness and value of such a method. In that period the committee has considered 5,748 appealed cases and 2,777 cases about to be appealed. Of the appeals 3,288 and of the 60-day letter cases 2,088 have been recommended for settlement. The combined cases proposed for settlement resulted in additional assessments totaling almost $37,000,000.

The success of this committee was such that early last year plans were perfected for the creation of a similar agency in the general counsel's office to attempt similar settlement work in cases involving primarily questions of law and mixed questions of law and fact. Many cases involved a number of issues, each of which is a fairly close question of law without procedure and not of general importance. On some of these questions the bureau may profitably yield in exchange for similar concessions by the taxpayer. It is, in a word, the introduction into the realm of tax administration of a businesslike method for adjusting disputes. Litigation is proving expensive and, on the average, unprofitable both to the taxpayer and to the Government. Settlement methods serve to keep the tax problem on an administrative basis, where it belongs, to reach results promptly, with benefit to the Government and the taxpayer, and in the long run to produce more revenue. These two agencies, no matter how effective they may prove to be, are necessarily limited in the scope of their activities, but the success of their efforts, the educational work which they are satisfactorily contributing by bringing the conferees and auditors into direct contact with them, the exchange of auditors, meetings for general discussion and the reading of the committee's recommendations in specific cases, are all contributing to the introduction of a new point of view and a new method of approach to the solution of their problem in the bureau itself.

If litigation is to be avoided, if tax cases are to be settled with promptness and certainty, the ultimate responsibility must definitely rest on the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Its employees must recognize that responsibility and be willing to assume it, and they must receive the whole-hearted support and encouragement of those at the top. There need be no fear of laxity, carelessness, or failure to protect the interests of the Government. We are proceeding cautiously, slowly, and with adequate checks and review in all cases. The bureau is at least as well equipped as the courts to reach sound determinations.

I do not want to convey the impression that what we are undertaking is something revoluntionary. We are not compromising determined or admitted tax liabilities of solvent taxpayers. We are applying common sense to their determination. Once determined, every penny must be paid. We are simply seeking to establish the administration of the income tax on the very definite basis on which it should have rested from the start, on the very basis on which every tax which has ever been imposed or collected in this or any other modern country has rested. Nor do I want to raise your expectations too high. Progress must necessarily be slow. An attitude of mind which has existed for 10 years both on the part of the taxpayers and of Government officials can not be changed overnight. But we believe we have made a good start in bringing about a general reform in the field of Federal taxation. We can not succeed without public support. That support will be lacking without a full understanding of what we seek to accomplish. I know of no group of men that can be more helpful than you gentlemen in promoting that understanding, and in thanking you for your patience and courtesy this evening, I appeal most earnestly for your whole-hearted assistance and support.

WHY REFUNDS?

An interview with Hon. Henry Herrick Bond, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury

In an interview to-day, Henry Herrick Bond, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, explained in detail why refunds of taxes are made. A summary of his statements follows:

"Attention has been focused recently upon the refunding of Federal taxes. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, there were about 168,000 refunds of internal revenue taxes, principally income taxes, which ranged in amounts from 1 cent to $3,600,000. The refunds totaled $142,393,567.17, so it will be seen that the average amount was approximately $8,500. For the current fiscal year $130,000,000 was originally appropriated for this purpose and Congress has now been asked for an additional $75,000,000.

"A very proper question is raised in the minds of the public. The public is entitled to know why taxes which have once been paid are being refunded or paid back. The answer is simple.

"The system prescribed by Congress for the collection of Federal revenues is based upon the proposition that the needs of the Government demand and justify an insistence upon immediate payment of taxes. Any dispute over the amount to be paid must not be permitted to postpone payment. It can be settled thereafter. The soundness of this long-established policy is not open to question (though it has been relaxed considerably by the creation of the Board of Tax Appeals). The conveniences of the individual must be subordinated to the public necessity. An obvious corollary requires a refund of any payment in excess of the amount finally determined to have been due.

"The principal steps in administering an income tax are not difficult to understand. A taxpayer makes his return, computes the amount he thinks is due, and pays. His return is then audited and his transactions examined. One of three results follows: (1) His return may be found correct, or (2) he may owe an additional amount, or (3) he may have paid too much. If the first, his case is considered as closed, though, of course, it may subsequently be reopened, if necessary; if the second, we proceed to collect a deficiency; and, if the third, we proceed to refund or credit against an amount owing for another year. It is rather significant that our collections of additional taxes far exceed our refunds of overpayments.

"Why should a taxpayer ever overpay his tax? Let me counter with a question: Do you understand every provision of our income tax laws? Or, assuming you are a 'superexpert,' does everyone agreed with your interpretations and applications? But you are entitled to a more specific answer. A few of the more important reasons are: Mathematical error; failure to appreciate or present important facts; ignorance of the law; inability to determine the proper interpretation of the law, because of complexities, ambiguities, or omissions; payment in accordance with Treasury regulations or interpretation subsequently reversed, either by the Treasury itself or as a result of final decisions of the Board of Tax Appeals or the courts; legislation which has retroactively reduced the tax liability; or a provision of the law is held to be unconstitutional.

"During the war years the Government was under the necessity of collecting more than $4,000,000,000 annually, under an entirely new form of tax, from taxpayers having no conception of the meaning of the law. Collections had to be made. It was at times necessary to be somewhat arbitrary in the preliminary determinations. 'Time was of the essence,' as the lawyers would say, and so the public poured into the National Treasury large amounts, the legality of which was in dispute. In part these payments were made because of the 'payment-first' principle which I have described, and in part it was due to patriotism. There was always, however, the realization that ultimately these payments would be analyzed, that correct interpretations would be applied, and that a readjustment would be made and overpayments promptly refunded.

"Who should make the final determination? Should it be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a highly important and responsible official of the Treasury, upon the advice of a corps of experts and legal counsel, or should he shirk the responsibility and force taxpayers into the courts, facing the costs and interminable delays of litigation? I am personally convinced that the determination and adjustment of tax liabilities must be primarily an administrative function. Our judicial system, sorely burdened even now with calendars crowded with cases in which taxpayers have not agreed with the Government's determination, could not possibly survive if any other course were pursued. The Board of Tax Appeals is years behind and it reviews only additional tax determinations and not refunds. I would be pleased indeed at an opportunity to present this issue more fully to the public.

"But should the commissioner hesitate and refuse to refund just because the amount is large? Most of the discussion has been occasioned, I believe, by a refund of $15,000,000 to one taxpayer. It has been frequently overlooked that this taxpayer paid over $217,000,000 and that the net amount of its taxes for the year involved is in excess of $173,000,000. Suppose we were talking in terms of thousands rather than millions; would anyone question or criticize? Should we pay interest upon an amount which a court would clearly direct us to refund? I would approve without fear any settlement clearly in the best interests of the Government. Cases of this kind are most carefully considered. The Treasury is fully appreciative of its duty as trustee for all taxpayers to guard zealously the public's interests. By far the greater amount is refunded pursuant to court decisions. I am confident that taxpayers who have obtained refunds will testify that it is no simple undertaking to convince the Treasury officials that the refund was properly allowable.

"We must not overlook the size of the job carried on by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The bureau has collected since 1917 almost $39,000,000,000, has assessed more than $4,000,000,000 of back taxes, and has refunded almost $1,000,000,000. The total refunds made during the past 12 years and 3 months ($975,012,356.33) are only approximately 24 per cent of the total amount of additional assessments and collections resulting from office audits and field investigations ($4,061,769,209.91) which have been made during the same period, and but 2.5 per cent, approximately, of the total internal-revenue receipts during the period in question ($38,715,757,522.36). It should be remembered that most of these refunds have been with respect to the excess-profits tax years 1917 to 1921, inclusive, and, therefore, refunds in future years should steadily diminish.

"Why refunds? Simply because we find we have money to which we are not entitled. We may learn this from the taxpayer himself, we may learn it from our own examination of his return, or we may be told by the authoritative voice of the court. To magnify this fact and distort it is unfair. Emphasis rather should be laid upon the creditable record of the bureau in collecting additional taxes far in excess of the amount of refunds in each year, and upon the willingness of the bureau to assume the responsibility of closing cases once and for all."

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

RELIEF OF CONTRACTORS AND SUBCONTRACTORS

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 13857 be restored to the calendar and retain its place on the calendar unprejudiced. A few moments ago I objected to the unanimous-consent request that it retain its place on the calendar. Its calendar number is 1077.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill mentioned may be restored to the calendar and retain its place on the calendar without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15968) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge authorized by act of Congress approved February 16, 1924, and amended by acts approved February 7, 1925, and March 1, 1926, to be built by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, its successors and assigns, across the Mississippi River, within or near the city limits of St. Paul, Ramsey County, and Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minn., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from February 16, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, strike out the word "and," and after the figures "1926" insert "and March 10, 1928."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate:

Last night Leesburg Post, American Legion, voted themselves unanimously in favor of 15-cruiser bill and instructed me to wire you requesting you do all in your power to get passage on this bill.

RANDOLPH F. BLACKFORD,
Adjutant.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 5229) to amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1482) thereon.

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5193) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of the State of Pennsylvania (Rept. No. 1483);

A bill (H. R. 8551) to create an additional judge in the district of South Dakota (Rept. No. 1484); and

A bill (H. R. 9200) to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York (Rept. No. 1485).

Mr. WATERMAN also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8295) for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1486) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14659) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1487) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12811) to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 5269) to amend the United States mining laws applicable to the Black Hills and Harney National Forests, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1488) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MOSES (for Mr. GOFF):

A bill (S. 5476) granting a pension to Bertha H. Barnes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5477) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Paul; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALE:

A bill (S. 5478) granting an increase of pension to Eleanor E. Gerry (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 5479) for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of certain enlisted men; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 5480) for the relief of Thomas A. Dwyer; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KEYES:

A bill (S. 5481) granting an increase of pension to Ida Emmott (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 5482) to authorize the disposition of unplatted portions of Government town sites on irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 5483) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth E. Carpenter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 5484) to authorize the President to reconsider the case of Leland C. McAuley and to reappoint him a captain in the Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 5485) to authorize a cash award to William P. Flood for beneficial suggestions resulting in improvement in naval material (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 5486) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 5487) granting a pension to Louis P. Mousseau (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5488) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out his 10-year cooperative program for the eradication, suppression, or bringing under control of predatory and other wild animals injurious to agriculture, horticulture, forestry, animal husbandry, wild game, and other interests, and for the suppression of rabies or tularemia in predatory or other wild animals, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas:

A bill (S. 5489) to create a national memorial military park at Helena, Ark.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 5490) granting an increase of pension to Clara J. Gillespie; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5491) for the relief of Annie Gaffney; to the Committee on Claims.

LOIS I. MARSHALL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1156) granting a pension to Lois I. Marshall, which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 876 OF REVISED STATUTES

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 5229) to amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 16301, the independent offices appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to the printed, as follows:

On page 39, line 6, insert the following:

"No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to maintain the sea-service bureau."

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CAPPER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for cooperative agricultural extension work from $1,300,000 to $1,580,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15386, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a brief communication from James H. Paine, a veteran Florida Democrat, giving the situation as he views it from the watchtower which he has been over 90 years building. His public spirit, patriotism, and sagacity have been long recognized, and his wise counsel always welcome and regarded as important and in the highest degree helpful.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA., January 15, 1929.

DEAR SENATOR: There is every indication that a vast majority of American voters (the women nearly unanimous) favor adhesion to the peace pact without reservation or qualifications. Any expression of aggressive war upon America or on the Monroe doctrine, at least during the present century, is looked upon as utterly improbable and suicidal on the part of aggressors. In fact, another "World War" would result in world-wide and irretrievable bankruptcy financially and socially.

Another war, if it comes, will not be fought on land or water but from the air, and would be utterly destructive, relegating humanity to the dark ages, when every man's hand was against his neighbor's. "Bolshevism" in its deadliest aspects would run rampant everywhere and revolution here and elsewhere would overturn all existing safeguards of civilization. No longer can the old warlike slogans stir the masses to mutual destruction, and the war would only be engineered by professional militarists until chaos resulted. The only hope is for America to join whole-heartedly in every possible "gesture" or influence leading to peace.

Politically this course should appeal to every southern Democratic leader, for there isn't the slightest doubt it would again help to "solidify" the South; and I am convinced enough Northern and Western States would recur to the world-peace ideal of Woodrow Wilson to gain a majority in the Electoral College of 1932. Democratic Senators, if they will "keep their ears to the ground," will refuse to be dragooned by administration leaders into "pulling their chestnuts from the fire," for the masses are demanding peace and disarmament.

J. H. PAINE.

THE OKEECHOBEE DISASTER

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an article by Mr. P. S. Day, of Coral Gables, relating to the Okeechobee disaster and dealing somewhat with the problems therein involved.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE OKEECHOBEE DISASTER

About 40 miles west of Palm Beach, in the northern portion of that vast expanse of marshland known as the Everglades which spreads across southern Florida, lies Lake Okeechobee. It is a large body of water, so large that a person out in the middle of it in a launch is out of sight of land. Its normal area is about 730 square miles but its banks are so low and flat that the fluctuation of a few feet in the water level will vary the area by more than a hundred square miles.

Around its shores, particularly on the southern side, are rich black lands of extraordinary fertility. Like all the rest of the Everglades they are muck lands consisting of a thick layer of from 6 to 12 feet of a black friable soil over an underlying rock formation. While there are millions of acres of Everglades muck, the peculiar composition of most of it offers some difficulties to its agricultural use, and the experimental stage has not been passed. But here on the south shore of Lake Okeechobee the muck is tempered with the alluvial deposit of the lake, which for thousands of years before the advent of settlers and the building of dikes overflowed in the annual rainy season spreading out freely over the glades. The result is a soil of well-nigh perfect natural proportions which without artificial fertilization is highly adapted to the raising of vegetables and which will produce one swift crop after another when the principal trucking areas of the country are not in production.

In addition to the superior advantages of the soil, it is claimed that the large body of the lake provides an effective insulation against frost. This is an enviable immunity, for few seasons pass without one or two killing frosts coming out of the north to cause widespread crop damage throughout the State.

Small wonder then that the region has attracted farmers. They have been coming into the district to settle ever since the State's drainage operations reached a point where there was no longer an annual saturation and flooding of the lands adjacent to the lake. A string of half a dozen little farming settlements grew up around the southern shore of the lake. A road along the top of the dike connected those on the southeastern side from Canal Point to South Bay and another road has been under construction across the south end of the lake to Clewiston and Moorehaven.

Canal Point is more pretentious than the rest. It lies at the junction of the Palm Beach drainage canal with the lake. The cross-State Connors Highway passes through the town. There are some substantial-looking buildings, a sugar mill, a Government experiment station, and as it is a shipping point it is quite the center of agricultural activity in the whole section.

South of Canal Point, a few miles apart, are the settlements of Pahokee, Belle Glade, Chosen, and South Bay. They are more or less alike; a few stores, filling station, perhaps a "hotel," school, and church, with small outlying homes of the farmers. The negro population normally exceeds the white, nearly all of them living in small, flimsy dwellings scattered over the large farms in groups of two or three, or sometimes a dozen or more.

In the middle of September, 1928, seasonal activity was getting under way in this section. Considerable outside colored labor had come in, for the first crop after the hot summer dormant season was being started and road work was being pushed. Times were hard, but with the planting of the fields came the perennial optimism of the farmer. Things were "looking up." And then on the 16th of the month descended calamity.

Few cataclysms of nature have cut such a long and devastating swath as the West Indian hurricane of September, 1928. Its destructive force was felt in various degrees of intensity along a path nearly 3,000 miles in length from Guadeloupe of the French Windward Isles to Atlantic City.

Originating in that cradle of such unregenerate monsters, the North Atlantic east of the Caribbean Sea, it first struck the island of Gaudeloupe, which lies 300 miles southeast of Porto Rico. A swirling tidal wave swept into the coastal towns, causing 855 deaths and untold destruction. The next day, September 13, it reached the Virgin Islands, and then Porto Rico, where with the unprecedented fury of 150 miles per hour it reduced that beautiful tropical island to a pitiable state of desolation. A half a million people were rendered destitute and 300 lives lost.

From Porto Rico the storm continued its relentless march northwestward toward the Florida coast. Apprised for days ahead of its approach shipping scuttled to safety and suffered no loss. But the communities along the east coast of Florida from Titusville to Key West could only wait for the impact wherever it might come, making what preparations could be made to withstand the shock and hoping that some beneficent deflection of nature might change its course.

On the afternoon of September 16 it struck the coast a little south of Palm Beach. On a 50-mile front it gathered human lives and habitation into its maw. The Palm Beaches estimate their loss at $50,000,000.

Still moving westward, but nearing the vertex of its parabolic path, it passed over a sparsely settled area of the Glades to the region of Lake Okeechobee. Here, in the district described above, it exacted its greatest toll—the awful total of more than 2,000 human lives. From Okeechobee it gradually bore to the north and then to the northeast as the accelerating air currents of the North Temperate Zone had their effect, and with a diminishing but still potent intensity, it swept up the Atlantic seaboard, leaving havoc in its wake.

The reason for the appalling loss of life in this limited area near Okeechobee was, of course, the sudden release of flood waters. There is nothing so destructive to human life as a swift-moving wall of flood water descending upon an inhabited district. Witness the storm tide at Guadaloupe which caused nearly three times as many deaths as in the densely populated Porto Rico, where the damage wrought was mainly from the wind and rain. From fire, earthquake, hurricane wind itself, even the flow of molten lava from a volcano in eruption, there is more chance of escape than from a 9-foot wall of inrushing water.

Moreover, in a rural area the death percentage will run considerably higher than in a city where higher and more stable structures afford some refuge. The wave that engulfed Galveston in 1900 cost 6,000 lives, a frightful figure, but in proportion to the population of the flooded area much less than in these Okeechobee towns. From Pahokee to South Bay more than half were killed. The same thing may be said of the Johnstown flood, the only other American disaster with a loss of life exceeding this one.

The great Mississippi flood of 1927 with its enormous destruction to property had a comparatively low death list of 289. That water was not storm driven. At Okeechobee the hurricane-lashed waters of the lake rose in a tremendous sheet, which not only inundated the surrounding lands but dashed to pieces nearly everything before it. And for hours the wind and waves continued to beat and destroy.

It is not understood by many why the people in the Okeechobee district did not evacuate the area, inasmuch as they received various warnings of the storm's approach. It is true that for more than 24 hours it was known that a severe storm was headed in their general direction. The first advices came on Saturday, September 15. Late that night the wind became brisk and continued all day Sunday with increasing force until the hurricane was upon them.

There is this to be said about it: Every year from June to October, hurricane warnings are issued perhaps six times along the southern coast of Florida. Nearly all of the storms curve harmlessly off to sea with only a local effect of high winds. Moreover, the actual path of the storm is not known within close limits far ahead of time, and in the last few hours communication is usually paralyzed. For instance, in this case the people in the lake section did not know on Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock that Palm Beach, 40 miles east, was at that moment bearing the full brunt of the storm. If they had known it, they would have been certain that it would strike them with hurricane force. But under the existing physical conditions there was little that they could do to escape the menace of the lake in those last few hours. There was no line of retreat for them. There was no passable road around the south end of the lake and the only road to the north was along the top of the dike. A journey over that would be fraught with danger, if not impossible, in the darkness. All that was left to them was to move toward Palm Beach over an exposed highway along the canal bank into the teeth of the storm—a most hazardous proceeding, although in the light of subsequent events it could not have been worse than to have remained.

But even if the storm struck, no one foresaw such an overwhelming catastrophe. Its center passed through Pahokee. And if its course had been, say, 15 miles farther south, the toll in the afflicted area between Pahokee and South Bay would probably have been reduced 90 per cent, at least as far as human life was concerned. The winds of a hurricane whirl in a counterclockwise direction so that the area north of the vortex received the winds successively from the northeast, east, and southeast, always blowing lakeward, while south of the center they were received from the great sweep of the lake. The left-hand rear quadrant of the storm brought the water over the dikes. Canal Point was more in the path of the storm than South Bay, but because it was always north of the center its storm tide had no such crest and the comparatively light flood damage it did suffer was from water backing up from the south.

The tragedy of September 16 on these shores makes the property damage in the track of the hurricane pale into insignificance. Those who lived through it, many of whom had members of their families literally torn from their arms and whose lives in many instances hung by a thread, have known hours of horror beyond description. The unceasing roar of the storm with its awful gusts rising to tremendous heights of intensity, each gust seeming to break something of human stability from its moorings; the constant deluge from the skies; the swift inexorable rise of all-engulfing water and blackness all around, pierced by the cries of the living going to their death; in truth, a scene which could not have been more diabolically contrived for the shattering of human fortitude.

All day Sunday, the 16th, there was a feeling of apprehension. However, some reports came in that the storm had verged to the north. As darkness came on the rain and wind increased steadily. By 7 o'clock everyone knew that the full fury of the storm was upon them. Those who could, made their way to the more substantial dwellings, the church, or schoolhouse. The ones living at greater distances out on the flats hardly knew what to do. If they started out in the direction of some refuge and the lake came over before they reached it, they would be helplessly caught by the flood. So most of them clung desperately to the little shelter that they had, holding their families together as long as they could.

Some time after 9 o'clock the lake burst over the dikes. In 20 minutes it was a raging flood 5 to 9 feet deep from Pahokee to the south end of the lake. Nearly everything was washed away in this terrible tide. The flimsy homes of the negroes were demolished; hardly a trace was left of them. Most of the more substantial homes were carried away from their foundations and with a human cargo of 25 or 30 in the loft or clinging to the rafters floated far from the original site, sometimes coming to rest in safety as much as a mile away, sometimes breaking up.

To the survivors that was an eternal night. Hundreds of them spent the long hours clinging to pieces of wreckage, many being carried so far off that they were unable to get back to the settlements for days. Toward morning the wind gradually abated, but the storm was not over until long after daylight.

The scene which the light of day revealed was one of utter desolation everywhere. The flood had reached back more than 25 miles from what had been the shore of the lake. As far as the eye could see there was nothing but water. The highest elevations, such as the roads along the dikes, were partially exposed and piled high with debris. In other places they were completely washed out and under water. The few buildings still standing, like everything else which had offered stability, were clustered with refugees. A construction barge in the canal at South Bay was a haven for over 200. A tractor in a field had served as moorings for a family of four. And on all sides floated the bodies of the victims of the deluge.

Slowly and with difficulty those who were left alive made their way through the downpour to places of safety. Most of them were either stupefied or hysterical, many of them injured and exhausted. They were in a state of extreme helplessness. Nothing could be accomplished without boats, and there were very few of them in the entire district. They had no motor transportation and were practically cut off from West Palm Beach, which was itself in dire need of assistance.

However, word of their plight reached Miami, and some time late Monday a small relief party arrived from that city with food and medical supplies. By Tuesday various agencies of relief were on the scene. A tremendous task confronted them and bad weather for several days made organization difficult. Due to continued rain the water was rising again. Motor boats and seaplanes were brought in, but systematic recovery of the dead did not get under way until Wednesday. Up to that time the care of the living taxed every resource. All refugees except the able-bodied men were removed to West Palm Beach and Miami.

As the days passed the realization came that the tragedy was much worse than at first believed. The death list rapidly mounted as the bodies continued to be found. It was not long before identification became virtually impossible and as a sanitary measure it was necessary to cremate them in piles near where they were found.

On Friday Governor Martin and members of his staff visited the afflicted territory. His inspection of the ghastly scene convinced him that the number of dead would reach 1,500. But that was before the horrible discovery at Pelican Bay. Nearly a week after the storm it was found that a negro village of 450 inhabitants at Pelican Bay (between Pahokee and Belle Glade) had been completely wiped out. They had been trapped in a veritable sluiceway formed by a dike on one side and a railway embankment on the other converging to a point on the south which formed a death pocket from which there was no escape. The water was still 5 feet deep over the whole locality.

The official death list numbered about 2,000, but six weeks after the flood they were still finding bodies. The exact number who perished will never be known, but it is believed by those who handled the work to be considerably in excess of that figure.

Nearly 80 per cent of the casualties were negroes. Very few of their dead were identified. A large number of them were transient laborers who had come into the district to work on the farms and the roads. They were scarcely known to their employers or to each other by anything more than "Jim" or "Charlie." Besides, when they got to them it was too late. If they were missing their relatives counted them as dead.

One old negro known as "Uncle Ben" at Belle Glade who lost the seven members of his family was credited with recovering 80 bodies in one day. Finally he came across the body of his youngest daughter. Kneeling before the workers he pleaded to be allowed to prepare a grave for his child and his plea was granted.

Slowly order was brought out of chaos. The Red Cross, assisted by the American Legion, Coast Guard, National Guard, State and local officials, and citizens, performed heroic service. Fortunately the country has a natural resiliency. At the time of this writing, six weeks after the hurricane, many of the acres which were submerged are in beans, and within 45 days money will begin to flow into the region. But while the productivity of the soil and the indomitable spirit of man are great restoratives, it is too much to expect that a permanent population can live and prosper under the conditions of insecurity which have existed. Two lake disasters in as many years can not be gainsaid by volumes of statistics showing the improbability of the next one. It is time to throw such hallucinations overboard and get down to the actual ways and means of removing or at least reducing the hazard.

The Okeechobee flood problem is not new. It is part of a very complicated and baffling problem which includes the drainage of the entire Everglades. This problem of drainage has been recognized for 20 years, and during that period $15,000,000 have been spent toward its solution. There have been acute political and financial ramifications. At the present time the gigantic project is but a fraction completed and the indications are that there will be a great deal more of the same before its consummation.

However, the menace of the lake during the storm season was not widely realized until the hurricane of 1926. The path of that storm whose center passed over Miami was south of the recent one and only the southwest corner of the lake was severely affected. The town of Moorehaven received the brunt of it. A storm tide swept over and through the inadequate levee, causing over 200 deaths in that little farming community.

After that came the realization that something must done. Numerous meetings were held and committees formed of State officials and interested parties. The State drainage engineer submitted a plan. An engineering board made a survey for the State and submitted recommendations which, in so far as the control of the lake was concerned, did not differ materially from those of the drainage engineer. But unfortunately in the two years that followed, little was done except to repair the existing works which had proved so woefully inadequate.

The engineers' plans called for the immediate construction of a greatly enlarged and safeguarded levee on the southeastern, southern, and southwestern shores. But these plans which were available nearly two years before the 1928 storm, and which, if carried into effect, must have gone a long way toward preventing the second tragedy, were not acted upon. The estimated cost was about a million and a half dollars.

But the control plans were not considered apart from and primary to the rest of the project, as the exigency required. Instead, the drainage problem as a whole was attacked, but the complexities involved in a $20,000,000 program were such that it never got under way.

Lake Okeechobee is the key to the drainage of the Everglades. The lake is the drainage basin for a watershed of over 4,000 square miles area lying to its north in the Florida uplands. The water is delivered into the lake by the Kissimmee River and two or three minor streams. The natural outlet for the lake, if it can be said to have one, is the broad slough, 40 miles wide and a hundred miles long, which gently slopes southward to tidewater at the extremity of the peninsula, and which is called the Everglades. The entire area is so nearly level, and the elevation of the lake above the sea is so little (about 16 feet) that no natural channels have been eroded. Consequently, in the flood season, the water from the lake and from the rainfall has simply spread out in a great sheet over the surface of the Glades, where it remained until it gradually worked its way to the southward or passed off by seepage and evaporation.

Thus the land adjacent to the south end of the lake originally, under all conditions of high water, became inundated, and for long periods of time would remain in a flooded condition. Since drainage operations have begun, the level of the lake has been somewhat reduced, but at the same time the lowering of the water table has caused a remarkable subsidence of the surrounding mucklands, in one recorded instance as much as 4.6 feet in 15 years. This has, of course, aggravated the condition which it is sought to improve.

The principal drainage works to date are six canals from the lake to the sea. All of them, except the St. Lucie, the last one built, are too long to be effective discharge outlets for the lake. The rate of fall, 2 or 3 inches to the mile, is insufficient for the necessary flow, and during the rainy season they are loaded to capacity by the run-off from the large tributary areas through which they pass.

The St. Lucie, which cuts directly east to the Atlantic, a distance of only 25 miles, is about a third as long as some of the others, and has a discharge capacity greater than all the rest combined. It is upon this waterway that the control of the lake now depends. It is contemplated to maintain the lake stage within a margin of 3 feet between elevations 14 to 17 feet above sea level, no easy task under the conditions of wet and dry seasons prevailing in Florida.

For the protection of life and property on the south shore of the lake, levees have been built from Moorehaven to Canal Point. These levees are about 5 feet above normal high-water stage and have a narrow cross section, just wide enough for a roadway along the top.

It is clear to the people of south Florida, and especially the residents within the affected area, that the entire control system must be extended and enlarged. Not only the levees but the outlet canal is insufficient. For a month or more after the September, 1928, storm the lake continued to rise with the St. Lucie Canal discharging at full capacity. Even if there had been no storm tide the level of nearly 19 feet which the lake attained was enough to cause a complete saturation and flooded condition of the adjacent territory with attendant damage to crops and property.

It is true that the rainfall in August and September, 1928, which included two storms of flood-producing character, was without precedent since records have been taken in the lake area. The enormous discharge into the lake would have taxed a system with twice the capacity. But it is for the extraordinary and unexpected that protective works must be designed if these disasters are to be prevented, and the economic practicality must be subordinated to that end.

The economic justification of spending great sums on the Everglades problem at this time has been questioned. There is no denying the fact that there is plenty of good, high, unoccupied farm land in south Florida and will be for some time whether the Glades are reclaimed or not. It lies around the rim of the great saucer which holds the Everglades. And the lowering of the whole water table, which is the result of drainage operations, has been a distinct disadvantage to these lands. It has simply meant more irrigation. So the claim has been made that the Glades should not be drained at the expense of the higher lands.

But it is largely the lateral system of drainage canals which affect the ridge land adversely and not the control features in the lake region. Moreover, the Okeechobee country is not unoccupied and undeveloped land. It is unexcelled farm land and it is populated. For these reasons it is entitled to proper safeguards of life and property. And, as in the Mississippi Valley, the land protected should not be expected to bear the entire burden of the cost of the control works. Public funds are constantly being used and legislation invoked to foster and protect industries which are, strictly speaking, uneconomical. Is the protection of life and property any less important?

FARM RELIEF

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a speech by Hon. SMITH W. BROOKHART, delivered recently before the National Republican Club of New York City, on farm relief.

There being no objection, Senator BROOKHART'S speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Some people, mainly in Wall Street, say there is no farm problem, but here are the facts:

About one-third of the American people are farmers. These farmers now own less than one-fifth of the property values of the country, and they are getting less than one-tenth of the national income.

Since the deflation of agriculture in 1920 there are about sixty billions of capital investment and about 12,000,000 workers, not counting women and children. This capital and these workers produce a gross value of about $12,000,000,000.

There are about forty billions of capital in manufacturing, or only about two-thirds as much as in agriculture; and there are fewer than 9,000,000 workers, or fewer than three-fourths as many as in agriculture; but, after deducting $16,000,000,000 for difference in raw-material costs, this smaller amount of capital in manufacturing and smaller number of workers produced a gross value of $44,000,000,000 as against $12,000,000,000 for agriculture. Since labor got only $11,000,000,000 in wages in manufacturing it is only fair to say that high wages were not the cause of this discrimination.

Valued by the same rule as the farms the railroads are less than one-third of agriculture and the number of workers about one-seventh, but they produce a gross revenue of more than half as much as the farms, and again labor gets only about one-half.

Iowa lands went down over two and a half billion dollars and railroad stocks went up more than that amount at the same time. Iowa is only typical of all the States and railroad stocks are only typical of the big stocks in general.

Recently brokers' loans have passed the six and a third billion dollar mark, or nearly one-third of the bank deposits of the Federal reserve bank members. Since 1920 these loans have scarcely been below $3,000,000,000. Until the last year this vast reserve of surplus credit was accumulated at the rate of about 4 per cent, while the farmers of the country were compelled to pay 6 to 12 per cent. Recently the demands of this speculative bubble have become so great that it has raised the rate as high as 12 per cent for call money, and it has further increased farm rates even in the Federal land bank.

A National City Bank bulletin shows that in 1925 the national banks of the country earned 8.34 per cent upon capital, surplus, and undivided profits. The National Industrial Conference Board shows that from 1920 to 1925 agriculture earned only 1.7 per cent upon its capital investment, without adequate allowance for labor or depreciation.

In 1926 the farmers of the United States sold 41,000,000 hogs. In 1928 they sold 48,000,000. They got $200,000,000 less for the 48,000,000 hogs than they got two years previously for the 41,000,000. This in spite of the fact that the foreign demand was increasing; that the number of hogs in Denmark had been decreased 10 per cent, in the United Kingdom 5 per cent, Germany 2 per cent, and in the Netherlands 20 per cent. For a whole generation farmers have been receiving less total money for a big crop than for a little one.

The public utilities as a whole are earning more than 7 per cent and the courts are allowing them that rate or higher, while agriculture gets only 1.7 per cent, and that upon an unfair bookkeeping.

Massachusetts has 3.69 per cent of the population, produces 3.92 per cent of the national wealth, but gets 5 per cent of the national income. New York has 9.83 per cent of the population, produces 9.81 per cent of the wealth, but gets 14.79 per cent of the national income. Iowa has 2.27 per cent of the population, produces 3.48 per cent of the wealth, and gets only 1.99 per cent of the national income. Again, Iowa is only typical of the agricultural States, and Massachusetts and New York are only typical of the industrial States.

According to the Manufacturers Record, the deflation policy of the Federal reserve bank reduced agricultural values by $32,000,000,000 and other business by only $18,000,000,000. This means that agriculture was deflated six times as much in proportion as other business.

Since 1920 farm lands have declined nearly $20,000,000,000, while in industrial centers real estate has advanced more than that amount.

The farmers of the United States receive about $9,000,000,000 for what they sell; but the consumers pay over $30,000,000,000 for it.

Since 1910 farm bankruptcies have increased by more than 1,000 per cent, while commercial bankruptcies remain about the same.

These facts show a national calamity for agriculture without parallel in the history of the country. It is the highest duty of the statesmanship of this time to determine the causes of this great discrimination against agriculture, and to prescribe an efficient remedy. It is the duty of the new administration to solve this question and not take up a decoy bill upon the specious plea that it has a chance and we can get nothing better. All parties have pledged agriculture equality with other business, but in spite of this pledge the farmers might as well know that they will get no adequate relief during this administration, and it is a waste of time to fight for anything but a genuine solution of the farm problem. It is worse than a waste of time, because when they finally win they will be given an inadequate bill and then blamed for its failure besides.

In presenting the causes of this great discrimination against agriculture I shall center my arguments around the fact of the total wealth production of our country and a just distribution thereof.

Since 1912 the new wealth added each year has amounted on an average to about 5½ per cent; prior to 1912 and back to the Declaration of Independence it has averaged less than 4 per cent a year. This means all the work of all the people, all the earnings of all the capital, and all unearned increment or increase in property values added to all depreciation of the dollar amounts to only 5½ per cent a year. If all the wealth production of the whole country went to capital and there was an even distribution, the return of capital would only be 5½ per cent. These are Mr. Hoover's figures, and I have with me the bulletin on which they are based.

From these facts it appears certain that there is only 5½ per cent in this American pool. If, therefore, any block of capital is able to dip from the pool more than this 5½ per cent, there will be as much less for an equal block of capital. If capital is assisted by the laws of the United States in taking more than its just share in this wealth distribution, it is the duty of Congress to correct these laws. In my judgment, nearly all of the cause of this great discrimination against agriculture is due to laws of Congress.

Let us consider the transportation act. By law it authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to work out a value for the railroads as a basis for rate making. When this value was completed it was over $7,000,000,000 more than the market value of the railroad securities at the time. The railroads of the country are collecting about $400,000,000 a year in excess rates, a large part of it, of course, from the farmers, to pay a return upon this excess capital. Besides, the subsidiary corporations of the railroads, through the excess profits they collect, are adding two or three hundred million dollars a year more to the operating expenses of the roads which must be paid in excess rates. The capitalization of unearned increment, which ought to be denied to every public utility, adds two or three hundred million dollars more. The waste of competition, on the admission of the highest railroad authorities 10 years ago, amounted to over $400,000,000.

Notwithstanding all these facts, I have never attributed over about one-tenth of the cause of the farmers' present troubles to excess railroad charges. In ordinary times I think it might be 25 per cent, but the deflation of the farmers by the Federal reserve banking system in 1920, in the gigantic figures I have shown, is the greatest cause of the farmers' troubles. His interest rate and the depletion of his capital together are, in my judgment, 65 per cent of the cause of this agricultural depression.

This leaves 25 per cent to be accounted for, and I think it is due to the tariff laws which enable the manufacturer to fix the price of his product at his factory without foreign competition and to the patent laws which enable him to fix his price without any competition, either foreign or domestic. In this way the prices the farmers must pay are fixed, while in his own production he has a surplus of about 10 per cent, on an average, which goes abroad and is sold in the competitive markets of the world. The price is fixed by that sale, and that price fixes the domestic price the same, less the freight and expense of reaching the foreign market. Agriculture is the only business that has no voice in the price which it must pay for what it needs and no voice in the price it must get for what it sells. I think this is the other 25 per cent of the cause of the farmers' troubles.

All these causes have developed under the laws of the Congress of the United States. Men will cry out against putting the Government into business and then put it in to fix both the valuation and return for the railroads. They will cry out against paternalism and then demand tariff laws and patent laws for purely paternalistic protection. They cry out against price fixing and then demand banking laws that give them a monopoly in the control of surplus credit with power to fix the interest rate, while the farmers who produce 70 per cent of their raw material must compete with all the world.

The law has created corporations without number. This is usually done by laws of the State, but the Constitution gives to Congress jurisdiction and control of interstate and foreign commerce. More than 85 per cent of the railroad transportation of the country is in interstate commerce, which indicates a like proportion of our business is interstate. These corporations are creatures of the law. They have no life and no existence except through the law. Congress by silence has turned them loose in interstate commerce as birds of prey without regulation. I am well aware that 40 per cent of them have operated at a loss since 1922 and that they are preying upon each other.

Nevertheless every corporation charter is a charter of special privilege as against the farmers of the United States and as against everybody else outside of the corporations. When any stable corporation takes more than 5½ per cent in profits upon its capital, it is practicing extortion against all other people of the country by virtue of the law.

I said 5½ per cent, but that gives to capital all the wealth production of the country, but I do not think capital is entitled to all. I think some part should go to labor, to invention, to genius, and to management. The percentage would therefore be much less than 5½ per cent.

This situation calls for an agricultural remedy by law. In fact there can be no other permanent remedy. The law must give agriculture an equal opportunity with the other industries of the country.

The most immediate demand in this remedy is the control of the farmers' surplus. This can only be done in his interest, and speedily, by a Government export corporation. It must have capital enough to bid and if necessary to buy from the farmer his surplus at the cost of production and a cooperative margin of profit. In its exportable form this surplus averages about $2,000,000,000 a year, but some of it would turn quickly. Mr. Hoover operated two such corporations during the war without a subsidy and without an equalization fee, and in the wheat corporation he turned $59,000,000 profit back to the Treasury of the United States.

Such legislation as this is opposed as class legislation in favor of the farmers, but the railroad law guaranteed to the railroads war-time profits the first six months after they were turned back, and under the law the Treasury wrote a check for $529,000,000 to make this guaranty good. Add to that the profits of the wheat corporation, which belong to the farmers, and the Treasury of the United States owes the farmers at least $600,000,000 if it is to give them an equal opportunity with the railroads. In my judgment this would run an export corporation, handling all of the exportable surplus of agriculture, more than 10 years. Some of the very best financial experts in the Senate believe it would suffice indefinitely.

This export corporation should in the beginning operate exactly as Hoover operated them during the war. The Agricultural Department should determine the average cost of production. It is doing that now, but is not allowing a sufficient depreciation nor sufficient return for the labor and management of the farms. With these items figured in, its present work would be satisfactory. If this price were bid to the farmers themselves, then they would get the benefit of it and there would be no argument with middlemen or profiteers.

The next question arises, Would there be a loss upon these operations? There was no loss during the war nor after the war, and a part of the time, especially after the war, there was more danger of loss than in ordinary peace time. On many of the products there certainly need be no loss. Cotton is the biggest item. Let us take three years ago when we had the big cotton surplus. Suppose this export corporation had been in operation then. Suppose the Department of Agriculture had ascertained the average cost of production, including a 5 per cent cooperative profit on capital and it had been 26 cents a pound. Suppose that price had been bid to the cotton farmers of the United States. It would certainly have raised the whole price level to that figure. The farmers would have received 26 cents a pound instead of 10 or 11 cents, which they did receive. This would have made great prosperity in all the Southern States. It would have been a magnificent support for prosperity in the city of New York; and would there have been any loss to the Government or this export corporation? This exportable cotton amounted to about 65 per cent of all the exportable cotton of the whole world. Anybody who has 65 per cent of the world's demand bought and paid for is in reasonable control of the world market itself. If the bank can not call his notes and the sheriff can not sell him out, he is in position to ask and to obtain his price. I have talked to many experts and all have agreed that this cotton would already have been disposed of without loss. It would be possible even to take a profit over above cost and expenses.

Wheat is the next biggest item of agricultural export. It would work out about the same way. The United States and Canada together had 55 per cent of the world's wheat production in 1925. Perhaps this year it would amount to 65 per cent. Canada already has a sufficient pool, and even the working of that pool has favorably affected the world price. If the United States would join Canada, the two together could have about as much influence upon the world market of wheat as the United States could alone on cotton. Since their interests are the same, it is perfectly easy for them to join together in this cooperative movement.

The livestock products are a harder proposition, because they must be processed to be preserved. Mr. Hoover successfully handled pork products during and after the war, and successfully maintained the price of hogs to the farmers of the United States. Accompanied with the same authority, power, and capital which he had then, he can do it in time of peace.

This is not doing by legislation any more so far as results are concerned, nor as much as the tariff laws and the patent laws have done for the protected industries. Neither is it doing any more than the banking laws have done for the banks, nor as much as the railroad laws have done for the railroads.

As a final solution of this problem it is my idea that cooperative organizations should subscribe for stock in this great export corporation upon substantially the same plan that the farmers have subscribed for cooperative stock in the Federal land bank.

The Government furnished all the money to start this land bank. As the farmers took out their loans they were required to subscribe 5 per cent of each loan in cooperative stock. Already they have subscribed and paid in more than enough to liquidate the entire advancement by the Government. That land bank is owned cooperatively to-day by the farmers of the United States, and it is the greatest land bank that has ever existed in the world. It is still under Government control, which at this time means Wall Street control, and the farmers are not getting the benefit of as low interest rates as they are entitled to get. Neither will they get their just dues until the surplus of credit of the country is taken from speculative and gambling business and turned over to legitimate business, including agriculture.

We therefore have a precedent in the law for everything that I want to do with reference to the farm problem.

In conclusion I want to say that these great cooperative organizations can not succeed and can not perform the full service they should perform to the farmers of the country until they have a cooperative credit system of their own with deposit banks, reserve banks, and all under their own control.

That the Federal reserve bank is inadequate for agriculture is now conceded in the law itself. The law has established another reserve bank. Most people do not think of it by that name, and in fact do not consider it from that standpoint. However, the intermediate credit bank is a reserve bank. The business it does is practically all reserve bank business, but it is a dehorned and denatured bank. It should be given all the power of the Federal reserve bank changed only by the requirements of cooperative banking.

Cooperative banking is the safest and the soundest in the world because it never lends money for speculative purposes. The reserve banks thus created should be permitted to organize national cooperative deposit banks to become members of the cooperative reserve. The law should also permit the little banks in the agricultural and labor sections to join this cooperative reserve bank instead of the Federal reserve bank. The United States is the only civilized country in the world that by law prohibits farmers and labor people from organizing their own savings in a cooperative system of their own under cooperative control. The farmers and laboring people have just as good a right to have a system of laws that will permit them to organize such a banking system as the commercial system has to permit them to organize a commercial banking system with its governmental reserve.

With these things done, and the proper adjustment of tariff schedules, and with a solution of the transportation problem on the lines of the Canadian National Railway, the farmers of the United States would have something like an even chance with other industries.

AMENDMENT OF THE DISTRICT CODE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2366) to amend subsection 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, relating to degree-conferring institutions, which were, on page 2, to strike out lines 15 to 18, inclusive, and insert:

2. That any such degree shall be awarded only after such quantity and quality of work shall have been completed as are usually required by reputable institutions awarding the same degree and approved by the Board of Education of the District of Columbia: Provided, That if more than one-half the requirements for any degree are earned by correspondence or extramural study such fact shall be conspicuously noted upon the diploma conferred: Provided further, That no diploma shall be issued conferring a degree in medicine or any healing art, or in law, for study pursued or work done by correspondence.

And on page 4, line 22, after the word "thereof," to insert:

And provided further, That after notice has been given as hereinabove provided and during said 30-day period or during the time said decision is under review by the Supreme Court, no diploma shall be awarded or degree conferred by the licensee.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the amendments of the House be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK BUILDING, LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 142) authorizing the erection of a Federal reserve bank building in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., which was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "owned," to insert "by said bank."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3828. An act to amend Public Law No. 254, approved June 20, 1906, known as the organic school law, so as to relieve individual members of the Board of Education of personal liability for acts of the board;

S. 4488. An act declaring the purpose of Congress in passing the act of June 2, 1924 (43 Stat. p. 253), to confer full citizenship upon the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, and further declaring that it was not the purpose of Congress in passing the act of June 4, 1924 (43 Stat. p. 376), to repeal, abridge, or modify the provisions of the former act as to the citizenship of said Indians;

S. 4712. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a right of way to the Southern Pacific Railway Co. across the Benicia Arsenal Military Reservation, Calif.;

S. 4976. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Lawrence and Randolph, State of Arkansas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Spring River at or near the town of Black Rock, Ark.;

S. 4977. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Lawrence and Randolph, State of Arkansas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Spring River at or near Imboden, Ark.;

S. 5038. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La.;

S. 5039. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at Mount Carmel, Ill.;

S. 5240. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Natchez, Miss.;

H. R. 1320. An act for the relief of James W. Pringle;

H. R. 4920. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to award a Nicaraguan campaign badge to Capt. James P. Williams, in recognition of his services to the United States in the Nicaraguan campaign of 1912 and 1913;

H. R. 15569. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to the city of New York to enter upon certain United States property for the purpose of constructing a rapid-transit railway.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that the deficiency appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] to the substitute amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the committee amendment on page 16, line 16.

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], with regard to his amendment, that after the figures "1930" he strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following, in order to meet the objections made by the Secretary of the Treasury that he has no discretion in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia; that is, to make it read:

To be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion and for the improvement of the Coast Guard and the Customs Service of the United States, for the board of patrol, and such other and any other agencies, including allocation to the Department of Justice, as in his discretion the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine to be proper.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the suggestion of the junior Senator from Tennessee. I ask permission to modify my amendment, and I ask that the clerk may read the amendment as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the amendment as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by Mr. JONES as a substitute for the committee amendment, on page 16, beginning in line 16, insert:

For increasing the enforcement force, $24,000,000, or such part thereof as the President may deem useful, to be allocated by the President, as he may see fit, to the departments or bureaus charged with the enforcement of the national prohibition act, and to remain available until June 30, 1930.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire only a moment to say that we have had before us all of last week and thus far this week the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. Usually such a bill is passed during the first few days of the session. I feel that it is necessary that debate should come to a close before very long and I expect to be able to-day to complete consideration of the bill. In fact, I shall insist that we do so. I hope it will be by agreement at an early hour in the day, but if it is not agreed upon early in the day we must remain in session until we finish the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wyoming whether it is the plan that all the general appropriation bills are to be sidetracked as soon as the deficiency appropriation bill is out of the way so that the cruiser bill may sail to a successful conclusion?

Mr. WARREN. I presume the Senator has tried to make that agreement, but I do not think it has been made.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I have not tried to make it, but I saw in the papers that the leadership on the other side of the aisle, if there is any, have agreed on that plan, and I wondered if that is to be the plan.

Mr. WARREN. I have not heard of it.

Mr. HARRISON. I could not recall an occasion where the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee permitted himself to be sidetracked in order that other legislation might be passed.

Mr. WARREN. Thanks to the Senator.

CLAIMS FOR REFUNDS OF TAXES

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] submitted to the Senate from the Committee on the Judiciary a report on the bill (S. 5319) to amend subsection 3 of section 3220 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, relating to claims for refund of taxes. In that report certain strictures were made upon a former Solicitor of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, from whom I have a telegram this morning referring to the report and making what he claims some corrections in statements contained in it. I ask that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 21, 1929.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I thought you might be interested in the following telegram which I have to-day sent Senator SMOOT:

"I am directing this telegram to you as chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate and a member of the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation for the purpose of correcting erroneous statements made in the report of the Committee on Judiciary on the bill S. 5319. The statements in the report concerning the settlement of the tax liability for 1917 of the United States Steel Corporation were given currency in yesterday's newspapers. The report states, referring to the year 1920: 'So that year we have this United States Steel Corporation case settled in the solicitor's office.'

"And the report proceeds to state that reassessments of $17,000,000 were made by the solicitor's office in the same year, after which I resigned as solicitor, and with one of my assistants 'soon after' filed a proceeding to obtain a refund of those taxes. The solicitor at that time was an officer of the Department of Justice whose duty it was to advise the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The only matters which came before the solicitor were those referred to him by the commissioner. Neither the solicitor nor his office had authority to make assessments. The steel case was never before the solicitor's office during my incumbency, nor did I even know such a case existed. No assessment or settlement of any kind was ever made by me as solicitor, nor was anything in connection with the case ever before me during my incumbency. No claims for refund were filed by me or under my supervision for the corporation until about March 10, 1926, five and one-half years after my resignation. I had never been consulted by the corporation nor had I ever represented it in any capacity until about November, 1924, more than three years after my resignation, and then only on a specific question. Furthermore, no settlement of any kind was made in the steel case for 1917 until January 3, 1929. Prior to that time the entire case was being examined and reexamined. The final revenue agents' report, covering 2,584 pages, with exhibits, was not received until about January 1, 1926. Thereafter detailed claims for refund were filed and suits to collect were instituted to protect the corporation's rights about July 3, 1928. The payments on the original return and all others were made under protest. The report further states: 'This particular case was tried by three men of the general counsel's office or the solicitor's office, Mr. Service, Mr. Cardwell, and Mr. King,' and the report proceeds to say they were in the solicitor's office when the reassessments of $17,000,000 were made in 1920. Mr. Service in 1920 was a member of the committee on appeals and review, an organization wholly independent of the solicitor's office, and he did not at any time serve under me and is not in the general counsel's office now or at the time this case was tried. Mr. Cardwell is an auditor in the Income Tax Unit, an organization wholly independent of the solicitor's office, and he never served under me and is not in the general counsel's office now or at the time this case was tried. Mr. King was not appointed until after I had resigned. The statements herein contained apply as well to Mr. Alverson and my office. I understand all the papers in the case, including petitions, refund claims, briefs, and other data, were open to and examined by representatives of the joint congressional committee for almost a month before it was formally sent to the joint committee, giving them thereby about two months to consider the matter. This statement is made so that the correct facts may be known, and there the matter stands."

WAYNE JOHNSON.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Montana if the telegram which he has just had printed in the RECORD is from Mr. Wayne Johnson?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose it is similar to the telegram I have received from him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The telegram sent to me quotes the telegram of Mr. Johnson to the Senator from Utah. I ask the especial attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] to the statements made by Mr. Johnson. I am sure that he will be very glad to correct any misstatements of fact that are made in the report as charged by Mr. Johnson.

Mr. SMOOT. I have made an analysis of the report——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to state that the Senator from Utah will find when he examines the report and the letter of Mr. Johnson that the respective statements are of fact and are contradictory of each other. The statements which are contained in the report are on the sworn evidence of Mr. Bond, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who testified in the matter, and it is those statements that Mr. Johnson questions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is mistaken, because since hearing from Mr. Johnson I have had checked up the statements to which he objects in the telegram, and I find they are statements made in the report of the committee and not in the testimony. They may have been based upon certain testimony Mr. Bond gave, but, I repeat, they are statements made in the report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah will find that the report is based upon the testimony of Mr. Johnson and Mr. Blair, and it is a question as to whether Mr. Johnson is correct about the matter or whether Mr. Blair and Mr. Bond, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, are correct about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I should like to say that inasmuch as the report consists to some extent of strictures upon the office of the solicitor while it was occupied by Mr. Johnson, certainly an opportunity ought to be given to him to be heard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely; I have no objection to that. His telegram ought to be put in the RECORD, and I suggested to the Senator from Utah a while ago that it should go into the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. The criticisms are upon actions taken a year after Mr. Johnson had resigned.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So he says in his telegram.

Mr. SMOOT. And we checked up that statement to see if it was the case.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to either of the two gentlemen being heard as to facts and dates.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the granting of permits to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect in March, 1929, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 343) authorizing an extension of time within which suits may be instituted on behalf of the Cherokee Indians, the Seminole Indians, the Creek Indians, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CLAIMS OF GRAIN ELEVATORS AND FIRMS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) authorizing the President to ascertain, adjust, and pay certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920, as per a certain contract authorized by the President, which were, in the last two lines of the preamble, to strike out "and are now justly due said claimants"; and to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to ascertain the amount due on said claims, if any, and he is further authorized to settle and adjust said claims, and to certify same to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to the several persons entitled thereto, as their respective interests may appear together with the reasonable and necessary expenses incident to the administration of this resolution, out of any funds now in the hands of the United States Grain Corporation, and belonging to the United States, or out of the funds in the United States Treasury, not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That attorneys' fees shall not exceed 15 per cent of the amount recovered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 7028. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and Utah with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado, Green, Bear or Yampa, the White, San Juan, and Dolores Rivers, and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], as modified, to the substitute amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the committee amendment on page 16, line 16.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss the merits or demerits of prohibition, for, if I rightly interpret the sentiment of the country, the people, the average citizens, do not care to hear discussion upon the merits or demerits of national prohibition. Indeed, where two or three American citizens gather themselves together the question of national prohibition is not infrequently under discussion, and it comes down finally, as it comes in this body, to the assertion on the one side and the positive denial on the other that the prohibition law can not be enforced. What the American people want with reference to national prohibition is action by the Government looking to its enforcement. Obviously we have reached a point in our arguments here and in the country where the answer, the decision, can only be predicated upon action by the Government to enforce the prohibition law.

What does it profit us here to enter into long discussions of this question when at last we wind up always with the assertion by those who oppose the law that the law is incapable of enforcement and with the counter assertion on the part of those who favor it that the law can be enforced. Manifestly nothing remains but an honest effort to enforce the law. So, Mr. President, when the Commissioner of Prohibition, Doctor Doran, suggested in a statement made before the House committee, which is free from any suspicion of afterthought or deliberation, that it would take $300,000,000 adequately to enforce the law in the United States, it seems to me that an amendment to some appropriate appropriation bill increasing the amount now appropriated for the enforcement of the law, which for direct enforcement is only $13,500,000 per annum, as I recollect, is timely.

It seems to me to be most unfortunate there should be in any quarter the charge of partisanship brought against any Senator who dares to offer an amendment, for he has taken the only logical course, the only course that can finally settle this question as the average American citizen wishes to see it settled.

There is much in the suggestion of Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, that we ought not to appropriate as much as $25,000,000 to be expended in his uncontrolled discretion and to be allocated between different services having to do with the enforcement of prohibition as this one official might see fit to allocate it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt my colleague?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to say that my amendment has been modified so as to meet the objections of the Secretary of the Treasury so far as the allocation of the fund is concerned.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment as modified leaves it to the President to expend whatever amount of the total appropriation he may deem to be necessary, and no more.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the effect of my colleague's amendment, but what I was saying, Mr. President, was that there is some force in Mr. Mellon's suggestion and some force in his criticism. But we are faced by a condition. The Prohibition Commissioner has submitted his request for an appropriation of thirteen and one-half million dollars for the direct enforcement of the law. Some three or four million dollars of that is to be expended for overhead, leaving something like eight or nine million dollars for all of the field forces. Then he follows that by the statement which, as I have said, is free from any suspicion of deliberation or afterthought, that the enormous sum of $300,000,000 will be necessary to enforce the law if the Federal Government is to do the policing of the country. Therefore the suggestion that there should be an increased appropriation ought not to subject the Senator suggesting it to any charge of partisanship.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator is aware, of course, that the States of the Union at the present time are not willing to contribute more in the aggregate than the sum of $700,000 toward prohibition enforcement?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am not discussing the obligations of the States; I do not wish to be drawn into that field. Granted that Mr. Mellon's criticism is in a sense just and sound, since the Prohibition Commissioner himself has not and the Secretary of the Treasury himself has not allocated and asked for a reasonable and adequate sum for the enforcement of the law, what is the Senate to do but to act as it is now attempting to act and to appropriate a sum which, in its judgment, is at least adequate, as my colleague has done in his amendment.

There are obvious objections to placing in the hands of any officer of the Government the allocation and expenditure of so large a sum, particularly the allocation of that sum to departments over which he has no jurisdiction directly to preside, but we simply find ourselves faced by a condition, and that condition I have briefly brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a precedent for such action even at that, for I remember that two or three years ago Congress appropriated something like $100,000,000 at one time and has since appropriated perhaps several hundred million dollars more, or will do so, and turned it over to the Secretary of the Treasury not only for the purpose of erecting buildings throughout the country for his own department but for other departments of the Government, and, as I recall, I heard no objection then that the erection of such buildings was to be put in charge of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COPELAND. And he was to decide where they were to be located.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. He was to decide where the buildings were to be erected; he was given virtually absolute control of that enormous appropriation, several times larger than the one which is now proposed, the discretion as to which, he says, it is unwise to give him.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it is quite true that we did leave the discretion in the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General in connection with the expenditure of a much larger sum of money than is here proposed to be appropriated, and we left to them the discretion of selecting the sites and of approving plans and of making the several investments in public buildings throughout the country. However, I do not believe that that was a wise policy, and for that reason I am saying that I think there is something in Mr. Mellon's suggestion; but the suggestion ought not, in my judgment, to control the Senate in the circumstances in which it finds itself at this time with reference to this appropriation.

Conceding the full force of his objection, in the circumstances which we are called upon to act it seems to me that we should appropriate an adequate sum of money and call upon the Government to make an honest effort to enforce prohibition in this country.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator uses the term "make an honest effort." I think the Senator means an "effective" effort.

Mr. GEORGE. I will qualify the expression in that way, if the Senator desires me to do so.

Mr. REED of Missouri. An "honest" effort would seem to imply than an honest effort has not been made, and if it has not been made, then certainly the same officer is not to be trusted to carry it out.

Mr. GEORGE. I will qualify my statement in the way the Senator from Missouri has suggested.

Mr. President, we have recently passed through a campaign in this country. During that campaign those who supported Mr. Mellon were quick to say in almost every State that there had been an effective enforcement of the prohibition laws, the meager sum appropriated by the Congress of the United States being considered. Whatever other issues there may have been, and however greatly other issues may have influenced the result of the election, I have not the slightest doubt that this one question of national prohibition was itself sufficient, and in 1932 will be sufficient, to hold the balance of power between the political parties in this country, conceding that they are in any sense equally balanced when the issue is joined.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to yield; but will the Senator let me make my statement?

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, certainly; if the Senator does not want to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I therefore think, Mr. President, that the country does not want this question made a partisan issue; that it does not wish it made a political issue between the parties; that the American people want to see the efficient, the effective, enforcement of the law; and I think we have reached a point where nothing but a bona fide effort to enforce it, and to enforce it to the limit, will answer the arguments advanced upon the one side and met by as positive denial on the other side. It has come down, not to a question of logic, not to a question of speculation, but it has come down to a question of fact.

Why should not our Republican friends be willing to vote the appropriation? Senators have called attention to the fact that we did not hesitate to appropriate more than a hundred million dollars, leaving to the discretion of this very Secretary of the Treasury the allocation of that sum of money between all of those places in this country that desired customhouses, court buildings, and post offices. We abdicated, so to speak, our function in that particular instance. Why should we not leave to him the allocation and expenditure of one-quarter or less than one-quarter of that sum of money in an effort effectively to enforce national prohibition?

The time for argument is at an end. The American people do not want this question made a party or partisan question. I have never, in anything I have done or said, undertaken to make it a partisan issue or question. There are proportionately as many voters in the one party as in the other who are favorable to the enforcement of this law. I think that we ought to disregard the suggestion made by Mr. Mellon; that we ought not to be disturbed because of the conflicting views of dry leaders outside of this body; that we ought to face this problem, meet this problem, and solve it in the only way in which we can solve it—by making an adequate appropriation.

Mr. President, it would be entirely profitless to inquire how or in what manner the enforcement of prohibition may be improved. It is useless, it seems to me, to talk about diplomatic whisky in Washington. That particular factor may enter into the enforcement of prohibition locally. It is utterly impracticable, it seems to me, and all but useless, to talk about the proper functions of the General Government as distinguished from the proper functions of the State government. Every man must admit that if this law is to be adequately enforced there must be an adequate number of enforcement officers; and, moreover, there must be an improvement in the character of the enforcement officers. In other words, whatever may be the proper function of the General Government and the proper function of the State governments, so far as the eighteenth amendment and the national prohibition act are concerned, and whatever sugegstion may be made that may be helpful to the enforcement, the law never can be enforced until we have an adequate personnel, and a high character in that personnel; and we can not get it on an appropriation of eight or nine million dollars for a country so large as ours, with 118,000,000 people.

We might as well face the issue squarely. It will take at least the amount that is suggested in this amendment, plus the amount now regularly appropriated for this service. I am speaking of the appropriation for the direct enforcement, and not those appropriations for other departments of the Government that also have to do with the enforcement of the law. If we are to enforce the law the appropriation must be increased. As I see it, there can be no embarrassment to the incoming President, because this appropriation must be expended, if not entirely, almost entirely during his administration. As I see it also, the investigation which he proposes to carry on will not be in the slightest degree retarded by this appropriation. I am glad that the incoming President has assumed the burden and taken the responsibility for that investigation—an investigation which he promised during the campaign. I think he should have it, and I think he should have it without let or hindrance upon the part of the Congress; but I do not think this appropriation will or can embarrass him. Moreover, Mr. President, if the appropriation is made, and, in the light of the investigation, when made, can not be judiciously expended, it still lies in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to return to the Treasury—which in this instance would be a mere matter of bookkeeping—the unused portion of this fund.

That, Mr. President, is not an unheard-of procedure upon the part of the Treasury Department. My information is, though I do not speak advisedly, that even in the last fiscal year a portion of the appropriation made for the enforcement of national prohibition was not expended for that purpose, but, being unexpended, was properly returned to the Treasury.

So if the whole sum is not expended and can not be wisely and judiciously expended by the Secretary of the Treasury, he has the precedent in his own office of disposing of the unused portion of the fund. He has the precedent in his own office of making allocations of a sum more than four times the size of the proposed appropriation of $25,000,000; and therefore there is nothing embarrassing, and I presume there will be no criticism aimed at his allocation and use of this fund.

It seems to me to be obvious that the prohibition law can not be enforced unless and until we have an adequate personnel and until the character of that personnel is such as to commend itself, as far as possible, to the good judgment of the people of the country.

It is not at all surprising that there have been abuses and that corruption has been found in the prohibition forces. When the temptation is considered, when the possibility of earning vast sums of money by an underpaid personnel is taken into consideration, there can not be the slightest surprise upon the part of anyone that corrupt conditions have from time to time appeared.

We differ here in our judgments on the simple question of whether or not prohibition is being enforced, and each man views it very much according to his own environment. In some cities it must be admitted, as my colleague has said, the enforcement of prohibition is a farce. In other cities and in other parts of the country it can not be truthfully said that the enforcement of prohibition is a farce. We are presented with numerous statistics, large numbers of arrests for violations of the prohibition law. We leave out of sight altogether the high visibility of crime, particularly this particular offense against the statutes of the United States and of most of the States. We leave out of consideration the many, many years of campaigning, of speaking, of publicity turned in the direction of violations of the prohibition statutes. Those statistics do not dismay me, and they seem to me to have but very little bearing upon the general question now before the Senate; but if they serve any purpose, they serve the purpose which in the beginning I tried to make plain, and that is that you can answer this question, whether you be dripping wet or whether you be dry, in only one way, and that is by making every possible effort to enforce the prohibition law effectively.

I think the prohibition law ought to be enforced. I believe it can be enforced. I do not doubt that it can be enforced. It can not be enforced, however, if it is made a partisan issue; but it can be enforced if the Government of the United States, with the support of the men and women who believe that it is enforcible, believe in its wisdom, in both and in all parties, say that we will not make it a partisan issue, but we will see to its enforcement.

I do not care to indulge in any criticisms of Mr. Mellon. I do not care to repeat anything that has been from time to time said concerning Mr. Mellon. I have at least sufficient faith in Mr. Mellon to say that if he is intrusted with a large sum for the enforcement of the law, he will make more progress than has been made during the last few years in the enforcement of the law. He will at least demonstrate what we must ultimately know, whether this law can be enforced save by a President and by enforcement officers who believe in it from top to bottom. He will at least demonstrate that there must be an adequate number of enforcement officers, and that the funds must be sufficient to get the highest character obtainable for this work in the prohibition force.
